A mysterious voice synchronized in the Government movie. The Plow That Broke the Plains, describes portions of my home State of Montana and adjoining States as "a wasted wilderness of dust storms and disaster and broken hopes and deserted farms." That is a gross and libelous exaggeration. But in the same breath let me say that there is a possibility that we will have a "vast wilderness" on our hands in the future unless we take immediate steps to provide water to the thirsty expanses of land.

We have the finest farm land in the world. We have the most productive soil in the world. We have the greatest water resources of any country in the world. Combine our natural, God-given resources, and we shall lift this orphan industry from its neglected cradle to its rightful place among our most important industries.

We shall never forget the ringing words of Theodore Roosevelt, who in his first message to the Congress in December of 1901 said:

It is as right for the National Government to make the streams and rivers of the arid regions useful by engineering works for the storage of water as to make useful the rivers and harbors of the humid regions by engineering works of another character.

Reclamation can never be considered in the light of partisan politics. The same words, as once spoken by President Theodore Roosevelt, were repeated in substance by President Taft, President Harding, President Coolidge, President Hoover, and our great President Franklin D. Roosevelt, who said, in a letter addressed to my esteemed friend, O. S. Warden, of Great Falls, Mont., president of the National Reclamation Association:

The providing of new opportunity to make homes and gain decent livings for a large number of our farmers through irrigation of western deserts serves to increase the wealth of the Nation and to cement us economically into a perfect whole.

And in connection with our consideration of reclamation projects, we must not forget incidental benefits, including employment, flood control, improvement of domestic water supplies for urban areas, the creation of recreational centers, wildlife refugees, and hydroelectric power.

The Chamber of Commerce of the United States, in a resolution adopted at its annual convention last year, exempted irrigation and reclamation from its broadside attack on Federal expenditures and stated, "In any reckoning of national resources the water and the land hold foremost place."

The matter before the House today is clearly nonpolitical. Reclamation has the united support of virtually every organized body in our Nation. We, as Members of this House, should do all possible to further reclamation in the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL].

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Chairman, I want to discuss during the brief time allotted to me this afternoon that part of the bill which pertains to Indian affairs. When I examine the hearings I find that 758 pages of the hearings are devoted to Indian affairs and 1,150 pages to the remainder of the bill. I find that the total bill aggregates, as submitted to the House, $160,578,905, of which Indian affairs are allotted $34,777,303. I find that the Indian affairs budget has been increasing every year. There is an increase of $1,283,672 this year over the last year's bill. It is rather interesting to note that since the beginning of the Government under the Constitution, or from 1789 down to 1937, Congress has appropriated and the Government has expended $1,352,135,000 on Indian affairs.

There are 1,903,216,640 acres of land in the United States. This means that from 1789 to 1937 Congress has appropriated for Indian affairs an amount equaling 71 cents for every acre of land in the United States. When we add the Public Works Administration allotments and the 1939 and 1940 appropriations, the cost will run up to about 75 cents an acre.

I want to comment upon several items in this bill.

I find on page 197 a statement that is rather interesting. According to the statement made by Mr. Wathen, of the Indian Affairs, the total investment in irrigation projects today is in the neighborhood of $50,000,000. Mr. Wathen informs me that the total Indian irrigation projects will cost approximately $100,000,000. According to the statement in the record, the Indian Service proposes to irrigate 1,230,000 acres of land, 800,000 of which is Indian-owned land. He further informs me that two-thirds of the $100,000,000 that will be spent is for irrigation of this 800,000 acres of land owned by Indians. In other words, we are spending $67,000,-000 to irrigate these Indian-owned lands.

He further informs me that this land is owned by 20,000 Indian families, some of whom are leasing their land to the whites, so we are spending $3,300 of the taxpayers' money to irrigate and improve the farm land of each of these Indian families. This money is not reimbursable unless the Indian sells the land. If the Indian leases the land to the whites, the operating cost is taken out of the lease money and the Indian takes the balance. This is the kind of aid that is not being extended to any farmers in my district.

Now, I want to discuss another phase of the bill. I am not a member of this subcommittee and I have not had the advantage of hearing the testimony. I have been busy on another subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee and have not been able to read the record, consisting of something like 2,000 pages. On page 305 of the testimony the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Johnson] stated that there were 40,000 Navajo Indians. Mr. Beatty, of the Indian Service, agreed that statement was correct. I have in my hand another statement that is rather interesting. Two years ago I happened to run across an item in the P. W. A. part of the Interior bill which read, "Capital for the Navajo Indians, $1,049,000." I was curious as to just what that meant and obtained a statement of this expenditure, which is as follows: "Allotment for P. W. A., Navajo Agency, headquarters and administration building," $77,565; council house, $29,815; quarters, $349,900; school, $36,365; dispensary and field nurse quarters, $16,000; garage, $14,000; warehouses, $12,140; heat and power plant, $271,130; water system, $97,390; sewer system, $46,065; telephone lines, $99,460; a total of $1,049,830 for buildings for employees, and so forth, caring for 40,000 Navajo Indians.

We find that they have 1,181 employees in the Navajo Agency, or 1 employee for every 34 Indians in that tribe. I would like to have the Members of this House go back home and pick out a county in their district with a population of 40,000. Ask your board of supervisors for $1,049,000 to construct public buildings in that county. Ask them for a pay roll of 1,181 employees for all purposes in that county and see what they will say.

We have 72,767 Indian children actually going to school, at a cost of $10,602,695, or $150 per child. That includes grade schools and high schools. How many school districts are getting one-third of that amount per child in your district? Yet we are increasing these appropriations year after year

I have Indians in my district. I have a few scattered here and there. I would like to see some of this money spent in my district, where we need it badly. We do not get a dime as far as I know. I walked into an Indian home in my district a year ago. The father, mother, and grandfather died of tuberculosis. The grandmother was living in a hut infested with TB germs with two little girls. We placed the father, before he died, into a veterans' hospital and the children into the American Legion billet. In spite of all this money we are spending, I did not see one individual from the Indian Affairs Bureau come up there and do anything for these people. Yet they are spending $34,000,000, exclusive of tribal funds, on the Indians of the United States and not one dime to help these Indian people in need in my district.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGEL. I yield.

Mr. OLIVER. Would it not be pertinent at this point to inquire if we might not give the country back to the Indians?

inquire if we might not give the country back to the Indians?

Mr. ENGEL. We paid 15 cents an acre for the land we acquired in the Louisiana Purchase. We have paid 75 cents an acre for every acre of land in America to the Indians,

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, may I ask how the time stands?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma has consumed 1 hour and 35 minutes altogether. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has consumed 2 hours and 30 minutes. This includes time on yesterday and today.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. Leavy], a member of the committee.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Chairman, I rise primarily for the purpose of answering my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WHITE]. He is a member of the subcommittee that helped write this bill for Interior Department appropriations. He is a scholar, a gentleman, an able lawyer, and I am sure that the statements he made as facts were made in the belief that they were facts. If they were facts in reference to Bonneville, I would not have the temerity to stand in the Well of this House and say that the American Congress should appropriate one penny further for Bonneville; but I have come down here for the sole purpose of challenging the statements made by my colleague on the Interior Department subcommittee, because I fear he secured his facts from sources other than the record. I invite any Member of this Congress to read the record made before our committee, as found on pages 94 to 121 of the hearings. If he does so, he will find that my assertion that the gentleman from Ohio did not get his facts entirely from the record is correct

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman vield?

Mr. LEAVY. I must decline to yield, not because I am fearful of the consequences of yielding but because of the limited time at my disposal. I hope I shall be allowed additional time, as I feel that as a matter of courtesy I must permit the gentleman to interrogate me, as I have referred to him.

The facts about Bonneville are these: When Bonneville is ultimately developed—and I emphasize this particularly—it will generate 504,000 kilowatts of electrical energy. It is now developed to only 20 percent of capacity. There is outstanding a contract for the installation of 2 additional generators—that would be 4 of the 10. When these are installed it will then be developed to about 40 percent of its capacity. The problem of constructing the dam is one that is past; that of developing electricity at Bonneville is one that is past. The dam is built. Power is now being generated. Governmental policy may well be criticized and called short-sighted in installing power generators ahead of transmission lines. It is a policy that might properly and justly be criticized. There must be a set-up of distribution lines.

If the lines of Bonneville were in existence now every kilowatt of electrical energy generated there at this moment would be carried out to an anxious, willing, and waiting market. The record shows that contract applications have been made for more than 400,000 kilowatts in that region-86,000 developed there now; 104,000 additional coming in when the two other generators are installed. We cannot sell it because we have no distribution lines. But what a shortsighted policy is now being proposed. Even my good friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. Rich], member of our subcommittee. with his sound business sense, would not say that it were wise to install instrumentalities of producing electrical energy and then deny yourself the agency of carrying that energy to the waiting and willing market. Think of it; 86,000 kilowatts are now being generated, and there is only one little line owned by a private power company passing by the dam carrying 12,000 kilovolts of electricity and loaded to capacity. That is all that is being sold there because that is the only way that you can get out.

Private utility companies want to buy now 80,000 kilowatts, if they could get it.

The $13,000,000 the committee allowed, which is $1,000,000 under the Budget estimate, would go toward building the needed lines. Last year there was spent or authorized through direct appropriations and by P. W. A. and W. P. A. grants, about $14,000,000 for this purpose. Next year an additional appropriation of about $7,500,000 will be required to complete the entire system of distribution lines. Then we shall have a great distribution system reaching a radius of over 300 miles to the territory where people are anxiously | waiting for the electrical energy.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. LEAVY. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. Will it not be economy to build the line from Bonneville to connect with Grand Coulee so the Government can use this power in that construction work there?

Mr. LEAVY. Undoubtedly it would be. In this connection I may state that when the Grand Coulee comes in, power can be carried on the same line in the other direction.

Now, as to the charge that there is a duplication of lines, I again challenge the statement of my good friend the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. White] to take the map that Mr. Ross, the administrator, submitted at the hearings, and then take the plat that he and every member of the committee has which was furnished us by the committee of the utility executives, which speaks for the private power group of this country, who maintain a powerful lobby in this city headed by Mr. P. H. Gadsden. I ask that you examine both these maps impartially and fairly, and you will see there is not a single line in the States of Oregon or Washington, south of Seattle, that has the capacity to carry 110,000 volts of electricity. We must have lines that will carry 220,000 kilovolts to get this electrical energy out into the field. There is no duplication of lines. Occasionally a private utility line is crossed. These major lines would reach into the cities and towns now served by the private utilities.

No one would attempt to deny that. Private utilities are at liberty to buy 50 percent of this power generated at Bonneville outright, and they can buy it for 2 mills a kilowatt. So can a public utility, that is, a city, county, or town, or any municipal corporation. Bonneville is planning to take its energy out to the market, where they are begging for it, and sell it anywhere along the distribution lines for 2 mills a kilowatt or $17.50 per kilowatt-year. Bonneville will pay back to the Government, when the next two generators are installed, at the rate of $3,000,000 a year. When all generators are installed it will pay back at the rate of $7,500,000 a year. Could you ask for a better investment? This is better than a 10-percent gross annual return on the investment.

Let me tell the gentlemen where the real objection is here. Under the Bonneville Act and the rate set up there, for charge to the ultimate user, they say to the private utilities: "You can buy half the power generated here, if there are no public municipalities that want to buy it. We will let you have it for 2 mills a kilowatt-hour. You cannot sell it to the consumer, however, for any sum in excess of 21/2 cents a kilowatt for the first 50 and grading it on down," 2 cents for the next 150, 1 cent for the next 100, one-half cent for the next 1,700, and all excess for three-fourths of a cent per kilowatt-

That is the real objection, because in some places in that territory that God blessed with more potential hydroelectrical energy than anywhere on the face of this green earth they are paying as high as 11 cents a kilowatt-hour for their electrical energy.

Mr. CARLSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEAVY. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. CARLSON. Is it not true that under the Grand Coulee project a large portion of the electricity generated will be used to lift the water from this lake on to the land that is to be irrigated?

Mr. LEAVY. A very substantial amount of it will; yes.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEAVY. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi. Mr. RANKIN. I think the gentleman is correct, but if the power companies in that area will sell their power at the same price that the city of Eugene, Oreg., is selling it, they can buy the power at 2 mills a kilowatt-hour and make money on the investment, but they do not do that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. RANKIN. The power companies want to get this power at 2 mills a kilowatt-hour and sell it for 10 cents a kilowatt-hour, a profit of about 6,000 percent, as they used to do in the Tennessee Valley area; therefore, they do not want these lines built.

Mr. LEAVY. The gentleman is absolutely correct. Chairman, in reference to distribution lines, may I say that I have here a chart that can be obtained from the Federal Power Commission which shows every power distribution line in the Northwest territory. I particularly commend this to the attention of my good friend from Ohio [Mr. WHITE]. It will show there is not a line in existence capable of carrying Bonneville power in the amount necessary to carry it, south of Seattle.

Mr. HEALEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEAVY. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts. Mr. HEALEY. Has the gentleman figures showing the average price paid for electrical energy in the region served by these lines?

Mr. LEAVY. I could not answer that offhand. The average price in the Northwest, and in the States of Washington and Oregon, is lower possibly than the average generally in the United States except in the T. V. A. region. But this is not because of any generosity on the part of the Electric Bond & Share Co. or Stone & Webster, who dominate that field. It is because the cities of Tacoma and Seattle were wise enough 20 or 30 years ago to get their own power plants, largely through the foresight and courage of the senior Senator of the State of Washington, Homer T. Bone, and those cities furnish a cheap power, making for a general average that is low and a general consumption that is high.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEAVY. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi. Mr. RANKIN. The people of the State of Oregon and the State of Washington, on the present consumption, are being overcharged between $15,000,000 and $20,000,000 a year for electric light and power.

Mr. LEAVY. I thank the gentleman for his valuable contribution.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEAVY. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. I did not question the statement that the gentleman from Mississippi made, and I made no contentions along that line. May I ask the gentleman from Washington this question: Does he believe that when the ultimate Ross plan is completed there will be no duplication of effort? He is speaking now of the lines that exist. The point I made was in reference to duplication, based upon final completion of the Ross plan.

Mr. LEAVY. If I were required, as we sometimes compel witness to do in court, to answer categorically "yes" or "no." I would probably answer "yes," but I would want the opportunity to explain my answer. There will be instances for short distances where there will be line duplications, even under the present program, but the lines duplicated will not have the capacity to carry the load, and therefore they would be utilized and it cannot be called line duplication.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Will the gentleman tell me what the consumption of the entire Bonneville-Grand Coulee district is at the present time, the present use of power?

Mr. LEAVY. The present consumption in that region is approximately 1,600,000 kilowatts.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. My figure was correct then.

Mr. LEAVY. The gentleman was correct in about 80 percent of what he said.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. I meant to be correct in 100 percent of what I said and I think I was.

Mr. LEAVY. I appreciate that, but his source of information was wrong.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Let me make that clear, if I may. I had no source, and I do not care about any source, except the hearings held by this committee.

Mr. LEAVY. We are in accord then, insofar as we take our facts from the record of the hearings.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. What will be the total production of both Grand Coulee and Bonneville when completed?

Mr. LEAVY. Grand Coulee and Bonneville will be a quarter of a century in coming into full development. Grand Coulee itself, when it is finally developed, will be the greatest power site or the greatest power development on earth and will have a productive capacity of 1,400,000 kilowatts; but it is going to take 25 years to develop it. The present program provices only for the development of three units, most of which will be used in furthering the reclamation program. Anything additional will be readily consumed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. LEAVY. On page 116 of the report the gentleman requested permission to extend figures taken from the Federal Power Commission. These figures are illuminating. They disclose that in 16 years, from 1920 to 1937, power consumption in the Northwest, in the two States of Washington and Oregon, increased from 1,672,000,000 to 5,170,000,000 kilowatt-hours. This is a slight variation from Mr. Ross' statement about the consumption doubling in every 5-year period before the depression.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. The gentleman means the figures of the Federal Power Commission as quoted by me.

Mr. LEAVY. There is a mistake; and if the gentleman will check back, he will find that the Power Commission just used the figure 5 as the first figure, instead of 4. That is where the error occurred. This shows that in 1935, in round numbers, there were 4,000,000,000 kilowatt-hours consumed; in 1936, 4,500,000,000; and in 1937, 5,107,000,000. The figure for 1936 is in error. The correct figure is 1,000,000,000 under the figure printed in the record. The point I desire to make by that is there has been a steady upward climb in the use of power because we have no great coal deposits where we can go for our energy. The Lord gave us falling water as energy that works 24 hours a day and does not exhaust nature in the slightest. If you will give us an opportunity to make it useful, you will not only bless us but you will bless America, and, as far as a preparedness program is concerned, you will be on the soundest foundation on which you could possibly stand. [Applause.]

Mr. WHITE of Ohio and Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona rose. Mr. LEAVY. I yield to my colleague the gentleman from Ohio because I have made reference to him and have challenged his statements.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. As the gentleman recalls, Mr. Ross made a great point of what the gentleman has just been discussing—that power consumption in that area has doubled every 5½ years.

Mr. LEAVY. Before the depression.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Yes. He said under normal circumstances, and then finally he explained that was before the depression. But even so, with the correction the gentleman has made—and I accept his correction on those figures, which are not my figures but the figures of the Federal Power Commission, as being absolutely correct—does it not show that in 1930 the consumption was 3,774,000,000 kilowatt-hours, whereas in 1935 it was 4,065,000,000? Even before the depression there was no doubling of consumption in 5½-year periods, which I believe to be Mr. Ross' sincere hope but not an actual accomplishment.

Mr. LEAVY. Of course, we Democrats insist that the depression began in 1929.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Yes; I know; but the gentleman can take any 5-year period he wishes between 1920 and 1937, and he will find it does not substantiate Mr. Ross' claim.

Mr. LEAVY. I have not checked it, but I know it has gone from over 1,000,000,000 kilowatt-hours in 1920 to over 5,000,000,000 in 16 years, an increase of five times in that period.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. LEAVY. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. Of course, there has not been an increase, because they have had cheap power at only a few places out there—Seattle, Tacoma, and Eugene, Oreg.; but let me remind the gentleman from Ohio that when the T. V. A. power was turned on where I live, at Tupelo, Miss., the average domestic consumption was only 35 kilowatt-hours a month, whereas today it is 180 kilowatt-hours a month, as it will be in the gentleman's district when we get through. The commercial consumption, the consumption of the merchants, the hotel operators, the filling station operators, and so forth, has multiplied about three times. So when this power is brought down the amount now available will not equal one-third of what will be needed.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Chairman, I must decline to yield further. When I have a good case I am willing to have it questioned, because I know I can defend it on the facts, and such is the condition now.

Here we have \$53,000,000 invested in Bonneville, a magnificent structure built by the Army engineers. We have an opportunity to get that money back, as the act provides, with a payment of $3\frac{1}{2}$ -percent interest, in 40 years. Are we going to be so short-sighted as to say, "We will let you have that project there, we will let you develop the energy there, but you must wait for the private utility companies to build their lines to the point of generation and then let them continue the methods they practiced in depriving the people of power by reason of high rates"? [Applause.]

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LAMBERTSON].

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, somewhere between the pork barrel and the gravy bowl the $30,000,000 second Jefferson Memorial in St. Louis hangs by a thread.

For more than 5 years a group of St. Louis real estate promoters, traveling under the guise of a patriotic fellowship intent on doing honors to men and places already well provided for in that particular, have been trying to foist onto the United States Government a $30,000,000 second memorial to Thomas Jefferson.

This memorial, the most expensive ever presented to Congress or any other legislative body, is to occupy an alleged historic site of 37 complete city blocks and parts of 3 others lying along the western banks of the Mississippi River in the heart of downtown St. Louis. This area at one time was the principal business and commercial district of the city and as late as June 1935, was occupied by as many as 290 going concerns, 134 of whom had an incorporated capital of $12,-610,500. These firms employed more than 5,000 persons and the annual pay rolls amounted to more than $12,000,000 according to reliable estimates. This project has never received an authorization for, or an appropriation of funds by Congress. It now and always has been a political orphan, hanging by a thread somewhere between the pork barrel and the gravy bowl.

Almost everyone who has had anything to do with it has had more or less bad luck, and I predict that more bad luck and more headaches are yet in store for some people before this memorial scheme is ever brought to a conclusion.

Like skeletons in the family closet, it will pop right out in the years to come to embarrass those who have aided in many of the disgraceful and dishonorable events that have transpired in its promotion. For the benefit of the Members who are unfamiliar with the project as proposed, I have a generous supply of a pamphlet describing the project in pictures which I will be glad to distribute. The pamphlet is entitled "Public Necessity or Just Plain Pork?" After looking the booklet over, I feel sure you will have no difficulty in making up your minds as to the answer. Now this 37 blocks of valuable commercial and industrial property seems to be a strange place for businessmen or patriots to pick out to destroy and wreck in order to build a memorial But strange things have happened in the last few years as you will presently see from the facts in this strange memorial scheme.

Now, in the summer of 1933 the memorial promoters of St. Louis organized themselves into a group known as the Jefferson National Expansion Memorial Association. They began making plans to get the Government to finance the scheme. They did a lot of preliminary work, selling the hometown folks on the idea and then they sold one of their hometown Congressmen, for on January 3, 1934, at the opening of the second session of the Seventy-third Congress the gentleman from Missouri, who fought so nobly for the reorganization bill here this week, introduced a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 213)-

Authorizing an appropriation for the acquisition of a suitable site Authorizing an appropriation for the acquisition of a suitable site and the construction of a permanent memorial to the men who made possible the territorial expansion of the United States, particularly President Jefferson and his aides, who negotiated the Louisiana Purchase, and the great explorers, Lewis and Clark, and the hardy hunters, trappers, frontiersmen, and pioneers, and others who contributed to the territorial expansion and development of the United States of America.

This joint resolution was referred to the Committee on the Library. Thank God, Mr. Chairman, there were some sons of the frontiersmen and pioneers on that Library Committee, for that joint resolution never saw the light of day. It "died a bornin'."

But this was only a temporary set-back for these eager men, for they were skillful lobbyists in their own right, and on March 19, 1934, they had the same gentleman from Missouri introduce another joint resolution which provided for the establishment of a Federal Memorial Commission to consider and formulate plans for the construction on the west bank of the Mississippi River, at or near the site of old St. Louis, of a permanent memorial to all of the men mentioned in the previous resolution. But this joint resolution did not ask for an appropriation or the authorization of one.

But on the passage of this joint resolution on June 18, 1934, the gentleman from Missouri, under permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD, placed a glowing account of the project in the RECORD. But all the plans and praise that has been lavished on this scheme seems to have gone for naught as you will presently learn. In the summer of 1935 the memorial promoters, finding they were unable to privately finance a memorial, applied to the Public Works Administration for a loan and grant of $22,015,000 for the project. And while this application was pending they began a campaign of deception and misrepresentation in St. Louis in which long before there had been any action by the Federal Government they claimed the Government was to furnish $22,500,000 for the scheme if only the taxpayers of St. Louis would vote a bond issue of $7,500,000 to match the Federal money at the rate of $1 for every $3 contributed by the Government.

INTRIGUE AND DECEPTION GROW APACE

From the very outset suspicious souls doubted that with millions of people crying for bread the Federal Government would be interested in spending $22,500,000 for a memorial to Jefferson in a city where there already was one memorial not to be sneezed at as memorials go. Among the doubters were several businessmen and a former newspaper reporter. This man began a quiet fox hunt and just prior to a bondissue election, which was held in St. Louis on September 10, 1935, he found the fox. The fox was a denial by Col. Horatio Hackett that the Government had approved the project or allocated funds to it, and the information the P. W. A. examining engineers had reported-

The proposed project has social desirability but cannot be classed as a public necessity.

In the heat of this campaign of misrepresentation and deception, the bond-issue election was held as scheduled on September 10, 1935. The ghost voters of St. Louis were marshaled in full array, and after the ballot-box stuffers had gotten in their full day's work, the votes were counted and the memorial promoters won a glorious victory. But their victory was short lived. Within a few months this same suspicious newspaperman got busy and dug up evidence that the election results were made to order and mostly fraudulent in the river wards. In fact, in a subsequent investigation conducted by the principal newspapers of St. Louis-the St. Louis Star-Times and the St. Louis Post-Dispatch—it was revealed that more than 46,000 persons whose names were carried on the poll books of the city could not be found by investigators when they went to check the registrations. Two weeks after this exposé, the St. Louis Post-Dispatch in an exhaustive series of unchallenged articles presented the facts that fraud existed in each of the wards in which the bond issue carried. But even this did not disconcert or dismay the memorial schemers. A little fraud did not matter to them. Anyhow the bonds were authorized, they were finally sold under questionable circumstances, and the money paid into the Treasury of the United States contrary to law, for there at this time existed no lawful authority whereby any agent of this Government may accept, without the consent of Congress, gifts or donations in money for any purpose whatsoever.

Meanwhile, after the bond-issue election, and following the turn-down by the Public Works Administration, the mayor of St. Louis came to Washington and persuaded the President that the memorial was the real "McCoy." Anyhow he bamboozled the President into signing an Executive order allocating $6,750,000 toward the preservation of mostly nonexistent historic sites in the area first selected. On previous occasions I have told how the President was hoodwinked by this mayor from St. Louis by the name of Dickmann. He also hoodwinked the people of St. Louis on several occasions, but he is all through hoodwinking them now. For the dirt he was going to have flying on the river front in 10 days after September 10, 1935, has run into 3 years and 7 months, and not a spoonful of dirt has been moved up to this hour. But there has been a lot of dirt stirred up about certain realestate deals in St. Louis, and the Dickmann Realty Con of which the mayor is the president, has recently been suspended by the St. Louis Real Estate Exchange, and the Home Owners' Loan Corporation have done likewise by suspending the firm as brokers with them.

Besides this the city of St. Louis is now faced with a deficit for this year of more than $3,000,000. Many of the firms in the memorial area have been harassed until they either quit business or were forced to move to other locations. The once great fur trade which existed on the St. Louis river front is gone forever. So, too, seem to be the chances of ever getting an appropriation out of this or any other Congress for this useless scheme.

Now, to complete the picture, I want to account to you as best I can for what has happened to the $6,750,000 of Federal funds and the $2,250,000 of St. Louis bond-issue money that is now being sunk in the memorial.

Chronologically here is what has happened:

The $6,750,000 allocation of money appropriated by Congress for relief, work relief, and the building of useful projects was released from the Treasury on January 22, 1936, when Comptroller General McCarl countersigned a W. P. A. warrant making the $6,750,000 available to the Works Progress Administration for construction purposes when matched by the city's $2,250,000 contribution. Please notice, this fund was turned over, by the action of the Comptroller General, to the W. P. A., and also note that at present the project is being constructed by the National Park Service under authority of the Historic Sites Act of August 21, 1935. The contribution of the city of St. Louis, amounting to $2,250,000, heretofore mentioned, was not made until some time in May, when the bonds authorized in the special election were sold at a private sale only after paying a bonus of $36,000 to the purchasers, to interest them in what heretofore had been a first-class risk, based on the excellent credit and fiscal standing of the city of St. Louis.

So, by the middle of May 1936, the full amount of $9,000,-000 was available for the memorial. Then started a most unusual series of lawsuits, exposures of fraud, and corruption, through which the memorial promoters have marched from one victory to another even in the courts. Although the bond election reeked with fraud and corruption, and in spite of the fact that many persons were indicted for their part in the matter, not one person was ever found guilty, due to delays and technicalities in the Missouri laws.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Just briefly.
Mr. ZIMMERMAN. I am very much interested in the very learned discourse on St. Louis, and I am wondering if this section down there that they are cleaning up to build this memorial is the location where we had Hoovertown, where the hungry and the unemployed were kept and feddown there during the Hoover administration. Is this the same locality?

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Yes; and there are just as many hungry now, and a few more, than there were then [laughter and applause], although we have $25,000,000,000 more indebtedness. There are just as many hungry now, you know.

But the promotion was still urged forward. For the thousands to whom jobs had been promised in 10 days, the long delay seemed unusual. As the weeks ran into months and the months into years the people of St. Louis began to lose faith in the whole memorial scheme. But during all the months and years the National Park Service were quite busy surveying and resurveying the memorial area in St. Louis. From an expensive suite of offices in the business district they built up a staff of 104 persons, including many specialists. According to information contained in the Budget for 1940 I find that of the contribution made by the city less than a million dollars remains at this time and all will be used up by the end of the next fiscal year. Of the allocation made to the W. P. A. I have an intimation that all but a few thousand dollars have been disbursed.

If the fund has been disbursed, there is no record available for what purposes it was used. A significant indication that no part of the site has been acquired up to now is the statement of Secretary Ickes on February 10, 1939, that—

My idea of a memorial to Thomas Jefferson is not to see how much money can be spent for land. If those who hold title to this land believe it more valuable than the United States does there is no reason for depriving them of their privilege of their holding this vacant property and discovering if it really has that value to them when the United States does not take it.

So the memorial promoters who expected some day to unload at a profit now find themselves facing a stern and shrewd bargainer in "Honest Harold."

POINTS NOT TO BE OVERLOOKED

Aside from the fact that much of the $9,000,000 has already been spent on the project and aside from the fact that at this time it is still in the planning stage, there are certain legal difficulties which still surround the promotion.

Keeping in mind the fact the original allocation was released to the Works Progress Administration, and that the persons heretofore employed on the project are for the most part employees of the National Park Service, a regular establishment of the Government, it is extremely difficult to find authority to pay these persons salaries, either out of the fund contributed by the city of St. Louis, which no Federal officer or agency had legal authority to accept until so authorized by Congress, or from the moneys appropriated by the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935 which specifically provided that—

No part of the funds appropriated should be expended for the administrative expenses of any department, bureau, board, commission, or independent agency of the Government if such administrative expenses are ordinarily financed from annual appropriations, unless additional work is imposed by reason of this act.

Now the Historic Sites Act was passed subsequent to the relief act and consequently could have imposed no extra work on the National Park Service under the meaning of the appropriation act. With the work proceeding under the direction of the regular National Park Service men, a delicate legal question is involved as to the authority under which they are being paid. Aside from determining the legality of the expenditures already made and contemplated, there is yet to be determined the question as to the authority to proceed under the Historic Sites Act in this instance. The act itself goes only as far as to provide the authority of the National Park Service to acquire and preserve historic sites. Nowhere in the act will the authority be found to engage in the creation and construction of a site prior to preservation.

Mr. Chairman, this summer thousands of people will view with amazement the screen showing of Jesse James in Missouri. Jesse James in his far-flung operations had only a horse and a gun to work with.

He was only a piker compared with these memorial promoters in St. Louis. They had everything to work with—money, the prestige of famous names and famous men; they also had willing helpers high in public office and national affairs. Despite all of these favorable factors the very foolishness of the project has done more to cause its downfall than anything else. Perhaps in the years to come some enterprising promoter, digging into the records of the great depression years, will come across the trail of this memorial and use it for the theme of another screen thriller. The title might well be Vanishing Memorials, for I predict that when the St. Louis money is all spent in planning and the Federal funds are used up in buying at least a portion of the contemplated site, the memorial promoters will "fold their tents like the Arabs and as quietly steal away."

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Culkin].

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Rich], an able, useful Member of this House, a man who has won his spurs in the field of large and successful business, today sounded his customary note of warning that unless the Congress of the United States, that still holds the purse strings of the Nation, stops, looks, and listens, and discontinues its mad spending a debacle will come, with resulting inflation, and bring with it the end of constitutional popular government in America. I would feel myself remiss in my duty to myself and to my constituents if I did not sound a similar note. Devoted as I am to popular government and to free institutions, I fear that some of the charges now being made against the ability of popular government to remain within the realms of decent disbursement will prove themselves to have a sound foundation in fact. My belief is that unless this Congress controls its appetite and the appetite of the localities and constituencies, then, indeed, will inflation surely come, and that with inflation this Congress and constitutional government will pass from the scene here in our own America. I am not alone in that. The distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] is not alone in that. Yesterday we witnessed the visit of the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi, Senator Harrison, the chairman of the Finance Committee of the other body, carrying word to the President in the White House, if you please, and telling the President that unless relief be had from this spending orgy that popular government would be imperiled.

I say that, and I repeat the thought, and that is my theme today. Unless the Congress can control the individual appetites of its Members, or unless the individual Members control those appetites, then indeed will popular government pass from the scene, because, as Hitler and Mussolini say, popular government will have proved itself unworkable.

In my judgment the orgy of needless and unnecessary spending which is presented by this pending bill gives foundation for the charge that the dictators are making that democracies are in fact inefficient. When the historian of the future stands perhaps on the ruined arch of this building, gazing over the scene of Washington, considers the passing from existence of this great Republic, and seeks the cause for that, he will base it upon what I charge is the selfishness of localities in the matter of national disbursement. If, later, he retires to his study and pens the story of his contemplation, he will mark down as mad in the last degree, and as one of the causes of the financial debacle, the absurd policy of reclamation as it is carried on in the Department of the Interior in this Government.

Consider the facts. There are 973,000,000 acres of arable lands, watered and out under the sun, in the United States. There are under cultivation, eliminating the crop reduction under the Soil Conservation Act, only 250,000,000 acres. Here in this bill is presented a remarkable paradox of bringing into production in the Grand Coulee area 1,200,000 and perhaps 2,000,000 acres of land. At the same time the historian will observe and wonder that under the Department of Agriculture, in the fields of corn, cotton, and other types of grain, the Department is retiring some 35,000,000 acres of production so as to achieve parity prices for agriculture. May I say that I was in sympathy with that bill, and I am one of the few on the Republican side of the House who voted for it, because I believe that the farmer, selling, as he did then, largely in a foreign market and buying in a protected market, was entitled to that reimbursement. Today the farmers in the United States in every group have their backs to the wall. and yet this mighty urge on the part of the Department of the Interior, completely and deliberately at war with the Department of Agriculture in its policy of crop reduction for the purpose of gaining parity prices, is bringing land into production in excess of 3,500,000 acres. Not only committing that terrific paradox, if you please, but they will take out of the Treasury for that purpose in the long run approximately six or seven billion dollars.

This policy of reclamation as carried on decreases the value of every acre of land in the United States, whether it lies in the East, in the Middle West, or the extreme West. I am speaking here today against this policy and I am making bold to speak not only for the farmers in my own district, who protest against it, but, so far as I may, I am protesting in behalf of all farmers on the land. East and West.

Our friends from the reclamation States say it adds nothing to national production. We once had a measure of that kind put in the 1930 census bill; some distinguished Senator from the reclamation States took that item out of the census bill, the item that directed that a census be made of crops upon reclaimed lands. But I want to tell you that the old-time fallacy, the old-time fiction, that crops on reclaimed lands, public and private, only represent 1 percent of the national production is to the last degree an absurdity.

I have the 1929 table. That is the last one that is available. In that year the percentage of crops produced on reclaimed lands, with reference to the total value of the same crops for the United States, was somewhat as follows:

Cereals, including corn, rye, barley, and oats, 3 percent; other grain and seeds, including wheat, 18 percent; hay crops, 17 percent; vegetables, 13 percent; small fruits, 9 percent; orchard fruits, 37.2 percent.

So that these items are, in fact, giving the farmers of the United States in every field of production added, merciless, and killing competition.

I want to say in that connection that the wrath of the people in those reclamation districts, after the first blush of this spending is past, will fall upon the gentlemen from those districts who engineered this fallacy to legislative completion. This procedure, I repeat, is going to decrease the value of all lands under cultivation in Kansas, Iowa, Nebraska, Minnesota, and all the States intervening between there and the Atlantic coast.

May I suggest this: The textile industry is hard-pressed. The steel industry complains of its present condition. shoe industry in New England has its back to the wall. Suppose the Government, if you please, went into the steel, the textile, and the shoe industries. I wonder what would happen then. I wonder would that be a severe strain to the patriotism and loyalty of the people in those lines. Yet, under this mad urge to make two blades of grass grow where one grew before, we are bringing into production in this Grand Coulee area-at a cost, be it noted, of $394,000,000-1,200,000 acres, thus giving added competition to the farmer.

Some of you new Members probably do not know about the Grand Coulee.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Culkin] has expired.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. CULKIN. The Grand Coulee is a vast area of gloomy table lands in northern Washington. It will be otherwise described by the distinguished and able gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEAVY].

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. CULKIN. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LEAVY. I want to ask the gentleman how long it has been since he has been out over that area to which he

Mr. CULKIN. I was through there about 6 years ago. Mr. LEAVY. Did the gentleman see the Wenatchee lands lying right to the side of it, which were identical with it until they put water on it?

Mr. CULKIN. I will say to the gentleman that I have letters from farmers in the Wenatchee district telling me they are pulling their orchards, and this competition of this new land is going to destroy them. I put those letters in the RECORD and I think the gentleman has seen them.

Mr. LEAVY. I am wondering if some of those fellows might not have been city farmers from the East who did not know how to irrigate farms.

Mr. CULKIN. Well, you have had all sorts of suckers out there, I know that. [Laughter.] And you have plucked them properly. You are very efficient in plucking. [Laughter.]

Mr. LEAVY. Will the gentleman yield further? Mr. CULKIN. No; I cannot yield further at this time.

Mr. LEAVY. I may say to the gentleman from New York that we are very courteous and patient. I hope the gentleman understands that we have helped a lot of them get on their feet and they have become useful citizens. [Laughter.]

Mr. CULKIN. If the gentleman is true to type and is typical of the people of his district, there is a superb type of citizenry out there. [Applause.]

This Grand Coulee proposition involves the damming of the Columbia River with a dam a mile long and 500 feet high with the development, as the gentleman from Washington so brilliantly stated, of horsepower that I think is at least as great as that developed on both the American and Canadian side of Niagara Falls. This dam will develop at least 1,450,000 horsepower.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will pardon me in the interest of accuracy of the figures, he means kilowatt-hours. The dam will develop 2,250,000 horsepower in the next quarter of a century, or about 1,400,000 or 1,500,000

Mr. CULKIN. And so far as customers for the electricity are concerned, there is no one to sell it to except jackrabbits and coyotes. If those who settle on the land pay up under the law, they would have to pay $300 an acre for this scrub land which has a short growing season and is of very, very doubtful character

This project involves the colossal task of pumping the Columbia River up hill a distance of 360 feet, 16,000 cubic second-feet, a flow of water equal to one-third of the Niagara River, which carries all the waters of the Great Lakes, has to be pumped up over a hill 360 feet high. I do not have figures as to the number of tons of water to be pumped per day, but it runs into many millions.

At the proper time I shall offer an amendment to strike this item from the bill if I think it can wait. On the figures shown by the gentleman from Ohio they have $7,000,000 left in this pot. They can go ahead with that, take stock of themselves, and find out whether or not the country is going completely to destruction by way of the inflation route.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULKIN. I yield.

Mr. LEAVY. The gentleman suggests that it would be wise to stop all appropriations for Grand Coulee-

Mr. CULKIN. I yielded for just a question.

Mr. LEAVY. By the end of this fiscal year $96,000,000 will have been spent out there for a giant block of concrete across the river with no value whatever. Would the gentleman say we should refuse to spend the few additional millions needed to complete it?

Mr. CULKIN. Let me say to the gentleman that it will have just as much value as the Pyramids; and that is all it

Mr. LEAVY. I am afraid the gentleman is prejudiced.

Mr. CULKIN. Gentlemen will tell you that they buy much material and merchandise in the East. This, of course, is an absurd picture. The only illustration I can give is that of the merchant who stands out in front of his store handing out $10 bills to everybody conditioned only that they spend it in his store. By Saturday night he would be in the insane asylum and his attorneys would put him in bankruptcy. This is the only analogy I can give to that claim which will be advanced.

Let me say in this connection that I am making no fight on Bonneville. I congratulate the distinguished and able gentleman from Washington, of whom I am very fond, for the very brilliant and unselfish defense he made of Bonneville. I differ with my friend from Ohio in that I think Bonneville is a sound project. General Martin, who formerly served in this House, sold me on it and since then I have always been for it. I think the Bonneville item in the bill should be left intact. [Applause.] I am glad to get the approval of the gentleman from Washington on that minor point. [Laughter.]

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULKIN. I yield.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Does the gentleman believe it merits such a large amount? Does he not think it might possibly be wiser not to spend the money so fast at Bonneville?

Mr. CULKIN. I have great faith in Administrator Ross. I have heard him testify on four or five occasions, and I consider him very rational in his views. I take him out of the Lilienthal class. I think he has a constructive and sound mind on the social uses of electricity. [Applause.]

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. I do not question what the gentleman says about Mr. Ross, but I remember Ross made the statement that the depression in the country would be over if it were not for the war scare; in other words, he blamed the war scare for the depression. Remembering the difference in time between the beginning of the depression and the beginning of the war scare we see that his judgment is not substantiated in all things.

Mr. CULKIN. I thank the gentleman for his observation, but I am greatly impressed with the sanity of Mr. Ross.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. I do not disagree with the gentleman on his qualifications.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, if you want to strike a blow—and I say it with a great deal of unwillingness, because as I say, I am awfully fond of the gentleman from Washington—for what is vulgarly called a balanced Budget, this is one place that you can begin without affecting seriously the welfare either of the gentleman's district or of America. I repeat again that I trust all of us, including myself—and I am particeps criminis—will lay aside the selfishness of locality and the unreasonable demands of our own districts and stand up and be counted in the interest of a balanced Budget and the salvation of this great Republic of ours from destruction via the inflation route. [Applause.]

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. CARTER].

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, the committee has under consideration a bill making appropriations for the Interior Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940. This bill covers 140 pages and a multitude of subjects.

My good friend and colleague from the State of New York has just made another of his addresses relative to the subject of reclamation. He is a very effective and efficient Member of the House and I am happy to hear him state this afternoon that he is not opposed to all reclamation projects. He did say that we would bring too much good land use. I did not know that you could have an oversupply of good land any more than you could have an oversupply of good Congressmen. I think that good things are always sought and are necessary.

Mr. CULKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. For a brief question.

Mr. CULKIN. Does not the gentleman think good land might come too high when you do not need it?

Mr. CARTER. I am familiar with the cost in the reclamation areas. There may be isolated cases where the land has cost too much, but they are exceptions to the rule, they are very rare, and in over 99 percent of the reclamation areas the lands will pay out, or the reclamation project would not have been established.

Back in 1901 President Theodore Roosevelt, who signed the first reclamation law this Congress ever put through, made the following statement:

Reclamation and settlement of the arid lands will enrich every section of our country, just as the settlement of the Ohio and Mississippi Valleys brought prosperity to the Atlantic States.

Mr. Chairman, that statement was true then and it is true now. This Congress is going forward with a sane reclamation program in the years to come just as it has been doing in the past. [Applause.]

It is impossible for me to touch on very many of the items included in this bill, although there is one item here that was mentioned by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Colmer] which I desire to discuss. He stated that he proposes to offer an amendment striking out the appropriation having to do with the reindeer industry in Alaska, found on page 60 of the bill.

Mr. Chairman, I have given some study to this question and I concur in the conclusion reached by the gentleman from Mississippi. When the proper time comes I shall vote to strike this item from the bill. Although I am a member of the subcommittee that reported this bill, I voted against that particular item when it was pending before the subcommittee and reserved the right to oppose it on the floor of the House. I regret very deeply to find myself in opposition to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and with some of the members of the subcommittee, but I believe, upon investigation, anyone who makes a study of this reindeer question will conclude that it is a needless, useless, and wasteful expenditure of money.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. CARTER. For a brief question.

Mr. RICH. How does the gentleman think this New Deal administration can get along as Santa Claus if it does not have any reindeer? [Laughter.]

Mr. CARTER. Of course, Santa Claus and reindeer are very closely associated.

Mr. Chairman, we are asked by the terms of this bill to purchase 180,000 reindeer, which, in my opinion, are not at all needed.

What is the justification for the purchase of these reindeer? It is said to be for the benefit of the Eskimos of Alaska. A special investigating committee went to Alaska to study the reindeer question during the last summer and found that there were probably 500,000 reindeer in Alaska. This is not an exact count. It is more or less of an estimate and may be quite inaccurate. They also found that 180,000 of these reindeer were owned by what we call the white or nonnative owners and that 320,000 of them were owned by the Eskimos of Alaska. The proposal here is to purchase for the benefit of these Eskimos, who already own 320,000 reindeer, 180,000 more.

I have here a communication which I received this morning from the Interior Department estimating that the Eskimo population of Alaska is about 15,000, and of that 15,000, 14,000 own reindeer at the present time. We are in reality purchasing 180,000 reindeer for the benefit of 1,000 native, or, according to the estimate of the Interior Department given me this morning, 200 Eskimo families. That is the situation, Mr. Chairman.

May I say further that the reindeer is not a native of Alaska. It is a native of Siberia. Many years ago a missionary conceived the idea of bringing some reindeer from Siberia to Alaska, and did bring over a consignment of 12 reindeer.

Mr. COLMER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi. Mr. COLMER. As I understand, the gentleman said there would be 200 families affected by this. I understand, furthermore, it is contended by those who advocate this purchase that if we do not give the reindeer to these people they will have to be put on the W. P. A. They have not been on W. P. A. before. On that theory and on the basis of 200 families involving an expenditure of two or three million dollars, you could bring those two or three hundred families down here and put them in the Mayflower Hotel and keep them.

Mr. CARTER. I am sure the gentleman appreciates they would not be satisfied there.

Mr. COLMER. I mean if they could get by the picket

Mr. DONDERO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan. Mr. DONDERO. What is the item of expense for the 180,000 reindeer?

Mr. CARTER. The item of expense carried in this bill at the present time is something over $1,000,000.

May I say in connection with that also there will be an annual carrying charge for taking care of these reindeer. The question was asked before the committee, What is the Government of the United States going to do with the reindeer after they get them? And there was never a satisfactory answer given to the question. One man stated, we will trade them to the natives for ivory, furs, and things of that kind." Some other man's idea was that these reindeer should be given the natives. No satisfactory answer was given or explanation made as to what they were going to do with these reindeer after they were purchased.

Mr. CULKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. I yield to the gentleman from New York

Mr. CULKIN. The theory of the gentleman from Mississippi would not be tenable if these were union reindeer, because they could not live at the Mayflower.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. CARTER. I yield to the gentleman from Idaho.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Is it not a fact, due to the fishing operations and to the influx of white people to Alaska, there is a shortage of food and that the reindeer is a food animal, and the Government is trying to supply that deficiency?

Mr. CARTER. If the gentleman had been here when I started my statement he would have heard me say that there are 14,000 Eskimos up there who own 320,000 reindeer.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 addi-

Mr. CARTER. If there were any necessity for giving these Eskimos reindeer for their own use I would be for it absolutely.

Mr. HAWKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. CARTER. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. HAWKS. At the beginning of the gentleman's statement he said this bill covered a multitude of subjects. wonder if the gentleman would not like to correct the record and say it covered a multitude of sins?

Mr. CARTER. I will let the gentleman make his own speech in regard to that.

Let me say this in response to the question of the gentleman from Idaho. If anything were needed there in reference to the reindeer, it would be some direction and suggestions by those familiar with the industry to the Eskimos in regard to the care of the herds they have at the present time. That is all that is needed. The Indian Service is doing something along that line at the present time and the Interior Department is also doing something along that line at the present time. If this procedure needs to be enlarged upon, I for one will vote to provide the personnel for carrying on that work.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. CARTER. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. Who owns the reindeer they are trying to sell to the Government?

Mr. CARTER. There is a grave question as to who owns

Mr. RANKIN. Are they the same people who were trying to sell reindeer 10 or 15 years ago up there?

Mr. CARTER. Yes; some of the same people are still there.

Mr. RANKIN. Are they the same reindeer?
Mr. CARTER. I do not know that they are the same reindeer but they are descendants of those reindeer, and these people are still endeavoring to get rid of them.

Mr. Chairman, this is the situation with regard to this reindeer question. At one time it looked as if the reindeer business was going to be a very profitable business so a number of white people went to Alaska and went into that business. At the present time the prospects are not good; in fact, these businessmen are making no money. The white operators are losing money every year. Some of the larger companies have considerable investments in the business. I read in the testimony before the Committee on the Territories when the authorization bill was under consideration about a gentleman by the name of Lomen who went up to New York and, as he said in his testimony, "My brothers and I raised $1,200,000 one evening and all was expended in the development of the industry," meaning the reindeer industry in Alaska.

Of course, this is going to be a very fine thing for these men who have invested their money in the reindeer business. They are going to sell all their reindeer to one purchaser. They are going to get rid of the reindeer and get out of the business. They have raised the reindeer on the public land. They have never paid one cent of range fees all these years for ranging the deer there. According to the testimony of Mr. Lomen, when they were going in good shape they sold $100,000 worth of reindeer meat in New York in one season: but, notwithstanding that, as far as I can find through the Interior Department, they have never paid one cent of range fees. They have put their buildings, their slaughterhouses. and their warehouses on Government land, and have never paid one cent of rental for the land on which the buildings are located. I believe we have been kind and generous enough to them already. If you disagree with me and think we ought to buy them out, in addition to that, why, of course, you will have to determine that question for yourselves: but it is simply placing a burden on the taxpayers of this country for the benefit of a group of individuals who made a poor investment in Alaska.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. I yield for a brief question.

Mr. RANKIN. I just want to say to the gentleman that if the Government does buy the reindeer it would be cheaper for us to give them to the Eskimos than to try to keep them.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. CARTER. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama. Mr. PATRICK. The gentleman is a member of the committee. Was any acute need shown on the part of the Eskimos or any persons in that area for the reindeer that are demanded?

Mr. CARTER. As far as I remember, not one word of testimony was brought in by the special subcommittee that was appointed to go to Alaska and there was not one word of testimony before our committee to show there was an acute need on the part of the Eskimos for these reindeer.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman vield?

Mr. CARTER. I yield to the gentleman from Idaho.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Is it not a fact that from time to time we read accounts of distress and starvation among the Eskimo tribes inhabiting Alaska and the Arctic region?

Mr. CARTER. Yes; that is true. We also read accounts of distress and starvation right here in the States, too. I may say to the gentleman from Idaho it is true they do have epidemics of disease. I have also heard a great deal about the wolves killing the deer. I wonder if the wolves are going to cease to kill them after the reindeer are taken over by the Federal Government.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. The gentleman is concerned about the natives inhabiting this sterile country and about their maintenance since the whites have gone in and taken away their food-killing off the game and taking away the fish. Is not the gentleman concerned about doing something for their relief?

Mr. CARTER. I most certainly am. I want to see every Eskimo in Alaska have every reindeer that is necessary for his sustenance, and that can be provided without the purchase of a single one of these 180,000 reindeer.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Was the gentleman himself one of the members of the commission?

Mr. CARTER. I was not a member of the commission. I was a member of the subcommittee to whom the commission reported when it returned and made its report. May I say they made a very thorough investigation and made their report based entirely on the supposition that it was the desire of Congress to purchase these reindeer. They did not go into anything else.

The enabling bill under which they were working reads as

An act to provide subsistance for the Eskimos and other natives of Alaska by establishing for them a permanent and self-sustaining economy to encourage and develop native activity in all branches of the reindeer industry, and for other purposes.

Then the bill goes on to provide that the Secretary of the Interior may take all lawful means for purchasing reindeer there for the benefit of the natives. It does not say they must purchase these reindeer that belong to nonnative people, and I want to say further that this enabling act gives the Secretary of the Interior the authority to exercise the right of eminent domain as to those animals if they cannot agree on a price, and I may say, further that if you start in on this program, it is going to cost this Government millions and millions of dollars because there are reindeer running all over those ranges and of all the herds in Alaska at the present time, only six of them are herded and you are never going to get through counting those reindeer.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. That is just what I was going to ask the gentleman. Are they branded?

Mr. CARTER. No; not branded. Some of them are marked on the ears and some of them are not and as to many of them they are not sure about the ownership.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. I yield.

Mr. RICH. Is it not going to cost the Government another $100,000 annually to take care of them after we do purchase them?

Mr. CARTER. The testimony before my subcommittee given by the representative of the Interior Department was to the effect that the first year it would cost at least $100,000, and after that there would be a decided increase in the expenditures in attempting to take care of them.

Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of making ample provision for the Eskimos of Alaska. I am for providing them with all the reindeer they need. I am for giving them everything they need in the way of direction, aid, help, and assistance in caring for these reindeer, but I want to say to you here that it is the height of folly to go out there and purchase 180,000 reindeer belonging to 45 or 50 individuals and spend we know not how many millions of dollars.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. CARTER. And then let the Government hold the sack, and that is what we are doing here.

If we want to go out there and be kind and generous to those fellows who went into Alaska and entered this business venture and if we desire to spend the taxpayers' money in pulling them out of a hole, let us do it with our eyes open and let us not fool anybody while we are trying to do it. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, since the Interior subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee on yesterday presented the pending bill making various and sundry appropriations for the Department of the Interior, I have delayed making any general statement on the bill, waiting for Members to discuss the measure. Frankly, I have been waiting for the usual criticisms against this bill. We have had much interesting discussion on various subjects, but I may remind members of the Committee that up until this time a comparatively small part of the debate has had any reference to the Department of the Interior or the many divisions, subdivisions, agencies, and boards within that large and important department of government. Up to this time what reference has been made to the bill has been to a comparatively few items in the measure. Let me say at the outset that members of our committee do not object to criticisms against the bill, but welcome them. Constructive criticisms are always helpful and thought-provoking. I shall endeavor to be fair in any answers to the items criticized.

The subcommittee has presented the pending bill making appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, after holding hearings for more than a month, during which time the committee heard representatives from every bureau and office in the 21 major activities under the Department of the Interior. These hearings were often extremely exacting and frequently ran until late in the day, but I am pleased to say that members of the committee were in attendance most regularly and worked most faithfully. We were not always in agreement by any means, but we settled our differences usually, and I feel the bill we have presented is the best agreement we could possibly present to the House at this time.

I want to thank the majority members of the committee for their very valuable and diligent assistance, and I wish to state that each of the three minority members worked conscientiously and offered many valuable suggestions, many of which were accepted by the committee and will be found in this bill.

The committee has also heard a number of Members of Congress, and it is significant that in every instance Members of Congress appearing before the committee asked for additional appropriations for matters and projects in which they were familiar and, of course, especially interested.

I am not saying this to be in any way critical of the Members of Congress who appeared before the committee. I do not mean it in that sense. It is nevertheless true that had the committee followed the urgent demands of several splendid Members of Congress this bill would have been many millions more than it is at the present time. The fact is that a great many of these projects appeared to be worth while, and some the committee felt were exceedingly meritorious, even though there was no Budget estimate for them; but we were forced to refuse to accede to the insistent demands of Members of Congress and others because the committee was determined to stay within the Budget estimates, and I am glad to report that the Interior subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations having in charge this bill actually cut a little over 4 percent from the Budget estimates while others talked economy. [Applause.] That is a very sizable cut. considering the fact that every department, every function, every agency, every bureau, every board that appeared before us felt that the committee was treating it badly, and we were told that they were unable to function unless they got increased appropriations for the coming year.

In addition to the time spent in the hearings, it might be of interest to state that we spent approximately 2 weeks in drafting the measure which is before you. The bill consists of 140 pages, and we must consider the full facts on each item in the entire bill. The activities of the Interior Department, as you know, stretch from the Arctic Circle to the Equator, from Alaska to the Virgin Islands and the South Sea islands, and we have to deal with such matters as reindeer, about which we have heard so much on the floor this afternoon and about which we will probably hear more later on. We have to deal with Indians, public lands, including reclamation, all the national parks in the United States, the Geological Survey, the Bureau of Mines, the Office of Education, various institutions located in the District of Columbia, including the Colombia Institution for the Deaf, Howard University, St. Elizabeths Hospital, and Freedmen's Hospital. I shall not even mention them all, but will confine my remarks largely to those items that have been criticized, hoping I may be able to give you facts that will be helpful.

The Budget estimates in connection with this bill amount to $166,833,093. The amount recommended by the committee is $160,578,905. This, as I said a moment ago, is a reduction of 4 percent, or $6,254,188 below the Budget estimates.

As pointed out by the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. White], a very valuable, sincere, and hard-working member of the committee, the amount recommended is an increase over the 1939 appropriation of $14,851,000; but what the gentleman from Ohio forgot to tell you is this, that of the increase over 1939 appropriations which at first blush appears to be excessive, $13,000,000 is an increase in the amount provided for public-works projects, and only $1,851,-000 is chargeable to all of the increases in operation and maintenance for the entire Department of the Interior.

In other words, we are spending $13,000,000 more for public works this year than we did last year.

Someone has asked today about the cuts in this bill. Here are the major cuts: The major decreases in the Budget estimate are, first, the Bituminous Coal Commission, in the enormous sum of $615,000; second, the Bonneville project, Columbia River, in the State of Washington, cut $1,000,000 below Budget estimates.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. RICH. In reference to the Bituminous Coal Commission, while we struck out quite a sum from the amount, the Coal Commission has been in operation more than 2 years, and has spent more than $7,000,000, and has never accomplished anything to this date.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Of course, that is a matter of personal opinion on the part of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. May I say here that I did not vote for the Guffey coal bill. As a member of this committee, I was more or less prejudiced against it at the outset, but let us be fair and not make a statement that it has not accomplished anything.

The Coal Commission has gone a long way in endeavoring not only to stabilize the price of coal but to stabilize the entire coal industry, and there is abundant evidence that this was impossible to be done by any local or State agency; and may I further suggest the time has passed to argue with the gentleman as to whether the bill ought to have been passed in the first place. Congress has spoken through both Houses by an overwhelming majority, and to say that this Bituminous Coal Commission has done nothing is beside the issue. You might just as well say that about any other department that you might not have any particular liking for. It is so easy to charge that a certain department, agency, or official has done nothing.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. RICH. We will grant that Congress set up this Coal Commission, and we will grant that the Coal Commission spent seven and a half million dollars.

I ask you or any Member of this House to tell me one thing that the Bituminous Coal Commission has accomplished which has put the coal industry in any better position today than it was 3 years ago. The price of coal is not a bit higher and the miners are working less. What have they accomplished? I ask the gentleman to name one thing.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I endeavored a few moments ago to say that the Coal Commission had gone a long way in trying to stabilize the industry. I think even the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who apparently is bitter against the Commission, will agree that the Bituminous Coal Commission is functioning 100 percent better today than it did a year ago. It has had many obstacles to overcome.

It is pretty generally agreed that a seven-man commission was unfortunate. It was top-heavy at first. It is always more difficult for a seven-man commission to function in a satisfactory manner than a three-man commission or even a five-man commission. For the first year or year and a half the Bituminous Coal Commission had considerable trouble and difficulty, but the gentleman knows that those difficulties have, for the most part, been ironed out and that the Coal Commission is functioning today. I do not propose to argue whether or not we ought to have a Coal Commission, but the question is, Shall we make the necessary appropriations to keep the Coal Commission functioning?

Another large cut was made in the Bonneville project on the Columbia River in the State of Washington. The Bureau of Indian Affairs, about which we have heard considerable criticism by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Engel] this afternoon, took a cut of $645,350.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield to the gentleman from Washington, a member of the committee.

Mr. LEAVY. I just want to refer back for a moment to the Coal Commission and ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that after we heard the members of the Coal Commission, as this record is made, the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of the Utah Fuel Co., an independent coal and coke company, and the Liberty Fuel Co. and others, as petitioners, against the National Bituminous Coal Commission, decided January 30, 1939, the difficulties that have been confronting the Coal Commission in the matter of procedure in the administration of this law were cleared up, and that occurred subsequent to the hearings. Had we had this matter before us it perhaps would have made the difference that appears now between the Budget estimate and the committee allowance.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. There is no question but what that important decision was a very important factor. Another factor that enters into the cut, which I think I should say frankly was an unreasonable reduction is this: When the bill was under consideration, before its enactment, it was stated on many occasions that the Coal Commission would pay its own way by the 1-cent-per-ton tax levied against the industry.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 additional minutes.

We were told that the 1-cent-per-ton tax against the industry would pay the expense of the Commission without any question. The bill itself provides that we must stay within the revenues of the bill. Unfortunately for the Coal Commission, there is outstanding and uncollected approximately $1,000,000 for the past year. I think I ought to say, however, that the Coal Commission is not responsible for that. The Treasury of the United States has the responsibility of collecting, and it has failed, lacking about $600,000, to collect the amount authorized by the Budget estimate. For that reason, and that reason primarily, if not entirely, the committee felt it was obligated to cut this appropriation $615,000 below the Budget estimate and $335,000 below the appropriation for the Coal Commission last year.

So much for the Coal Commission.

With reference to the Bonneville project that has been discussed this afternoon at length, the committee found there will be approximately $3,100,000, including $2,400,000 of P. W. A. funds, which will carry over from last year's appropriation and be available for this project. Therefore we were able to make a very sizable cut of $1,000,000 on that one project. We feel that Bonneville could take a cut of $1,000,000 without slowing up the project to any unreasonable degree.

The Bureau of Indian Affairs, about which we have heard considerable criticism on the floor this afternoon, has also taken a too drastic cut. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Engel]—and I hope he will give attention if he is on the floor—in his remarks this afternoon was exceedingly critical not only of the Bureau of Indian Affairs but of this committee and the Congress in its endeavors to assist needy and, I might say, hungry Indians, dependent, helpless Indians, throughout this entire country. I have said on the floor of this House, and I want to repeat this afternoon, that I am not speaking for the Bureau of Indian Affairs. I have sometimes criticized the policy of the Bureau in the past and I reserve the right to do so in the future, as far as its policy is con-

But simply because I may not happen always to agree with some policy of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, I do not propose to unjustly criticize the entire Department and take out my spite on our less fortunate brothers-Indians throughout the United States.

As what the gentleman from Michigan terms a "glaring example" of what he considered wasteful extravagance of money by this committee, the gentleman from Michigan pointed out that the 50,000 Navajo Indians who live on the Navajo Reservation in the State of Arizona have received entirely too much consideration at the hands of this Congress in recent years. It has been pointed out that within the past few years the Navajos have received some additional hospital facilities, some additional reservation schools, and a few so-called schools to educate their children.

The gentleman from Michigan made it plain he is convinced that this Government has spent entirely too much money to educate those particular Indians out in Arizona. Remember he pointed out those rich Navajos as a glaring example. If the gentleman had taken the time to read the hearings before the committee, he would realize that these very Navajo Indians whom he holds up this afternoon as being the Indians on whom Congress has lavished money, he would find that they are actually the poorest Indians, in fact, the poorest people of any race on the face of the earth. The evidence is that in that vast, sparsely settled area where there are 50,000 Navajo Indians, the land is of such a poor type that a white man would not live on it. The whole area will not keep or maintain 5,000 white people, yet 50,000 Indians are forced to eke out a living there in-I started to say-that God-forsaken desert country.

It is true that the Government has within recent years built some additional schools and constructed some additional hospitals, and I am glad to tell you that illiteracy among those poor Indians has decreased very noticeably. I am also pleased to say that diseases of various kinds among the Indians in that particular reservation have decreased in the past 4 or 5 years. I am ashamed, however, to state to the Congress and the country that on that one reservation alone-the Navajo Reservation, that has been held up to ridicule and criticism this afternoon by the gentleman from Michigan—there are some 6,000 poor Indian children who have never had the opportunity to enter the door of a school, either public or private. Yet the committee is criticized for lavishing too much money on the Indians on the Navajo Reservation. Criticize, gentlemen, all you wish. No one objects to it. But let us be fair and reasonable about it. Certainly I shall not apologize for trying to assist those poor, helpless, and needy Indians on the Navajo or any other reservation. [Applause.]

Inasmuch as Indian education has been criticized, let me give you a few facts in connection with Indian education. You may be interested to know that there are operated in the United States under the Bureau of Indian Affairs 211 day schools, 27 boarding schools, and 19 nonreservation schools, or a total of 256 Indian schools. In the United States there are more than 200 Indian reservations where many of these schools are located. The Indian pupils in these schools, it is estimated, number over 78,000. One hundred and three schools are operated in Alaska with more than 4,000 Indian children in attendance. Despite the fact the committee has generally allowed the funds proposed by the Budget, and more than once have been criticized for increasing the Budget figure in the past, there are in excess of 7,000 Indian children throughout the United States not attending any kind of school, who do not have the same opportunity or facilities that your children and mine have. And yet we are charged with lavishly spending money on Indian education.

While making a slight reduction in the item for Indian school construction, a total of $15,000, the committee made readjustments which we believe will more adequately care for the Indian schools in the future. Let me say in this connection that representatives of the Indian Service came before our committee and said it would take approximately $10,000,-000 to construct the schools and other improvements that were vitally necessary to give the Indian children adequate school facilities and take care of other pressing building construction upon the 200 Indian reservations.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. I was quite interested in the gentleman's statement that 50,000 Navajo Indians live on this reservation, but that the land was of such character that it would take care of only 6,000 white people.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Pardon me, but I stated it would not support 5,000 white people.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. If this be so, and if there is going to be a constantly increasing number of Navajo Indians on this reservation, what is the future going to be and why are we erecting schools and such facilities?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. That is the very question I asked the officials of the Indian Service.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. What are the possibilities of transferring some of these Indians elsewhere to land of a character that would make them self-sustaining?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. That is a problem that must be solved in the future, it is inevitable.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Is the Indian Service doing anything about it?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Yes; they are doing something about it, as the hearings before our committee will disclose. In the area below Boulder Dam considerable land is proposed to be purchased for irrigation. It is excellent land and with water will produce bountifully. It is hoped that some of the younger Indians can be transferred to this and other areas. There are several other more desirable areas in the West where it is hoped the younger Indians can be transferred.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. How far away are these areas from the Navajo Reservation?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Within a few hundred miles. It will be difficult to transfer the older Indians; they will not go. It is almost impossible to induce them to leave, but many of the younger Indians are anxious to leave. In the last 50 years the number of Indians on the Navajo Reservation have increased from 8,000 to approximately 50,000. It is estimated that within the next 50 years the Navajo population will increase to 100,000 or 150,000; so it is inevitable that these Indians must be transferred to a more fertile area. But so long as they remain where they now are I submit that it is shameful not to give them adequate school and hospital facilities. I am sure the gentleman agrees with me.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Do they have to depend entirely on agriculture for an income?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Their income is not entirely agricultural. The Indians make trinkets and sell them to tourists and others. They are splendid silversmiths. They are experts at making many interesting and somewhat useful things, particularly the famous Navajo rugs.

If the gentleman had driven through that country as I did a few months ago he would have found many of those poorly clad Indian children on the verge of starvation standing at the roadside begging him to buy something from them so that they might have something to eat.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. I am wondering why the Government has not attacked this problem in a more substantial way. Why are we attacking it in this way and adding to the misery, especially in view of the tremendous increase in population?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I have wondered about that myself. I say that the Government cannot much longer fail and refuse to tackle this matter in a straightforward, humanitarian way. I have discussed this particular tribe at some length this afternoon because the gentleman from Michigan held up the Navajo Indians as a glaring example of the Congress of the United States spending too much money on Indians

Mr. Chairman, it is very easy to criticize Indians. It is especially easy to do so if you do not have any Indians in your own district or in your own State. It is very easy to vote against any kind of an Indian appropriation. I happen to know of Members of Congress who have consistently voted against any and all appropriations in years past for the Indian Service. Of course, such Members did not have any Indians in their districts. It is so easy to go back home and say, "I voted to reduce the expenses of government by voting against all appropriations for the Indian Service." But it takes a lot more courage and statesmanship to vote to help these helpless people when none of them reside in your dis-

Let me remind Members that when you vote against an appropriation for the Indian Service you are voting against hospitalizing the Indians, you are voting against treating them for trachoma, and there are more Indians suffering from trachoma today than ever before. You are voting against helping to stamp out that dreaded disease, so prevalent among Indians of all tribes, tuberculosis. We must establish additional trachoma and tubercular hospitals, especially in the West and Northwest. Simply because a majority of you do not have Indians in your own districts and States is no reason why any fair-minded man ought to vote against an appropriation for the benefit of Indians.

I want to mention, before I conclude, the very controversial reindeer topic that has been discussed so ably this afternoon by the gentleman from California [Mr. Carter], a member of the committee.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 3 additional minutes.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from California who addressed the Committee this afternoon, as well as the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Colmer], very seriously criticized the committee for including in this bill the so-called reindeer item. In order to keep the record straight I think I ought to say in justification of my own action that I stood on this floor more than once and spoke against the reindeer bill that was passed by the Congress. But to be perfectly frank I did so because then I did not know anything about the situation except what I was told. I, too, like some of you, was somewhat prejudiced against the white reindeer owners. You know, it is very easy to get up here and say that the Lomen interests or some other interest own 34 or 40 percent of the nonnative reindeer in Alaska and that they are trying to unload a white elephant on the Congress. It is easy to make the charge that the Congress is trying to do this for some outside interest there rather than to actually help the na-But the fact is that practically all members of the committee have in the past opposed legislation to purchase reindeer, hoping that some other solution might be found.

But please bear in mind that, so far as this item is concerned, the Congress has spoken with reference to the reindeer problem in Alaska. Over my continued opposition, after making a very definite and thorough investigation, and after my very good friend the Delegate from Alaska, who has been up there for 20 or 30 years, gave his views, this Congress spoke in no unmistakable terms and said that it wanted the Government to spend, not $720,000, but $2,000,000 to purchase the Alaskan reindeer. Is that not correct? Although the Congress has authorized the expenditure of $2,000,000 to buy nonnative reindeer in Alaska, this committee has refused, refused, and continued to refuse to appropriate such an amount of money. You will remember that another body at the other end of the Capitol last year did make an appropriation to buy reindeer in Alaska and sent it to the House for approval. You will also recall that the President of the United States, after a thorough investigation, asked this Congress to buy reindeer in Alaska in order to keep the Alaskans and Indians there from starvation. To say that all or practically all of the natives own reindeer is absurd and not in keeping with the evidence presented to the committee.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield to the gentleman from Idaho.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Is it not a fact that these privately owned reindeer crowd off the range the reindeer owned by

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Yes: that is the situation

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Is it not a monopoly that is crowding out the native reindeer?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. That is true. Certainly it is not up to me to defend this reindeer item, because I opposed it in the past before the committee and on the floor of this House. However, in presenting this bill and in mentioning the most controversial items, I feel that I should give this body the real facts with reference to the matter, and then I know you gentlemen will use your own good judgment in supporting or refusing to support it, as you deem wise. That is your prerogative. In doing so please remember that a committee of disinterested gentlemen was appointed to go to Alaska to investigate this matter during the past summer. Bear in mind that almost without exception every speech made on the floor of the House against the reindeer item yesterday, today, and for the past 3 or 4 years has been made by those who have never been within a thousand miles of Alaska. I think the gentleman from California is one possible exception. As I stated, a committee went to Alaska and spent several weeks investigating this perplexing problem.

That committee went all over Alaska and investigated the situation there. It came back and unanimously reported to the Congress that there is just one thing we can do. It stated that we must buy the reindeer at once and settle once and for all this long, drawn-out controversy. This reindeer committee told us we ought to pay an average of at least $5 a head for the reindeer. Many of those owning herds want $10 a head or more. There are many of those natives who only own one or two reindeer, which is the only meat they have there except fish. When they have to buy reindeer they must pay $10 to $12 a head for the reindeer.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I shall be delighted to yield when I finish my statement.

This reindeer committee came back and unanimously reported to our committee that the committee ought to solve this terrible fight that has been going on, a fight to the finish between the white owners in Alaska and the natives. Gradually the white owners have been pushing the natives back, gradually they have been usurping their lands, and, in some instances, so we are advised, actually branding the natives' reindeer. The natives are helpless to defend themselves against the encroachments of the white owners. Not only are their herds being depleted but their ranges also are being depleted. It is an easy thing for us who do not have any reindeer in our districts or any Indians or Eskimos in our districts to go home and say, "I saved so much by voting against the reindeer item," but this will be back on our doorstep next year if we do not take care of the problem now.

You have to do something with reference to this item, or not only will the reindeer be extinct but many of the Eskimos and the Indians actually face starvation, so the committee has been advised. The problem is more serious than any you may contemplate.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I am pleased to yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. CARTER. Is there any testimony in the hearings that there is suffering among the Eskimos at the present time by reason of lack of reindeer?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Oh, yes. The gentleman will find testimony over a period of several years. If the gentleman will read the testimony of Mr. Rood, who is in charge of reindeer in Alaska, Mr. DIMOND, the able and sincere Delegate from Alaska, or talk to either of the gentlemen who went up there as representatives of our committee, he will find there is considerable suffering, and that suffering is increasing among the natives of Alaska.

Mr. CARTER. Is it due to lack of reindeer?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Of course, a lot of things enter into the situation in Alaska, but considering the fact that many natives are not getting sufficient to eat, I would say yes, it is largely due to lack of reindeer.

Mr. CARTER. That is not the information I got from the Department of the Interior.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. But please let me go on, as I must conclude.

Mr. CARTER. I have one other question.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I want to be courteous, but I must not consume too much time.

A lot of talk has been going on here about what the Government is going to do with the reindeer. Reindeer associations have been organized up there among the Eskimos. We are not going to give the reindeer to anyone. If and when the Government takes over these reindeer belonging to the whites, the Eskimo who works will be paid in reindeer meat and he will be paid off at $4 a head, not $12 or $15 a head. They propose to permit the Eskimo to earn a living and increase and breed up his herds. The Government of the United States proposes to help him to help himself. Those are the facts. Take it or leave it. It is your problem as much as mine.

I may say the gentleman from Alaska [Mr. DIMOND] will defend the item on reindeer. As a man who has voted against every bill that has ever been presented with reference to reindeer. I have endeavored to make a fair and impartial statement of the reindeer item in the pending bill.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri, a member of the committee.

Mr. RICH. I may say I am going to assign time to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I cannot refuse to yield to my distinguished neighbor from Missouri, who, I assume, desires to take a fling at this or some other item in this bill, or else inject politics into the discussion.

Mr. SHORT. No. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is mistaken. I have a high admiration and fond affection for the gentleman.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I thank the gentleman for his generosity.

Mr. SHORT. I wanted to ask about the farm families who were transported from Michigan, Wisconsin, and Minnesota to far-off Alaska, to the Matanuska Colony, where the chief products are reindeer, Eskimos, icebergs, and polar bears, and who have been returned to the States disappointed and disillusioned after the experiment has cost the taxpayers $30,000 for each family transported there.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. The gentleman has raised a very interesting question, a question I asked more than one of the representatives of the Interior Department who came before the committee. It is a fair question.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I am going to take 2 additional minutes to answer the question of the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. SHORT. Did Harry Hopkins give any one of those farmers a mule in foal? In Missouri I know my mules, but I never heard of that strange animal.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Well, just as I suspected, the gentleman, after all, is more interested in criticizing a member of the President's Cabinet than in solving the many problems facing this Committee and the Congress. But since the gentleman raises the question with reference to the colony that went to the Matanuska Valley, let me say that the evidence is that the Matanuska Valley Colony has not been a total failure by any manner of means. That is one of the most fertile valleys on the face of the earth. In that valley they have about 130 days of growing season. The evidence is that many of the farmers are prospering. Had proper and reasonable care been used in selecting the families I dare say there would not have been a single family returned. Too many families were selected who had never farmed and thought they were going on a lark. Of the 200 families that went to Alaska, I am sorry to say 90 have returned and the evidence is that probably 10 or 15 more families will return. The selection of these families was turned over to agencies in our counties who were anxious to get people off relief. Such local agencies who selected the families are at fault. To condemn Secretary Harry Hopkins personally for what local agencies did is, of course, manifestly unfair. But the gentleman from Missouri probably believes that all is fair in war and politics. [Applause.]

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. OLIVER].

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, today in the United States we are being tested as a democracy as never before. Problems of a serious economic import have been and are now threatening our very existence as a free, happy, and prosperous people. Unemployment, insecurity, and misery are slowly but surely attacking and undermining with the persistence and insistence of an army of termites the very foundations of our Nation.

Internationally as well as nationally the same condition

Unrest, conflict, dissatisfaction with the status quo are driving the leaders of nations to military and economic action which if crystallized will doubtlessly destroy the civilization of modern times.

For 2 years in the Seventy-fifth Congress I listened to the partisan debates and arguments which arose as the Congress of the United States wrestled with this situation and these problems. In all humility, I wish at this time to make a small contribution in the interests of a solution which must be considered from a strictly nonpartisan viewpoint. Mr. Chairman, the preservation of the principles of this great Nation far transcends any petty personal or partisan interests that this great deliberative body may have, and I know from my personal observations that such fair attention and careful consideration is always manifested when the general problem is approached from a national emergency standpoint.

Today we have the continuation of the unemployment problem which has most severely afflicted us for the past 10 years. Today we have the same and the more imminent threat of increasing debt which has hung over our heads for the past several years. Today we have the same inadequate thinking and leadership to cope with this problem that we have had for the past decade. Today we have the same unwillingness and practical aversion to meeting this problem face to face in head-on collision. For 10 years we have been tilting at windmills as we have organized nationally to prop up an economy and a financial system based on debt and scarcity. The leadership on my side of the aisle has been as deficient in this as those of you on the other side who have had the responsibility of leading the Nation. Those of you who know me know that I am not rabidly partisan. I have said that our problem, which is needless want in the midst of plenty, transcends partisanship. Yet, by the same token, this problem needs omnipartisan lead-

Mr. Chairman, we all know that debt hangs over the head of the American people like the sword of Damocles. Yet Mr. Morgenthau, the Secretary of the Treasury, intends to ask this membership for authority to borrow beyond the existing maximum limit of forty-five billions. Every agency of government that has been established to implement and maintain recovery and employment has functioned on the basis of debt. The United States Government, under this and other recent administrations, has completely relied on a financial background of debt. Our whole consciousness is impregnated with the idea of debt. Our economy is geared to a financial racket which swells up with debt and then becomes stalled when further debt creation is rendered impossible. I do not criticize this administration for the social objectives which it has endeavored to reach, but I do criticize it, and severely, for its continued adherence to a debt complex which time and time again has demonstrated its complete inadequacy to make possible for the American people a permanent utilization of our wonderfully adequate plant structure. In 1933 this administration had the first real opportunity that any party has ever had to correct the evils and the criminality of the perpetuation of the debtmoney system which has always precipitated the panics and depressions of this Nation and of the world. Since 1933 this administration has constantly and continually adhered to its obeisance to the idol of debt money. It has encouraged the American people to create more debt obligations, both through private and public instrumentalities. This has been done, so it is claimed, to put into circulation more purchasing power.

But purchasing power based on debt money is not permanently effective whether it comes into existence through the creation of public or private credit. Today the great hue and cry is for confidence to the end that private credit or debt may be put to work. In my opinion it is not lack of confidence that is stalemating recovery but it is the obvious impossibility of expanding a credit-debt economy which already is strained to a bursting point as it endeavors to meet its already existing debt service.

Internationally, this is also true with most nations, with the possible exception of Germany. The only reason that Germany is excepted is because she repudiated her internal debt through banker-created inflation and has met her external debt through a repatriation of her obligations under the propaganda built around Hitler.

How can we depend internally or rely further on an attempted eternal expansion of our debt money when all divisions of Government, including States and municipalities, are already loaded to the eyebrows with existing debt, and when our citizens who are expected to use additional credit-debt expansion are groaning under the load of existing debt obligations? The automobile industry is an example of this.

The absurdity of expecting the automobile industry to function as the bell wether of economic prosperity becomes obvious when we analyze the difficulties confronting the dealer as he tries to dispose of used cars. He can sell the new car for cash or credit because those in the class of the "haves" can still buy, but the potential purchaser of the used car taken in trade is relatively in the class of the "have nots" and has neither the cash nor the credit because he is already loaded with existing debt. He has confidence enough but the dealer cannot take the chance. So we have the assembly line at the factories stopped because the used-car buyer either has no cash, no credit, or is overburdened with existing debt.

Housing is in a similar position. It is true that the Federal Housing Administration has functioned well on a small down payment, but, in my opinion, the potential debt carriers under that plan have narrowed down considerably or will within the reasonably near future. In other words, installment buying, which is a modern form of debt money, must eventually reach a peak where further customers are not available for debt sales.

The National Government should not be permitted to extend its debt limit; local divisions of government are already facing tax resistance and opposition to increased debt obligations; individuals are loaded, generally speaking, with contractual debt payments; foreign nations are notoriously in default to us either as a government or as private bondholders; so, in my opinion, it is incumbent upon us to examine carefully and with determination the financial superstition of debt money, privately created, which has been making a shambles of this Nation for the past decade.

Brookings Institution, under the able leadership of Dr. Harold G. Moulton, is authority for the estimate that the United States is fully capable of producing a national income of one hundred and twenty billions of dollars annually, based on the 1929 price level, when, as, and if we utilize our existing plant structure to its full capacity. Personally, I believe that this is a conservative estimate. But for the purpose of this discussion I shall use it as a base. In 1929 we produced something more than $81,000,000,000 in national income, and last year we produced something over sixty billions.

It is now the New Deal hope to step it up to eighty billions by 1940, which is some few billions under the actual income of 1929 and forty billions under the Brookings Institution estimate of the amount which we could have produced in 1929. But since 1929 we have increased our population nearly 10 percent, and if we would maintain now a living standard equivalent to that possible in 1929 for this increased population, we may justifiably conclude that the 1939 produced income would have to be $132,000,000,000 predicated on the previous estimate of this conservative research institution. Furthermore, it is also claimed that we have so advanced in technological efficiency that we now produce 10 percent more effectively than we did in 1929. This factor, if utilized, could reasonably increase our potential 1939 production to $145,000,000,000 worth of goods and services based once again on the Brookings Institution potential figure for 1929 income. In addition, we have potentially available forces in unexplored technological effectiveness which are now latent and cannot be utilized because there is no effective purchasing demand to stimulate them. If used, these might conceivably step up our national income from 15 to 20 percent. To be conservative, let us admit that this would be only 10 percent. If utilized, this in turn would increase our production to $162,000,000,000. Furthermore, when we consider that the devaluation of gold has given us a 59-cent dollar in international relationships which in domestic purchasing power has fallen approximately 121/2 percent as compared with 1929, then we may justifiably increase the potential national income as of the 1929 price level to $180,000,-000,000. Therefore, when we hear these inferences made that an increase in national income to $80,000,000,000 would place the American people in clover, it is well for us to give further consideration to these added factors which I have most inadequately referred to, namely, increased population, increased technological skill, further technological improvements, now latent, and a lower price level as compared with 1929. By doing this we may realize how inadequately such a relatively small increase in national income will function in meeting our problems of unemployment and insecurity for the masses of our people.

Production, and the complete consumption of that production, rests entirely and wholly on the distribution of that production. The distribution of that production depends wholly on the automatic functioning of our money supply. Therefore, when we find our plant only operating at from one-third to one-half capacity, it seems to me that we can reasonably and properly turn our attention to a survey and study of our money supply. The industrial planning, together with any rationalizing and legislating on the production angle which we have been carrying on in the past decade, is entirely futile and idle until and unless we have the courage and determination to develop an unbiased and unprejudiced inquiry into the monopoly of usury, which eventually has always and is now strangling production and Americanism.

Today, in my opinion, at least 95 percent of our money comes into existence through the monopolistic banking and financial structure, privately owned, and this money creation is, furthermore, based on interest-bearing debt accumulation. I think that I can conservatively state that over 80 percent of our money supply is directly created by an expansion of public and/or private debt. If this is true—and I believe that it is—then does it not follow that a contraction, restriction, or cessation of debt creation automatically decreases or destroys our money supply? Just as night follows day, so does it follow, in my humble thinking, that today we are not suffering from lack of confidence so much as we are facing a dead-end street in the process of expanding our debt structure; and if we are not up against the pin on further debt creation, then we should be, because additional debt will only make the collapse more severe when it comes. Money based on debt must always and inevitably cause bigger and better

Mr. Chairman, we are on the wrong track and we are traveling in the wrong direction. Recovery for the American people cannot be reached in curtailing production or restricting labor, but rather must it be found in the direction of furnishing us with a money supply free of debt and based on production. Permanent jobs will not be found in the nonproductive works of Government, but rather must be made possible by the mass consumption of our mass production of goods and services. Such a utilization of our plant structure cannot be secured with the vehicle of distribution running wild today on the overexpanded tires of credit-money inflation and stalled tomorrow on the flat tires of deflated debt money.

The expansion of credit or debt in our financial system is a pyramiding of interest charges and obligations which is usury in the sight of God. Usury is predicated on the idea of getting something for nothing. Today, and for the past three-quarters of a century, we have been sacrificed to our idolatry of this godless practice. It is only in the past decade that it has become so obvious and so burdensome. This principle of money interest on fictitious money loaned through a privately owned financial structure must be abolished if the profit system under a democratic process is to survive. Otherwise the nationalization of industry and agriculture will be established under a totalitarian control. In these days financial or usurious piracy is negating production and forcing our productive process to walk the plank of involuntary unemployment and idleness. It is a most criminal indictment of our intelligence that we define unsalable commodities as surplus while millions of our people are confronted with the fear and the fact of want and misery. Because of our apathetic attitude toward financial usury we are forced to reason that the blessings of leisure and abundance are unemployment and surplus, or overproduction. Our present conception and application of the existing money system based on debt inhibits this Nation and the entire world from enjoying and using the obvious physical plenty which is evidenced all around us, and as a direct result we starve because our money complex and superstitution compel artificially and financially created scarcity.

Mr. Chairman, today the membership of this Congress has indicated its interest in the problem of what makes or breaks business by the creation of a joint committee to investigate monopoly and its effect on America.

Very properly, the able members of this committee are turning their attention to the huge, colossal, and stupendous aggregations of wealth and the institutions of savings which, in the final analysis, are dealers in debt. But, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that as a matter of constructive criticism this committee is not aiming directly at the real issue. The greatest monopoly in this Nation and the world today is the absolute control which our banking structure and our huge credit or debt institutions have in their power to create credit or debt money. With my limited mental capacity, I can arrive at no other conclusion than that this power is the greatest of all, and we have farmed this out to private institutions either directly or indirectly.

The continued and limitless flow of wealth money in productive channels is absolutely essential to full and permanent employment, but today, because we depend for this flow on the expansion of limited credit or debt money, we have invested private financial corporations with the power of control of our entire destiny as a nation. When debt claims have been materially expanded by a progressive pyramiding issuance of credit through these institutions, then we have a stoppage of the flow of our money supply. Furthermore, the secondary flow, which comes as a result of the investment of savings, finally finds itself up the same dead-end alley where further exploitation of the debt areas is not possible. Then it is not lack of confidence, but it is the overloading and the overburdening of debt-carrying capacity, that prevents a further expansion of our debt-money supply. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, it seems altogether pertinent to me that the representation of the House of Representatives on this joint committee should be instructed to require a full investigation along this line. I have great confidence and I know the membership of this House has the same confidence in the gentleman from Texas, HATTON SUMNERS, and the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. Reece, our colleagues on the Monopoly Committee. But I do submit that a mandate of the Seventy-sixth Congress should be given to carry out an inquiry as outlined in this House resolution which I herewith file, send to the Clerk's desk, and ask to have read at this time.

House Resolution 118

Resolved, That the House of Representatives, assembled, herewith direct Hon. Hatton W. Sumners and Hon. B. Carroll Refect, its Member representation on the Temporary National Economic Committee, to demand that the Temporary National Economic Committee shall make an inquiry into and an investigation of the following questions:

the following questions:

(1) Why, at certain times in our economic cycle, do we have plenty of debt, plenty of goods available for sale, and at the same time have very little money in the form of currency, coin, or demand deposits in the possession of the rank and file of the American people for actual use?

(2) Does 95 percent of our money come into existence as a direct or indirect result of the creation of interest-bearing loans? If not 95 percent, then what proportion?

(3) Does control or influence over United States credit rest directly or indirectly in the hands of a few highly centralized banks?

(4) Does this control constitute the most powerful monopoly in the Nation? If not, to what extent does the control influence our economy?

(5) Is this private control of money and this issuance of credit money in contravention of article 1, section 8, of the Constitution and therefore unconstitutional?

Mr. Chairman, let me ask your further indulgence while I present some thoughts on this subject from Mr. William A. Overholser, of Libertyville, Ill., who is a member of the executive committee of the National Monetary Conference:

America's greatest need today is a money system which will be constituted so as to make possible the creation and injection into circulation with safety, of new money when needed, without the creation of more debt; and so as to furnish the country with a circulating supply of money that will fully balance, but not overbalance, with the production and consumption requirements and needs of the country.

This is something which the country has never had, but it is something which the country can have when it makes a sincere effort to be as scientific in dealing with its money system as its people have been in dealing with the great production facilities of the country.

In times past our money system has more nearly met the country's needs than it does today. This, however, was only accomplished at the expense of getting our people deeper and deeper in debt, because of the fact that very little money could be created, under the laws and practices which have been and still are in force, without the creation of more debt.

Continuing our money system on the present debt-creating basis not only is injurious to the general welfare but is also quite detrimental to most of the bankers and creditors of the country.

Loans cannot be made safely without security. While the debtors continued to have sufficient unmortgaged property or equities on which further loans could be extended, it may have been an advantage to the bankers and creditors to have required that newly created money should only come into existence through the banking system by the creation of more debt. This, however, has resulted in the debtors of the country getting so badly mired into debt that they can no longer obtain sufficient loans with which to provide the country with a sufficient influx of new money with which to meet the needs of the country. This has retarded business, brought on the greatest depression in history, and impaired values. It also has curtailed production and the creation of new wealth.

In this matter the securities held by creditors have become more and more questionable in value and the making of new loans has become more and more nearly impossible without being made to or through the Government. Not only has the making of loans by the creating of new credit been greatly curtailed but the loaning or reloaning of existing money and credit has been greatly impaired.

Thus, by basing the creation of new money upon the creation of more debt trained bases.

Thus, by basing the creation of new money upon the creation of more debt, values—the basis upon which credit is extended—have been impaired or destroyed. In the interest of the banking business, as well as of all other business, the creation of new money must not depend upon debt, and sufficient new money must be placed into circulation to provide an adequate balance for production and consumption, and to serve as an aid in maintaining old values and in creating new wealth for the basing of new values.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, may I state that until and unless this inquiry is made and legislative action taken to make possible the full and complete operation of our productive plant structure, free, clear of, and unimpeded by money manipulation and private financial frustration, then we may expect the money changers to remain in control of the temple and of our entire destiny as a free people. Continued scarcity and want in the midst of plenty is the inevitable result of such

I hope, Mr. Chairman, that this resolution may have favorable consideration. [Applause.]

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 minute in order to clarify the discussion relating to the reindeer situation in Alaska.

I insert in the RECORD, from page 564 of part 2 of the hearings, a statement by Mr. Rood, the expert on reindeer care, and reading as follows:

expressed a perfect willingness to do what was necessary to benefit the natives; he thought it might be desirable for the Government to aid them in the operation of their herds, but it was not quite clear to him why we should purchase white-owned reindeer, some buildings, corrals, etc., that might be useful up there. Well, it seems to me we cannot very well carry out our program of benefiting the native people unless we eliminate the white owners—for this reason: The deer are completely mixed on the ranges, and just as soon as we put improvements on any of those ranges the white owners are going to get the benefit of the Government's expenditure. But there is another thing that occurs. The white ownership has a tendency to increase more rapidly than the native ownership does. That is for this reason: The native depends upon his reindeer as a source with which to satisfy his primary wants for food and clothing. The white owner is in the reindeer business for only one purpose—to make dollars out of it. Not having been able to exploit reindeer meat by shipping to the States, he has not used many reindeer through the years; consequently his ownership tends to increase more rapidly than the native ownership does. Now where is this going to end?

is this going to end?

The white owners' animals are grazing off pastures that the natives need to develop this resource which is vital to them. In the Kotzebue area those Eskimos are not obtaining more than $50 per family annual income for their furs, according to a statement I got from a well-known trader who deals with them and has dealt with them for years.

Those people are meat eaters. Those people cannot raise crops in that agriculturally impoverished country. But they exchange moss for meat. Reindeer are absolutely essential to them, and, in order for them to raise their animals, they must have ranges accessto where they live. White owners' deer are grazing off of those pastures which the natives need to exist.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 8 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. Voornis].

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, the reason I tried to induce the gentleman from Maine [Mr. OLIVER] to yield to me was because I wanted to say to him that he was telling the House more in his brief 15 minutes than it has been told in a long, long time, and because I wanted to express to him my own heartfelt thanks for the things he was saying.

It so happens that on this very day I have introduced a bill which embodies exactly the philosophy which he sets forth. I am not going to describe that bill in detail, except to say that it would give us a scientific control over the flow of money and credit in this Nation by, first, providing for the purchase of the capital stock of the 12 Federal Reserve banks by the Government; second, perpetuating the present liquid condition of our commercial banks by requiring dollar-fordollar reserves behind demand deposits; and, in the third place, making of the Federal Reserve Board, plus the Secretary of the Treasury who would be an ex officio member, a real monetary agent of the Congress, charged with the task of keeping the flow of money and credit in this country in accord with the increased population and the increased productive capacity of the Nation, and of bringing that money into circulation on the basis of national growth and development without the increase of public debt; and, finally, the bill provides for a stability in the buying power of the dollar.

This is a very brief description, and I did not intend to go into that bill until the gentleman from Maine spoke as he did. What I did want to say was that it seems to me we have been treated with a whole lot of oratory in the House, which reminds me very much of the kind of speeches that used to be made by Mr. Cobden and Mr. Bright in the early days of the laissez-faire philosophy in England.

To say one is in favor of leaving people as free as possible or in favor of a balanced Budget is like saying he is against sin. It is obviously a good thing politically to say, but to propose a balancing of the Budget simply by a deflationary reduction of governmental expenditures without doing anything else about it means certain stagnation and economic death to the United States. Furthermore, immediately it means hunger and suffering on the part of a lot of people. We have got to have a better answer than that.

If I believed that America's problem could be solved by simply a laissez faire policy and the reduction of governmental expenditures, I would certainly do a lot less worrying about the future, but I do not think that is possible. By this policy you might cause a temporary boom, you might get a couple of million people back to work for a little while. Probably some people would make a good deal of money. Undoubtedly inventories would pile up as never before if that were the case. Surplus savings would accumulate. The result anyone can forecast.

We have two problems. The gentleman from Maine has posed them for us very well. In the first place, we have the problem of the Budget and of debt; and in the second place, the problem of the purchasing power of the American people; and we have to solve both of them at once or we cannot solve either one of them at all. The basic problem in a nutshell is this: You have out of the national income realized in any given year a certain percentage, which is passed on to the people generally and is spent for consumption goods. You have another portion which is saved by a comparatively small group of people, and sometimes those savings run into very large amounts of money. In 1929 it ran to $19,000,000,000, and in 1937 to approximately the same figure. Now, unless new investment can balance these savings, you have inevitable depression, falling, first, as a rule, on the farmer, later on industry.

This is an economic fact that I do not believe anybody will question. Therefore the philosophy of laissez faire, which is being advanced so freely in the House today, particularly from the Republican side, necessarily implies that you must be able to get enough new investment to balance the savings that are made. I submit that is impossible. The savings represent a failure to pass on sufficient purchasing power to the consumers of the Nation to take the goods off the shelves and the crops off the farms.

Investment means new distribution of buying power. But it would take only $40,000,000,000 to rebuild every factory in America, and we have $20,000,000,000 of excess savings even on the 1929 basis of production. In 1937, as I said, as high an amount of national income was saved as in the twenties, and this was a year in which New Deal taxes were in effect. Those taxes have been charged with causing depression, falling too heavily on the wealthy, and not distributing the burden widely enough. These charges are contrary to facts about taxation under the New Deal that many people apparently are not informed about. We have had an increase in total taxation and total revenues, but we have not had nearly as large a percentage of taxes raised from corporate income taxes and taxes on individual incomes of more than $5,000 a year, as was the case in 1928. Indeed, of the total revenues in 1928, 34 percent came from corporate income taxes and 30 percent from private income taxes on incomes of over $5,000. In 1938 those figures were 19.7 and 18 percent. The increased revenues under the New Deal have come largely from increased consumption taxes, and if we are going to reduce taxes, the taxes that need reducing are taxes on consumption, and not taxes on large income. For it is the taxes on consumption, and I would add taxes that fall with especial weight on small business enterprises, that reduce buying power and are of no use in counterbalancing surplus savings.

Another reason why it is impossible to expect investment to make up for the volume of national income that goes into savings is because the depreciation account of industry as a whole—and I realize this is not true of every small industry—the total of depreciation account of all American in-dustry is about sufficient to reequip that industry if used for that purpose. Therefore, you have not got much room for new investment so far as the reequipment of industry to increase its productive capacity is concerned.

Another reason is that the rate of interest remains too high, thus giving too great a preference on the part of investors to buy debts or obligations of one kind or another such as bonds or mortgages, and too little inclination on the part of investors to invest in productive enterprise. Little business today is growing anxious to get more credit than it can get, and as evidence of that fact groups of small-business men have requested legislation to be introduced to give them access to a greater amount of credit, and one such bill was introduced only a couple of days ago by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Patman] and myself.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Yes.

Mr. RICH. We passed such an act requiring the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans to small business. Why does not the Reconstruction Finance Corporation make those loans?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I refer the gentleman to one short paragraph I put in the Record that day, April 4, 1938, in which I said we have authorized the R. F. C. to make such loans, but we have to have more than that. We have to have a will to make such loans. I agree with the gentleman. I do not think they have been made.

Mr. RICH. They are holding back too much in granting those loans which we intended they should make.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I think small industry has a legitimate kick about its inability to get credit, but I do not think that kick should be mainly made against the R. F. C. I think the main thing is that there exists a monopoly control of credit in the hands of private individuals.

FOUR POSSIBLE COURSES

There are, roughly, four courses of action open to us. Before I go into them let me say that everyone should agree that no wasteful expenditures should be made by Government. By wasteful I mean expenditures which do not yield the tax-payers in value received 100 cents or more for their tax dollar. Everyone is, I am sure, agreed about that.

Now, what are our four possible courses of action? The first is to continue Federal deficit spending until the national income has been increased to a point where, at least, the Budget is balanced. Economically this is a possible course and vastly to be preferred to an alternative of cutting down on public works employment and increasing the poverty and insecurity of our people. This program was working fairly well up to 1937, when it was virtually abandoned, the W. P. A. and P. W. A. drastically reduced, and other spending cut down. The result of our failure to carry through with this policy, as you know, was a severe recession in business activity.

Whether or not Federal deficit spending is feasible economically, it is extremely doubtful that it is possible politically for the reason that it depends on an increasing public debt. The size of that debt at present is not, in my opinion, cause for alarm. Its continual increase is a different matter, however, and certainly the people of the country are concerned about it.

Finally on this point let me emphasize that the basic reason for increasing the debt has been thereby to buy into circulation an additional volume of money in the form of bank deposits. The Government has been paying interest to the banks to get them to exercise privately a function which, according to our Constitution, belongs to Congress and it alone—the function of creating money.

The second possible alternative is that suggested by many, many speakers in the House. It is to cut Federal expenditures to meet the revenues. Not only was this method tried during the Hoover administration with disastrous consequences, but when I ask you to consider the immediate consequences of dismissing 1,000,000 W. P. A. workers on April 1 in order to accord with this program, I believe anyone who is fair-minded will see where it leads. A deflationary policy—less taxes, less Public Works employment, less farm benefits, fewer loans by Federal agencies, lower payments to the aged—such a policy spells economic ruin for America. Politically it is at the moment popular for just one reason. That reason is that the people of America—yes; the businessmen of America—do not yet realize what its consequences would be. Economically it would be suicidal.

The third alternative offers real hope but will take courage to carry through. The demand for retirement pensions for those who can no longer find places in our industry is no mere idle thing. It is based not only on justice but on economic necessity. By a real program of better distribution of buying power, cutting down excess savings, and distribution ing them in buying power to all our people, say of 60 years and beyond, we would have an answer to the necessity of increased consumer buying power to make up for the inevitable failure of new investment to balance savings.

Such a program should not be limited to pensions on a charity basis nor to the aged. It should extend to all who cannot or ought not to be employed—widowed mothers and the disabled, for example. To be successful, however, not only must taxes be levied on a broad base, they must also tap the surplus savings themselves or be so levied as to prevent surplus accumulation. This is where we are inclined to fall down, but a courageous, ability-to-pay tax policy is the price we must pay if we want to continue our free economic system with any degree of success. Another part of this third alternative, however, must be a lowering of interest rates. The most direct way to accomplish this is by Government loans through Government credit agencies using Government credit.

But I do not believe even the third alternative can be entirely successful without the fourth one being taken, too. The fourth one is effective monetary and credit reform. If I read history correctly, the Democratic Party has, through most of its history, stood in a general way for a constitutional money system. Today its very destiny calls it, as well as all other earnest Americans, to take up this cause and fight it through.

America cannot continue to depend for her monetary supply, with which all her business must be done, upon the private creation and destruction of check-book credits by 15,000 separate banking institutions.

There are several things that must be done, and the Congress that undertakes them will be the greatest in the Nation's history.

The first and most obvious of these is a sensible financing of revenue-producing or properly secured public works. Briefly, I refer you here to my bill-H. R. 115-the Public Works Finance Act. If private finance were to lend funds for the construction of a dam or houses or any other revenueproducing project, or if it were to lend funds to a city or State or the Federal Government on the security of its bonds, it would simply lend its credit on the security of the revenues or the bonds. It would not say, "Wait; we must go and sell some debentures or some of our bonds before we will have any credit to lend you." No; it would create and lend the credit. But our Federal Government and its credit agencies-because we have given away the Nation's birthright, the right to create her money-must, before they make a loan on however good security or advance funds for a self-liquidating project, go out and sell the Nation's bonds or debentures to buy back the Nation's credit from private banks. Change this; start using the Nation's credit, always on proper security, for loans for proper national or local projects, and you will find you can have many worth-while things done and much employment created without increasing the public debt. My bill—H. R. 115-would make this possible. Let me make it clear, however, that H. R. 115 is not the general monetary-reform bill to which I referred in the beginning of my speech.

Carrying this principle one step further, a rational use of national credit for loans on mortgage security to home builders and farmers and small-business men would mean that money could be loaned them at interest rates as low as 2½ or 3 percent and still have a substantial income over and above administrative costs and losses for the Federal Treasury. It is all a question of who exercises the right to create credit, whether it is Uncle Sam or private financial insti-

Basically, however, the main thing is to establish a scientific control in the hands of the Congress, through a proper agency, over the volume of lawful money and demand bank deposits, which constitute 95 percent of our actively circulating medium of exchange. And this implies that, while no interference would be made with banks lending actual money or with their making legitimate profits—which many of the smaller ones have not made recently—the Congress must take back to itself the exclusive right to create money and bring it originally into circulation and must stop paying tribute to the banks every time it does so. Our money supply must be geared to the growth of the Nation. It is all the people who have babies, all the people who make invention possible, all the people who contribute to increased productive capacity in the Nation. So it is the Nation itself that should bring an increased volume of money into circulation to keep pace with its population and industrial growth and to keep the buying power of its dollar on an even keel. And it is the Nation as a whole that should benefit from the creation of this money. I am not talking inflation. I am talking about scientifically preventing both inflation and deflation. Only by unified governmental monetary control and the exclusive issue of money by the Congress can these things be done.

And then we would be able to prevent what we cannot prevent now—namely, things like the destruction of $8,000,-000,000 of formerly existing bank deposits between 1929 and 1932. This happened just because the banks called in and did not renew loans. And since the loans were flat bank credit, therefore that much of our money supply disappeared. With dollar-for-dollar reserves behind demand deposits that could not happen.

Nor will it be difficult to bring about a 100-percent reserve system at present.

For if we add the total of all reserves now held by the banks, all of their cash and all their Government bonds, the figure is very nearly equal to the total of demand bank deposits, at least so far as Federal Reserve member banks are concerned. So that if we permit the banks to count Government bonds as cash they are practically on a 100-percent reserve basis now. My bill, introduced today, proposes to keep them there, and that in future only the monetary agent of Congress shall originally create either money or credit. There are provisions in the bill to assist banks in establishing 100-percent reserves; and, if necessary, I would even be willing to lend them money at no interest at all in order to accomplish this great reform.

And, further, here is the answer to some of our great dilemmas: Why, we wonder, do farmers have surplus food while people go hungry; why do we need pensions for the aged so badly but cannot finance them; why cannot we build houses when we need them so much? Why do we have poverty in the midst of great productive possibilities? The answer is: We could solve these problems by having a system of money and credit wherein the people of America, by their industry and the growth of their Nation, would earn into circulation each year enough additional volume of the circulating medium to compensate for this growth.

The burden of taxes, the burden of unemployment, are so very heavy now largely because America is trying to buy into circulation the money she needs to do an expanding business. We have today in circulation less money—including demand deposits, of course—than we had in 1928. Our population is 10,000,000 greater. That is the story.

I do not claim that such measures as I have suggested offer a complete answer. I do say that if they are taken our national debt will stop increasing, that it can without undue burden be paid off, and that a new psychology will possess our people. And I also say that without this fundamental and eminently just measure being taken other efforts will not be likely to be so very successful. The solution of our other problems will be immeasurably advanced by and to a large extent wait upon the restoration to the Congress, by the Congress, of the constitutional right of Congress to "coin money and regulate its value."

For not in new investment alone but in increased buying power on the part of all America must the answer to the economic riddle of the machine age be found.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. Pierce].

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. The quantity of electricity used in a community depends largely if not entirely on the price. In Portland, Oreg., we have, compared to other places in the United States, a fairly cheap rate, but there we are using only about 1,100 kilowatt-hours per year per installed meter. In Tacoma, Wash., which has a publicly owned plant, with rates about two-thirds of Portland, Oreg., they are using 50 percent more power, or about 1,700 kilowatt-hours per year per installed meter. In Winnipeg, Canada, with a rate one-third that of Washington, D. C., and less than one-half of Portland, Oreg., and even less than Tacoma, they are using 4,650 kilowatt-hours per year per installed meter, four times what they are using in Portland, Oreg., because it is cheaper. Niagara has one of the cheapest producing powers in the United States—500,000 kilowatts development.

They can develop a million kilowatts at Niagara on the American side. It was developed by a private power company. The Wall Street interests invested $3,100,000 there. They have paid dividends of $81,000,000 on that $3,100,000 investment, and they have property today worth $167,000,000. The Wall Street company made 80 to 1. These are the figures of Berle, Assistant Secretary of State, and were given by him to the New York Constitutional Convention in Albany.

In the Northwest we have now installed 1,500,000 or 1,600,-000 kilowatts. The installations at Bonneville and Grand Coulee will ultimately be about that amount. It will be years before it will all be available. There will be a market for it all as soon as the power is developed.

On the Columbia River and its tributaries there can be developed 20,000,000 kilowatts, more than 40 percent of all hydro power in the United States, and there will be use for it all when it is developed—the cheapest hydroelectric power in all the world, worth more than all the anthracite beds of Pennsylvania. There is no question about its use if sold at a low rate.

Niagara's American side is a shining example of private development of hydro power. Out of an investment of $3,-100,000, the Wall Street company has made a quarter of a billion. This is what we are trying to prevent on the Columbia River. We want the power developed for the benefit of our people.

Members of this House have received copies of a memorandum against the Bonneville appropriation, sent out by the committee of utility executives.

I am glad to note that this committee of utility executives admits, on page 7 of their memorandum, to members of the Appropriations Committee that a market exists for Bonneville power. For the last 3 years this committee has contended just the opposite, and during this period I have, in various House debates, contributed numerous studies of the power market situation in the Northwest. This admission, however, at such a late date, demonstrates that the numerous presentations made on this floor are having an effect on public opinion.

This utility committee now presents three adverse arguments against the pending Bonneville appropriation. Their arguments are based on alleged duplication of existing facilities, hypothetical tax losses, and a supposition that congressional approval of the Bonneville appropriation would represent a contradiction of the recent declarations of the President and Secretary Hopkins. None of the arguments presented in this memorandum are valid. The information on which it is based is factually incorrect.

DUPLICATION OF EXISTING FACILITIES

I was once the owner and operator of an electric power system in eastern Oregon. When I found that I could not play the game as the holding company officials were dictating, I disposed of my holdings. I have built and operated transmission lines. I know the transmission situation in the Northwest and can state that the committee's presentation of the transmission situation is a complete misrepresentation. The transmission layout contemplated in the 1940 Bonneville program does not represent a duplication nor a displacement of existing facilities. On the contrary, this layout is a contribution to the existing private power facilities in increasing their values, and extending their period of usefulness.

Mr. Gadsden, representing the committee of utility executives, presents two maps to substantiate his allegation as to duplication, but refrains from noting on his maps the voltage of the lines shown, and the conductor sizes. He leaves the reader with the idea that the existing transmission lines are so built, and have such high voltage that they can handle loads coming from Bonneville. This is incorrect. Most of the lines shown on his maps are low-voltage lines with small conductor sizes. These lines are totally inadequate to handle the loads necessary to market Bonneville power.

When the Bonneville Act was before the Rivers and Harbors Committee in the spring of 1937, I presented the facts as to transmission capacities, and stated that it would take 220,000-volt lines to handle the Bonneville output. The only line of this voltage in the States of Washington and Oregon is the double-circuit line running from the Diablo plant to Seattle and owned by the Seattle "City Light." There are a few 110,000-volt lines in the State of Washington that have intermediate capacity values. These lines are located in the Little Falls-Spokane district, and from the Baker plant to the cement works. The city of Tacoma has a fair-sized line from Cushman to Tacoma but this line is removed from any area contemplated in the Bonneville transmission lay-out. There is another 110,000-volt line running a short distance from the Ariel plant to Portland. This is a single line without any reserve transmission capacity.

The pending Bonneville construction appropriation contemplates a duplicate reinforcing transmission line from Bonneville to a point southeast of Yakima, Wash. This line will tie into lines which are projected into eastern Oregon and eastern Washington to handle irrigation pumping loads and a sizable rural cooperative which has been successfully established in the congressional district which I represent. Also included in this appropriation is a double line from a point near Yakima to Pasco, Wash., with extensions to Umatilla and Pendleton, Oreg. Another line is projected from Yakima to Ellensburg, in Washington. This line will serve an existing public undertaking. Another line will be extended from Bonneville toward Condit and will be tied into a line already authorized from Bonneville to The Dalles, in Oregon. Another line is projected from St. Johns and the Portland area to Astoria.

Now let us look into the situation as to the existing private lines. There is only one line extending eastward from the Bonneville area, and it has a nominal capacity of 13,000 kilowatts. This line is already loaded and no duplicate facilities exist. The maximum that the present line could handle would be possibly 5,000 kilowatts when a capacity of at least 100,000 kilowatts is needed. Extending westward from Bonneville is a single 66,000-volt line with an available capacity of about 12,000 kilowatts to handle another 100,000 kilowatts of capacity.

The same situation prevails in the Willamette Valley. There are two existing low-voltage transmission lines running from Portland to Salem, and these lines have practically no additional capacity. From Salem to Eugene there is only a single line, already loaded, connecting the systems of the Portland General Electric and the Mountain States Power Co. The public plant at Eugene formerly purchased auxiliary service from this line and the line running south toward the plants north of Medford. Service was so unsatisfactory from these two lines that the public plant at Eugene had to discontinue connections with these lines.

There is only one line from the Yakima country routed southeast toward Pasco and Pendleton. This line has such a small nominal capacity that it would be of no service to my country in handling Bonneville power. I could discuss this situation at length, but there is no need as I have covered the existing control transmission lines. South of the Columbia and east of Hood River the existing lines are nothing more than semirural facilities of very limited capacity.

From reading the presentation before the Appropriations Committee and being present when this testimony was given, I am in a position to state that the projected Bonneville lines will be tied into the existing facilities, giving a two-way feed, shortening the transmission distance of the secondary lines, increasing the capacities of the existing lines, and lengthening their useful life. To say that the projected Bonneville lines would represent a duplication is absurd to one familiar with the existing lines.

TAXES

I have previously discussed in my speeches on this floor the utility tax situation in Oregon, in the State of Washington, and in Washington, D. C. There will be no displacement of State and local taxes. Administrator Ross has publicly announced that contracts made between the Bonneville administrator and the public and cooperative plants will contain stipulations safeguarding the tax situation. Two years ago I compared the amount of taxes paid by the Tacoma plant and the Potomac Electric Power Co., serving Washington, D. C., showing that the Potomac Electric Power Co. is paying an indecently low tax bill. I also pointed out in a speech a year ago that private utilities of Oregon and elsewhere are re-collecting from public institutions and municipalities, through power sold them, a goodly share of the taxes they have paid.

POLICY STATEMENTS

I was a part of the fight during the enactment of the Bonneville legislation. I offered a bill which was practically parallel with the bill reported by the Rivers and Harbors Committee. I feel that I am in a position to state that that appropriation is fully authorized by the act of August 20, 1937, and that there is no item in the pending appropriation which would represent any expansion beyond the point authorized by Congress 2 years ago.

APPROPRIATIONS AND ALLOTMENTS

The committee's chart 1 sets out appropriations and allotments for the whole Bonneville navigation and power project, totaling $73,342,810. Included in this sum is an item of $53,188,800, capital cost of the entire plant as allocated by the Federal Power Commission. If this utility committee wanted to be fair, they would have quoted the allocation order of the Federal Power Commission issued under date of February 8. 1938. In that order it stated that out of the $53,188,800, $5.517.600 represented facilities used only for navigation purposes, namely, the ship lock; and that out of the $53,000,000. facilities which are used solely for power amount to only $9,180,500, and facilities having a joint value between navigation and power, such as the fishways and the dam, amounted to $38,490,700. The allocation order of the Federal Power Commission further sets out that only $11,682,400 was initially allocated solely to power.

ENORMOUS UTILITY PROFITS

There is very little difference between the average residential rate of the State of Oregon and the rate applying in Washington, D. C. The Washington, D. C., average rate is about 11 percent higher than the average Oregon rate. The relatively low Oregon rate, compared to the national average, is largely due to the influence of the Eugene, Oreg., public plant, which with Tacoma has the lowest rates in the United States.

On July 27, 1937, I addressed this House on the subject of Utility Rates and Earnings in the District of Columbia. The District company in 1937, under the comparatively low average rates, earned 75 percent on the common stock because of official laxity in law enforcement. This is something the District Committee should investigate. It is easy to show that this company is earning around $4,000,000 annually more than the amount to which it is entitled by law. The law requires a sliding scale as to dividends and rates, but the local utility commission has neglected to enforce the dividend section.

The earnings of the local company have been so large since the consent decree that it has paid out $27,600,000 in dividends. It has impounded $12,800,000 in a reserve fund which has been charged to operating expenses, and has invested $41,200,000 in the property. All of these sums have come from the rate payer. Nearly 90 percent of the value of the local property, which amounts to some $73,800,000, has been taken from the rate payer in excess charges, even under rates materially lower than the other private utilities are charging.

The Federal and District Governments are paying annually, here in Washington, practically $460,000 in excess charges over a 10-percent dividend return on the common stock of the company, an amount illegally collected. No wonder Mr. Gadsden and his committee have tried to defeat every public power measure which has come before Congress. These selfish interests have only one purpose, and that is to freeze the water in their capital structures and to prevent the American electric consumer from knowing what it really costs to produce, transmit, and distribute electricity. The move on the part of these interests to defeat the pending Bonneville appropriation amounts to an effort to continue their right to pick the pockets of the electricity-consuming public. [Applause.]

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BLACKNEY].

Mr. BLACKNEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the committee for a few brief moments to one feature of this bill that I think shows clearly the policy of the American Government. Since the inception of our Government we have been vitally interested in the cause of education, and the very year that the Constitution of the United States was adopted the Ordinance of 1787 clearly set up our proposition with reference to education.

My own State of Michigan is known as one of the pioneer States of education. I am particularly interested, therefore, in the Department of Education, and particularly with reference to Howard University, because of the fact that in the State of Michigan many colored lawyers, doctors, and businessmen are graduates of that institution, and also because of the fact that the great majority of colored people in my district are vitally interested in the cause of education.

The appropriation for the salaries as given in this bill is $557,000, with general expenses of $188,000, or a total of $745,000 given by the Government to Howard University.

Now, what is Howard University? During the school year of 1866-67, with very meager equipment, with a handful of students, surrounded by an atmosphere of unfaith in the ability of the colored man to advance. Howard University was organized for the purpose of developing teachers to help that harassed and scattered race. Seventy-one years ago that was. Today Howard University is a university with 2,240 students enrolled. Those students are in the undergraduate, graduate, and professional schools of that university. They come from 42 States and 16 foreign countries. The university has an investment in excess of $9,000,000. They have 10,266 graduates who are now working in 43 States of the Union and in 24 foreign countries. They have a faculty which is the largest faculty of Negro educators in the entire world. Of those 10,266 graduates, 1,799 are doctors and surgeons, representing 48 percent of the total colored practitioners in medicine in the entire United States. Of that number 835 are dentists, which represents 49 percent of the colored dentists practicing in America. Of that number 1,210 are lawyers, which represents 96 percent of the colored lawyers practicing in America. Six hundred and six are teachers of religion. Five hundred and twenty-one are pharmacists. One hundred and forty are engineers and architects. One hundred and fifty-eight are in business or in finance. That is a record that any university could be proud of. The colored race has a right to be proud of Howard University. The people of America have a right to be proud of that university. In every colored population center of the United States are graduates of that university who are endeavoring to raise the standard of educational qualifications of the colored race.

When President Roosevelt in 1936 addressed the university at the time of the dedication of one of their new buildings he made the statement:

I have a special interest in Howard University because of the fact that the Government of the United States has a special relationship toward this institution.

That special relationship to which the President referred was passed by an act of Congress in March 1879, when the Congress that year made an appropriation of $10,000 for Howard University, knowing of the splendid work that that institution was doing. That has continued during the years, with a steadily increasing appropriation. [Applause.]

On December 13, 1928, both Houses of Congress passed and the President of the United States signed a bill amending the act incorporating Howard University so as to provide substantive law for appropriations thereto in language as follows:

Annual appropriations are hereby authorized to aid in the construction, development, improvement, and maintenance of the university, no part of which shall be used for religious instruction. The university shall at all times be open for inspection by the Bureau of Education and shall be inspected by the said Bureau at least once a year. An annual report, making a full exhibit of the affairs of the university, shall be presented to Congress each year in the report of the Bureau of Education.

As a result of this study a definite program to establish Howard University on a first-class basis was worked out in every detail, and a formulation of financial support, based upon the experience of the Government, was established and agreed upon by the experts of the Office of Education, the United States Commissioner of Education, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Subcommittee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives dealing with the Interior bill.

As a result of historical conditions beyond their control, the colored people in the United States stand in an abnormal relationship to the tax-supported educational institutions within the States of their major residence. They are not admitted to some State universities legally supported by State and Federal funds, and no separate universities are established from the public funds to serve them. All such institutions thus far established are of and below college grades.

As a result of this abnormal relationship there is a serious shortage of higher educational facilities for colored people in the United States. While they constitute one-tenth of the population of the Nation, they have less than one-fiftieth of the enrollment in colleges, universities, teachers colleges, and normal schools. For example, the entire income of all 79 institutions, public and private, ministering to the higher educational needs of this colored one-tenth of the population in 1926 was less than the expenditure of the University of Michigan for that year. This lack of adequate higher educational facilities translates itself into a serious shortage of competent services in matters fundamental to the life and development of the colored people, to the States of their residence, and to the Nation.

It means a serious shortage of competent primary- and high-school teachers, of physicians, nurses, dentists, pharmacists, architects, engineers, chemists, trained clergymen, and leaders of every kind. For example, while there is one physician and surgeon in the United States as a whole for approximately every 800 in the population, in the State of Mississippi there is 1 Negro surgeon for every 14,221 of the Negro population; in the State of South Carolina, 1 for every 11,846; in the entire group of South Atlantic States, 1 Negro physician for every 4,091 population.

Again, while in the United States there is 1 lawyer, judge, and justice for every 750 of the population, in the State of Georgia there is 1 lawyer for every 71,000 of the Negro population; in Alabama, 1 for every 236,000; in the entire group of Eastern South Central States, 1 Negro lawyer for every 43,578 of the Negro population.

Again, in the United States there is 1 dentist for every 1,700 of the population. In the State of Mississippi there is 1 Negro dentist for every 34,813 of its population; State of Louisiana, 1 for every 17,252. In the entire group of the South Central States there is 1 Negro dentist for every 14,686 of the Negro population.

Howard University exists to serve the urgent needs of this disadvantaged one-tenth of our population. It constitutes the only complete university organization in the United States, including undergraduates, graduates, and professional schools, ministering directly to the colored people,

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ALEXANDER] 1 minute.

A NEW NEUTRALITY ACT FOR JAPAN

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, though the question of neutrality is not up before the House today it was nevertheless brought to our attention very strongly yesterday afternoon by the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH1. His speech was unnecessarily violent, often beside the point, and in many cases misinterpreted history and facts. But above all, I, as a Republican, do not consent to the all-inclusiveness of his references, nor do I subscribe to his reading out of the long line of great Republican statesmen the name of Henry L. Stimson. In repudiating Mr. Stimson as a great Republican statesman, the gentleman from New York must also, if he is to be consistent, repudiate such great American figures as William McKinley, John Hay, Elihu Root, Theodore Roosevelt, and Charles Evans Hughes, who held the same view in their day. Mr. Stimson carries on the traditions of these great Republican forebears and it is in an unfortunate way simply confusing the issues facing the American people today to attack him and a Democratic President for continuing these traditions. Due to the serious international situation, it is unfortunate that the gentleman from New York has seen fit to echo the dastardly self-serving, facesaving words of Hitler, Mussolini, and some of the more rabid militarists in Japan when he accuses President Roosevelt of being a war monger and a man whose chief aim is to draw the American people in a war against aggressor nations. He even went so far as to bring up the thought of impeachment. Now, whatever policy Congress adopts in collaboration with the American people, it seems to me we must, above all things, present a common and united front. Nothing, absolutely nothing, gives the aggressor nations so much courage as to be able to point out to their own people through their controlled press and radio that the American people are disunited and are cowardly in the face of strong-arm methods abroad in the world today. What we need, rather, is to stand firm in the face of these conditions, much like "Teddy" Roosevelt did in his heyday.

The gentleman from New York accuses the President of having failed to enforce an act of Congress. That, I think, can be denied very definitely. Though the Sino-Japanese conflict can be interpreted as a state of war, nevertheless, it has not yet been openly declared to be such by any nation. This conflict is one of many similar conflicts which have been raging throughout the world since 1931.

If we were to apply the Neutrality Act every time a gun was shot off by one nation against another for one reason or another, we would today have business dealings with only a very small section of the world. The gentleman from New York knows as well as I do that this Neutrality Act was enacted specifically with an eye toward Europe in 1935, first in the Ethiopian conquest by Italy and then in the Spanish conflict starting in 1936. The inconsistency of the act is as he himself admits not due to any misinterpretation of it by our Government, but because it was designed for one purpose, and one use only-in Europe-and has since become inadequate to handle our new foreign affairs and the new problems presenting themselves since 1937 in the Far East. Since he expresses a willingness to modify or repeal it in favor of legislation more suitable to the needs of today, is not it beside the point to rehash the inconsistency of the act as well as to muddle the water in which we must now trace a new course in an effort to protect the best interests of the American people?

The gentleman from New York stated that our present Neutrality Act, if applied, would have hurt Japan more than China. That conclusion is incorrect. Since shipments of raw materials and machinery to Japan cannot be embargeed under the act its application would hurt China a lot more than Japan, which is a nation with very large and effective munitions industries. Some figures at this point make some very interesting reading. The total exports from America to Japan for the 2 years 1937 and 1938 come to the figure of $528,133,000. No other nation has sold nearly as much material to Japan during this period. In 1937 we supplied Japan with 54.4 percent of its war material imports as against 17.5 for the British Empire. Though the percentage is large. the actual total sum covering finished munitions is small, there being somewhat over seven and one-half million dollars for 1937, and it will probably total in the neighborhood of a similar sum for 1938. These purchases of American-finished munitions represent a small fraction of Japan's total purchases from the United States. The reverse is true of China. Its purchases of munitions is a very large percentage of the total imports from us.

This is important, in view of the provisions of the Neutrality Act. That act, if enforced, would embargo exports of finished munitions, and thus hurt China. It would not at all embargo the huge quantities of essential war materials which Japan buys in the hundreds of millions of dollars. Japan has the machinery with which to convert these raw materials into finished munitions, and Japanese control of the seas and its ownership of a large merchant marine can overcome cash-and-carry features, whereas China would be hopelessly lost. It would be prevented from buying any munitions at all, and it would not have the cash nor the ships nor the factories with which to make use of our raw materials. Thus Japan would go on buying the war materials it most needs, while China would be deprived of the finished munitions which she needs most. In addition, the present Neutrality Act would embargo American credits, which are much more likely to be advanced to China than Japan. Thus we are using our economic strength, on the one hand, to build a great navy with which to defend our rights to trade freely with any nation we like, while, at the same time, we are using this strength to equip a nation which is continuing to threaten this very right to the freedom of the seas. In fact, we are her partner in her action of lawless aggression, while we play politics under our present Neutrality Act, made solely for use in Europe.

It is a strange paradox that those who attack the administration's foreign policy most severely are at the same time the most vocal opponents of relief expenditures and Government participation in our economic life. I do not say that we should do the latter, but they fail to see that such Government participation must increase as we continue to permit aggressor nations to limit our world trade more and more. There is a great connection between our foreign policy and our internal policy. One cannot be discussed intelligently without the other. I hope the gentleman from New York and those who applauded him will consider these two questions with the seriousness which they deserve, and not cover them with slander, violent language, and the denial of the best traditions of our Nation.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein a copy of some remarks made yesterday over the Columbia Broadcasting System by myself.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 8 minutes to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. WHITE].

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, I wish more Members could have been on the floor to hear the able presentation of the monetary system and fiscal policy made by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. OLIVER] and the gentleman from California [Mr. Voornis]. There is a great drive now on to tighten the interest load on the American people. The economists of the country, some 68, are making a determined effort to scuttle forever the silver-purchasing policy and tighten the interest rate on the American people, all of whom are staggering now under the heaviest interest load the country was ever called upon to bear.

Mr. Chairman and members of the Committee, the opponents of the national administration's silver-purchase program are vociferous in their denunciation of one of the most constructive and profitable money programs that the Treasury of the United States has ever put into operation—the only monetary program on which the Government is making a profit today.

The members of the self-constituted Economists National Committee on Monetary Control have come out with a pronouncement against silver signed by 68 economists, which I insert herewith in the RECORD.

Insert herewith in the Record.

From December 21, 1933, to date the Federal administration, by Presidential proclamation, has been fixing the prices to be paid to domestic producers of silver. These prices have ranged from 64.64 cents to 77.57 cents per fine ounce. Under this system of arbitrary Government price fixing our silver producers have been receiving large subsidies. Their size is determined by the pleasure or discretion of the administration. The present price paid for domestic silver is 64.64 cents per fine ounce, and represents a subsidy of approximately 50 percent above the prevailing world price of silver.

Since the effectiveness of the proclamation which fixes the present price of domestically produced silver expires on December 31 of this year, we, the undersigned members of the Economists' National Committee on Monetary Policy, urge that the prevailing policy of subsidizing our silver producers be discontinued. We urge its discontinuance in the interests of a sounder currency and the general welfare. It is particularly undesirable to leave to the discretion of any administration the question of what the price of silver and consequently what the subsidy to our silver producers shall be.

We also recommend, in the interests of a sounder currency and the public welfare, the repeal of the Silver Purchase Act of 1934, which is diluting and weakening our currency structure with overvalued and inflated silver and silver certificates.

These students and teachers of finance and political economy doubtless have a profound knowledge of economic law and must be familiar with the economic history and development of the several national monetary systems and more especially with the monetary system of the United States.

In their communication they "recommend in the interests of a sounder currency and the public welfare the repeal of the Silver Purchase Act of 1934 which is diluting and weakening our currency structure." Now, in considering the recommendations of these eminent gentlemen in connection with the recent financial history of the United States, I am sure it has been clearly demonstrated to the entire satisfaction of most everyone, with the possible exception of these 68 economists on whose advice much of the past monetary legislation was devised and enacted into law, that our money system has signally failed to meet the requirements of the American people in the conduct of their business. Due to this failure the country has been plunged into one of the most disastrous financial depressions of its history, a depression from which we have not as yet recovered. Through most of the Hoover administration and all of the succeeding administrations the Congress and the National Government, in an effort to remedy these conditions have devised and put into operation a series of banking and credit expedients which are only substitutes for a sound and adequate currency.

These attempts to remedy the defects in our banking and monetary system have met with little success, and now business finds itself in a condition in which the influence of big bankers and their zealous servants, the so-called economists, are largely responsible, with the result that we are struggling with a system that has laid an unbearable interest load on the American people as the price of operating their-the people's-monetary system with Federal Reserve currency.

When this system failed with such disastrous consequences in the recent depression and it was demonstrated so clearly that it was necessary to strengthen our financial structure by broadening the metallic base of our redeemable currency by adding silver to the money volume and thus relieve the strain on gold and obviate the necessity of revaluing the dollar-when we were in a fair way at last to give the country a sound, workable, adequate money system by the remonetization of silver, the bankers and their helpful economists stepped in to save their precious interest yield and their prerogative to expand and contract the currency and thereby control prices and instead of remonetizing silver to place our currency on a sound foundation of money redeemable in gold and silver which would have created a stable dollar with which to measure values, a dollar that would remain constant in its purchasing and debt-paying power. The influence of these so-called economists prevailed and the people were given a new artifice by the statute which created the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, an instrumentality to draw on the collective credit of the American people through the taxing power of Congress to finance loans to individuals and business organizations, thereby salvaging the interest yield of the bankers from the threat of the remonetization of silver and the creation of a sound currency.

What is the Reconstruction Finance Corporation? In the first place it is a poor substitute for bimetallism; in the second place it is the greatest reservoir ever created for the storage of wealth out of reach of taxation, a Government facility which relieves the financiers and capitalists of the risk and expense of lending their money and collecting the interest and principal, an agency that absorbs through the medium of tax-exempt securities the bulk of the money available for investment and forces business and industry to turn more and more to the Government for the necessary money to finance its operations.

Let us remember that this system, this substitute, has the approval and acclaim of these eminent economists, 68 leaders of financial thought in this country—and how has this system worked?

The people through their Government have lost on one class of R. F. C. loans, to say nothing of the Dawes grab of $90,000,000, and the class of loans that includes the ministration to the railroads. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation has canceled under authority of legislation enacted by Congress over $2,500,000,000 in R. F. C. loans, to be exact as stated in a letter from Chairman Jones under date of February 13, 1939:

In response to your inquiry of February 3, 1939, we wish to advise that as at the close of business January 31, 1939, the Secretary of the Treasury had canceled Reconstruction Finance Corporation notes aggregating $2,699,236,945.83, pursuant to Public Act 432, Seventy-fifth Congress, approved February 24, 1938.

Just a small item in the staggering price the American people are paying for a faulty and unworkable monetary system. Do these eminent economists and the American people want further proof of the advantages of the "sounder currency," the brain child of these economists, a currency system that made necessary the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the expedient that blocked the remonetization of silver, which would have relieved the greatest money shortage in relation to the needs of the people this country ever experienced.

As these eminent gentlemen have raised the question of silver in our currency system, it might be well to point out to them the essential difference in the mechanics of creating and circulating Federal Reserve notes not redeemable in coin and silver certificates redeemable in silver dollars and explain the difference between the cost in the form of a continuing interest charge attached to the issuance and circulation of the kind of money they advocate, Federal Reserve notes, legal tender currency, and the profit the Government makes on the issuance and circulation of silver certificates and the saving in interest to the American people by the use of this kind of money, legal tender silver certificates, free of a continuing interest charge.

Now how are Federal Reserve notes created and placed in circulation? To get this money—Federal Reserve notes and place it in circulation in the channels of trade and business, people engaged in business must borrow money from a bank on short-term interest-bearing obligationseligible paper-which in turn must be guaranteed by the lending bank and rediscounted by the Federal Reserve bank to secure the issuance of Federal Reserve notes equal to the amount of the promissory note-eligible paper-deposited with the Federal Reserve bank as security. By this operation business must pay current rates of interest on every dollar of money in the form of Federal Reserve noteslegal tender money-that is placed in circulation and as long as it is kept in circulation, and the businessman must pass this item of interest as part of the cost of doing business on to the customer.

Now how are silver certificates created and issued into circulation? The Treasury buys domestically mined silver at 64.64 cents per ounce and immediately issues silver certificates at $1.29½ per ounce against this silver, making a 100-percent profit on the transaction, and buys foreign silver at 43 cents per ounce and makes a profit of 200 percent by placing the silver in circulation in the form of silver certificates—money that is placed in the channels of trade and business by the Government interest-free in paying current expenses.

As an example of how this money—silver certificates—is placed in circulation, it is interesting to note that Members of Congress and their clerical help in cashing pay checks at the Disbursing Office in the Capitol are paid in brand new silver certificates which they proceed to put into circulation. Let us examine the facts concerning this money—silver certificates—"which is diluting and weakening our currency structure." Silver certificates is the only paper money which we have which is redeemable in coin and, as a matter of record, most of the silver, as fast as it is acquired, is put into circulation as money, as is evinced by the daily statement of the Treasury, the amount of silver certificates increasing day by day as silver is purchased.

Consulting the daily balance sheet of the Treasury of December 22, 1937, 1 year before the release of this pronouncement, under the heading "Silver," we find there was $1,436,359,530.10 in silver on hand against which there was in circulation in the form of silver certificates and Treasury notes of 1890 $1,392,303,346, and on November 22, 1938, 30 days before the release of this pronouncement, we find there was $1,603,827,604.29 in silver in this account and that the silver certificates and Treasury notes of 1890 in circulation against this silver was $1,574,972,353. Thirty days later, on December 22, 1938, the day of this release, there was $1,629,983,167.79 in silver in this account and the currency in circulation against this silver in the form of silver certificates and Treasury notes of 1890 was $1,582,363,371, showing an increase of $7,391,018 in new currency placed in circulation in the month preceding the release of this pronouncement against silver.

Now concerning the recommendation of these 68 eminent economists, "in the interests of a sounder currency by repealing the Silver Purchase Act of 1934, which is diluting and weakening our currency structure," let us consider the soundness of each kind of money.

Silver certificates are redeemable in silver dollars and are backed 100 percent with silver bullion valued at the cost price of the bullion to the Government for every silver certificate in circulation. Federal Reserve notes are not redeemable in coin and the law requires only a 40-percent gold coveragegold, that it is illegal to use as money. The advantage of using this kind of money-Federal Reserve notes-we are told, is "that when business gets slow and currency piles up in the bank, it—the local bank—goes to the Federal Reserve bank and pays back the currency it secured and redeems its collateral—reducing commercial loans. The Federal Reserve currency is then retired." It should be apparent that this is just the trouble with their system. The difficulty is to get the banks to create and issue this money again when neededat times when it is most needed—as business learned to its sorrow in 1929.

Do these eminent educators seriously contend that the kind of money that goes out of existence when business slows up is better than the kind of money that remains on deposit to be withdrawn and put to work at the will of its owner? Do they believe that business and employment is made more secure by the monetary system dependent for its creation and circulation on banking conditions and "confidence" of the banker in making loans on future business conditions and the ability of the applicant to repay the principal with interest? Do they believe that this kind of currency is better than silver certificates redeemable in silver dollars, which are permanent in their existence and remain the property of the owner to be put to use whenever wanted?

Surely a billion and a half dollars of silver certificates—legal-tender money—is an invaluable stabilizing influence in the Nation's monetary system. These eminent gentlemen are concerned about "a sounder currency." Let them explain what was wrong with the currency and the Federal Reserve banking system in 1929 and why it was necessary to bolster this perfected banking system with the financing operations of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation; and let them explain the circumstances that plunged the country, with all its resources and facilities for production and distribution, $44,000,000,000 in debt, with an annual interest charge which all the money we have in the form of silver certificates would hardly pay the interest on for 1 year.

In their solicitude for a sounder currency have they—these economists—taken into account what the failure of this undiluted currency has contributed to existing business contions, unemployment, and public debt? Can all the 68 compute the loss suffered by the American people resulting from our faulty, defective, and unworkable monetary systems?

Have these disinterested (?) economists in their zeal for "the general welfare" considered the real motive behind this opposition to the Government's silver policy? Do not they know it is the simple matter of collecting interest by the banks on the money in circulation?

We have today $1,599,577,227 in interest-free silver certificates in circulation which these 68 economists want us to retire "in the interest of a sounder currency," to be replaced by Federal Reserve notes—money that must be supported while it is in circulation by interest-bearing commercial paper or Government bonds which would yield the banks in interest computed at 3 percent, $47,987,316.61; but we all know that current rates of interest on business notes is more than 3 percent. If we calculate the interest at 6 percent, then the Federal Reserve notes which would replace the silver certificates now in circulation would yield the bankers $95,974,633.22—$96,000,000 every year flowing to the banks out of the pockets of the American people as the price of keeping this billion and one-half dollars in circulation when we are already paying an interest-carrying charge on the bulk of the money now in circulation; that is, Federal Reserve notes and Federal Reserve bank notes.

According to the Treasury statement of January 31, 1939, this currency in circulation amounted to $4,707,729,936, on which the interest, computed at 6 percent, is $282,473,796.16—a charge which business must raise every year and pay as interest to keep this money in the channels of trade and business.

In addition to this interest load, we are paying a service charge on $44,000,000,000,000 of public debt. We must carry this load "in the interests of a sounder currency and general welfare"—whose welfare, the American people's or the American banker's? Is there no limit to the tax and interest load that these 68 eminent economists would lay on the backs of the American people?

Let me say of these disinterested(?), learned, and eminent economists that there can be no permanent prosperity in this country until our Government devises and gives to the American people an adequate, workable monetary system free of a continuing interest charge; and when the Government sets about doing this thing, let us thrust aside self-seeking bankers and financiers, and the Lord deliver us from the advice of political economists. [Applause.]

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURDOCK].

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, reference was made during debate on this bill today to the situation of the Navajo Indians of Arizona and New Mexico. I want to defend the appropriation carried in this bill for these Indians.

Let me point out that the Navajos are increasing in numbers rapidly. Some 10 or 12 years ago they were fairly well fixed individually. The Navajos are a seminomadic people who live on their flocks and herds. They weave the remarkable Navajo rugs, of which there is no superior and few equals in all the fabrics known to man. These people have been crowded into an area which one of my colleagues referred to as a God-forsaken country. At the present time it may look like a God-forsaken country, but I must remind you that there was once a time, before the coming of the white man, when that high plateau, in fact, the whole region round about the place where the four States corner—I have reference to Utah, Colorado, New Mexico, and Arizona-that whole region was the home of prehistoric men. It was populated with a teeming population. Only their ruins now attract our attention and cause us to wonder how it happened that prehistoric men, probably coming from Asia by way of Alaska, having the whole North American Continent on which to locate and make their homes, should have located where they did. These prehistoric men disappeared because they were unable to build the great engineering projects to conserve water which modern man has undertaken.

I am not speaking of the Salt River Valley in which I live, nor the Gila Valley nearby; I am talking of the barren plateau region on which the seminomadic Navajo Indians now reside. They have overgrazed it; yes, and they must reduce their stock; but there is a limit to how much they can reduce and live.

I tell you, Mr. Chairman, we must, in the name of humanity and fairness to the American Indian, especially the Navajos, do something to protect them, not as a vanishing race but as an increasing race of people who have something to contribute even to our cultural life, and particularly to our industrial life. This latter remark applies to the Hopi Indians who live in that region, as well as to the Navajos, only that the Hopi contribution is relatively greater. So I do not feel that the committee has wastefully appropriated anything in this bill; nor has the Indian Bureau spent too much money for these Navajos in the past. The Navajo Indians, in my opinion, constitute economic problem No. 1 for the Bureau of Indian Affairs to solve, and I trust that we shall have the right spirit in dealing with them. The appropriation asked for to continue work on the dam on the Colorado River at Parker, Ariz., is intended to be a distinct aid to the Navajo Indians, as well as to the Mohave Indians. Do not let the distance of this dam from the Navajo Reservation confuse your minds as to its benefits.

This dam being built at Parker will provide water for about 100,000 acres of good land. This is an enlargement of an early Arizona irrigation project built for the Indians in the early days of Arizona Territory. It is a most commendable project and must be carried forward as planned. [Applause.]

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the Delegate from Alaska [Mr. DIMOND].

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Chairman, I had hoped to be able to secure at least 20 minutes in order to tell the Committee something about the reindeer of Alaska and about the proposal to buy the non-native-owned reindeer and the distribution of them amongst the natives. It is obviously impossible to put the facts before the Committee in 2 minutes, and I rather detest the idea of extending remarks in the RECORD, because, after all, I do not know how many of the Members of this House are going to read them. In the limited time allotted to me, however, let me say that my only present request to you is to read the report of the special committee that investigated the entire subject of the reindeer of Alaska during the past summer, a committee chosen by the chairmen of the Appropriations Committees of the House and Senate and consisting of Dr. Wilson of Virginia; Mr. Reeds, of Colorado; and Mr. Rachford, who is employed by the Forest Service in Washington, D. C.

This committee unanimously, decisively, and definitely recommended that the non-native-owned reindeer of Alaska be purchased and that the same be held in trust for the natives or distributed among them. There is not any doubt about the nature of the inquiry they made nor the conclusions they reached. This was a committee composed not of employees of the Government generally or of administrative officers but a committee representing in reality the House and Senate of the United States. Their whole story is in the Record, and that story demonstrates why the reindeer ought to be bought, how the Government and how the people of the United States will benefit if the plan is carried out.

There is so much that can be said upon the subject a good deal of time would be required to say it all, but now I ask that you read the record of the hearings with respect to this subject.

Mr. Chairman, it is impossible to get an adequate grasp of this question unless one knows something of the history of the introduction and use of reindeer in Alaska. The statement of the matter contained in the hearings is brief, but I shall try to further summarize it.

When the white men first came to the shores of northern Alaska, the Eskimo population was much larger than at the present time. The Eskimos were not only more numerous but life was for them not particularly harsh, despite the climate, because they had available an ample supply of food in the walrus and seals and whales of the ocean and in the caribou on land. But the white visitors, here as elsewhere, soon changed all of that. They killed almost indiscriminately both the sea and the land animals until in the 1880's the natives were confronted with extinction through lack of food. Many of them died. One might say that they died of starvation, but the eminent correspondent of the New York Times in Russia, Walter Duranty, used a different term. As related by Eugene Lyons, when 4,000,000 of the peasants of Russia, by reason of the policy of the National Government, met death from lack of food, Mr. Duranty reported that there had been no starvation but that some of them had died from malnutrition. And so I suppose we can say that large numbers of Eskimos in the decade before 1890 passed away from mulnutrition.

A distinguished Presbyterian missionary, Dr. Sheldon Jackson, conceived the idea of bringing reindeer from Siberia to replace the nearly exterminated caribou of northwestern Alaska and thus provide a food supply for the Eskimos as well as a source of clothing. Dr. Jackson managed to impress his views upon the Government, and so between 1890 and 1902 approximately 1,280 reindeer were brought from Siberia and landed on the coast of northwestern Alaska. From those

1,280 have come the present herds which the special committee appointed by the chairmen of the Appropriations Committees of the House and Senate estimates to now number about 500,000

For many years after the reindeer were brought to Alaska the use made of them was in all respects excellent. A highly competent man, imbued with the deep sense of the obligations of public service, and devoted to the welfare of the Eskimos, William Thomas Lopp was in charge of the Alaska Reindeer Service. Laplanders, experienced in reindeer care and herding, were brought from Europe to teach the Eskimos how to handle the deer. As the deer increased in number a number of herds were established and these herds were constantly cared for by the Eskimos under the supervisions of the Laps and under the general charge of Mr. Lopp and his assistants. It is important to note that the reindeer were herded at all times, just as has been the custom in northern Europe and Asia for centuries. The deer really became domesticated and were used not only as a supply of food and clothing, but also to serve as transport animals, particularly in the winter. A well-trained and healthy reindeer can travel an almost incredible distance with very little food.

In 1914, or about that time, white men first purchased reindeer, so far as I am aware. The natives were doing so well with the reindeer that some of the white residents thought they could see in reindeer possibility of a great industry. Mr. Lopp consistently and continuously opposed, so far as he was able, the acquisition and ownership of deer by any but the natives. But he was overruled by the authorities at Washington, and so the white men's herds became more numerous through purchase and through natural increase. Finally, in the early 1920's, Mr. Lopp was removed from office without any statement having been made of the cause of his removal.

About the same time the Government officials in charge of the reindeer in Alaska advised the natives that herding of the reindeer was not necessary, and so, at the instance of the Government authorities, the natives gradually abandoned herding and permitted the reindeer to run on the range without guard or care. Attempts were made yearly to round up the reindeer and to earmark them in accordance with ownership. Left unherded, the reindeer of the various herds soon strayed and mixed, and in time the intermingling of the herds was so great as to cause much confusion. Moreover, the deer owned by white men were intermingled with the deer of the natives, and sharp disputes and conflicts arose at the times of the round-up as to the ownership of many deer. The intensity of that conflict has developed and increased with the passing years until at the present time on the reindeer ranges of northwestern Alaska the condition existing was aptly described by one of the witnesses before the subcommittee as being little better than chaos.

The point to be noted here is that existing conditions with regard to Alaska reindeer, conditions which have made many of us who have given intense study to the subject believe that the only satisfactory solution of the problem can be attained through the purchase of the non-native-owned deer by the Government, are the direct and sole result of the act of the Government itself in reversing the herding policy set up with so much pains and care by Mr. Lopp and his assistants, and in establishing the policy of no herding, thus turning the reindeer loose in the thousands and thousands of square miles of reindeer pasture in northwestern Alaska without any adequate protection or supervision.

The reindeer are blood brothers of the caribou and, in fact, at times they are in appearance almost indistinguishable. The only substantial difference is that the caribou cannot be domesticated but the reindeer can. If the reindeer are left long untended and uncared for, they soon become practically as wild as caribou and they readily intermingle with the caribou herds. So to turn the reindeer out on the range without herding was "worse than a crime, it was a mistake," a mistake which the Government authorities should have known to be a mistake when they fired Tom Lopp from the service and advised the natives that no more herding of reindeer was necessary or advisable.

Another evil resulted from the no-herding policy, or lack of policy. As long as reindeer are herded, the herders can protect them from wolves and coyotes. Without herding there is no such protection. Accordingly, since herding has been abandoned the wolves of northwestern Alaska have largely increased in number and the coyotes have entered that part of the country, and between the wolves and coyotes the reindeer are being slaughtered by the thousands. The Eskimos tell me that a wolf is fastidious in his eating, and that when reindeer are plentiful a pair of wolves will kill as many as 100 deer, eating only the tongues of the animals slaughtered. From careful and comprehensive reports made of the entire area, it is clear that many of the reindeer, through the attacks of the wolves, are being driven from the usual feeding grounds eastward to the region where the caribou range, and thus there is grave danger that many of them will mingle with the caribou and be lost to the natives, except as they may hunt them in the distant parts of Alaska as they would hunt any other wild animals.

The native Eskimos of Alaska are a simple and generous and kindly people. An Eskimo will share his last bit of food, not only with the members of his family but with his neighbors and even with a casual stranger who may visit him. Their charity and generosity are carried to extreme lengths. Moreover, the Eskimos have only lately come under civilizing influences and many of them to this day live a relatively simple and primitive life. It is not to be expected that without assistance they can or will resume herding of the reindeer or preserve the reindeer as domestic animals. An excellent start was made in their training under Mr. Lopp, but most of the results of that training have been lost by the neglect and incompetency of the Government in failing to carry out the policy of herding originally established. Moreover, the natives resent, and bitterly resent, the idea that they should herd the white men's deer and care for them in order to herd and care for their own. And that is precisely what they would have to do at the present time because the herds are so intermingled as to make permanent separation all but impossible. The results that will eventually flow from the present do-nothing policy are inevitable, the reindeer will be partly killed by the predatory animals, and partly will they be driven to join the caribou herd, so that in another two decades or perhaps even a shorter time reindeer, as such, will be all but unknown in Alaska save for the few small herds which are now being adequately herded and taken care of. The Eskimos will be deprived of their principal supply of food and clothing and their principal source of income derived from the sale of reindeer meat and skins and clothing made from the skins. The Government will then have the alternative of either feeding the natives or permitting them to die from what Walter Duranty called malnutrition. The ultimate effects of the present policy, which is in reality a lack of policy, is indicated in the statement of Mr. J. Sydney Rood, acting reindeer superintendent, as follows:

But unless the herds are constantly tended they will gradually disappear. In 1932 the Kivalina Reindeer Co. corralled 42,000 deer; in 1934, 38,000; 15,000 in 1936; only 12,000 in 1937. In 1935 the Selawik corral count was 12,778, whereas in 1937 only 2,722 deer were corralled. At the Kivalina marking of this month the fawn increase was found to be only 10 percent; at Koyuk during July, the fawn increase was only 7.3 percent; the Egavik marking of September showed a fawn increase of one-half percent. Poor success of round-ups and heavy fawn loss is due to the deer being untended while glaciation covers large spots of pasture, to wolf depredations, to the wildness of the reindeer, etc.

After intensive study of the subject it seemed to me, as to others, that the only completely satisfactory solution of the problem would be brought about through the purchase by the Government of the non-native-owned reindeer. Doubtless the Government could adopt measures with respect to the non-native-owned deer that would eventually dispose of them, but those measures could not in morals be well distinguished from confiscation. In this Chamber I have heard passionate denunciation of one policy or another of this Government or of foreign governments which were said to result in confiscation. Particularly do I have in mind the speeches that have been made about the effects of the development of Tennessee Valley. No one, I assume, thinks it right or even expedient to confiscate the property of any citizen either directly or indirectly, and so with respect to the non-native-owned reindeer of Alaska I suggest that if anything at all is to be done we have the simple choice of either purchase or confiscation.

It is plain that the Seventy-fifth Congress resolved in favor of purchase and against confiscation, because that Congress passed, and the President, on September 1, 1937, approved the so-called Reindeer Act, which was rightly entitled as an act to "provide subsistence for the Eskimos and other natives of Alaska by establishing for them a permanent and self-sustaining economy; to encourage and develop native activity in all branches of the reindeer industry *

In this act the Secretary of the Interior was not only authorized but he was directed to acquire by purchase or other lawful means, including the exercise of the power of eminent domain, for and on behalf of the Eskimos and other natives of Alaska the reindeer and appurtenant equipment described in the act. The act mentioned was passed under a rule of the House after full debate and after adoption by the House of one or more amendments and consideration of other proposed amendments. Not a Member of the House, so far as I am aware, was then in ignorance of all relevant facts concerning the reindeer of Alaska. The same arguments against the project which have been heard on the floor of the House today were made against the reindeer bill in August 1937. But the House, nevertheless, passed the bill which had theretofore been passed by the Senate and the Senate concurred in the House amendments.

At the time the reindeer bill was under consideration in the House I was not entirely satisfied with the language of the bill as reported by the House Committee on Territories, and I proposed several amendments, one, at least, of which was adopted, and others were rejected. But the act, as passed, had my full approval, and I personally urged the President to sign it. Like most legislation enacted by Congress and by State and Territorial legislatures, it is likely that the Reindeer Act is still susceptible to some improvement, but, in my judgment, it is highly satisfactory and workable, and the policy and intent of Congress therein expressed should be followed through without delay by the appropriation of the money carried in the bill now under consideration for the purchase of reindeer and equipment and for the establishment of the ultimately self-sustaining native reindeer industry.

When the Interior Department appropriation bill for the current fiscal year was under consideration by the House Appropriations subcommittee I appeared before the subcommittee and urged inclusion in the bill of the sum of $1,000,-000 to carry out the purposes of the Reindeer Act, that amount having been set up in the estimate of the Bureau of the Budget. However, the subcommittee and the full committee declined to make an appropriation at that time, and so, as a result, the bill passed the House with an appropriation of $25,000 for a special investigation of the reindeer of Alaska. The Senate, when the bill reached that body, sought an appropriation of $500,000 for the purposes specified in the Reindeer Act, but in conference the Senate receded from its amendment, and so, as finally passed, the fiscal 1939 Interior Department appropriation bill carried $25,000 for investigation of reindeer but nothing for the purchase of non-nativeowned deer. Later an additional $25,000 was appropriated for the same purpose.

You all have heard of the appointment of the special committee by the chairmen of the House and Senate Appropriations Committees, consisting of Messrs. C. E. Rachford, chairman; I. D. Wilson, and Frank H. Reeds, all eminent and capable men. This committee, as I have stated before, represented the Congress of the United States and did not represent the executive branch of the Government. That committee made a thorough, careful, and painstaking investigation of everything in Alaska relating to reindeer, by far the most thorough and complete inquiry that had ever been made of the subject by anyone not connected with the executive branch of the Government.

That committee, as I have stated, has reported unanimously and without qualification that the will of Congress, as expressed in the Reindeer Act, should be completely carried out and fulfilled. It was suggested in the debate here today that the committee simply took the Reindeer Act as its mandate and did not consider or report upon the advisability of the purchase of the non-native-owned deer and equipment. However, the report of the committee, which appears in the hearings from page 572 to page 595, indicates beyond question that the committee did carefully consider whether it was advisable to carry out the Reindeer Act, for on pages 581 and 582 we find the following:

The investigation has proved to the satisfaction of the committee that the Federal Government now has one or two alternatives:

that the Federal Government now has one or two alternatives:

(1) It may allow things to go as they are; that is, paying only indifferent attention to the herds and to the range. This trend will inevitably lead to the total elimination of the reindeer, as the caribou were eliminated in the early days.

(2) The Government can develop the necessary organization and administration; and provide the needed regulations which will put the raising of reindeer on a thoroughly sound and productive basis for the use of the natives.

Let us consider the alternatives. The adoption of the first would

Let us consider the alternatives. The adoption of the first would, of course, be the simplest, but it would also be the most destructive policy conceivable, if viewed from the standpoint of the needs of valuable resources and of native life. It would be a backward step from the very progressive and constructive beginning of the reindeer industry. To the committee, therefore, it is unthinkable that the Government should adopt any other course than that of adequate administration.

It will be noted that the continuation of the do-nothing policy, which is urged by the opponents of the appropriation, is characterized by the committee as "the most destructive policy conceivable, if viewed from the standpoint of the needs of valuable resources and of native life." The committee considered it "unthinkable" that the Government should adopt any other course than that of adequate administration. The committee also advised, as will be seen from a reading of the report, that to allow things to go on as they are "will inevitably lead to the total elimination of the reindeer." It is plain that the report of the committee merits not only consideration but unhesitating belief. This committee constituted the eyes and the ears of Congress to report to Congress not only the facts found but the conclusions of the committee, conclusions inescapable to anyone who has given adequate study to the subject on the ground.

The suggestion has also been made in debate by those who oppose the appropriation that the committee did not report any need for the reindeer, approximately 180,000 in number, owned by nonnatives. That suggestion is contradicted by the testimony of a member of the committee, appearing in the hearings on page 607, as follows:

The entire number of deer in that particular area included in both native and nonnative ownership is hardly adequate to supply the needs of the population in that area, and especially is that true when all of the natives do not secure the meat and hides necessary for their food and clothing on that peninsula.

Mr. Rachford. Congressman, on that point I think I emphasized at fact that all of the natives are not getting the deer and hides that they need.

Further along Mr. Rachford, chairman of the committee. in answer to a question propounded to him, showed the need by the natives of all of the deer, including those owned by others than natives, in the following language:

The answer is the 320,000 reindeer owned by natives are not distributed over the Alaskan Territory in a proportion best suited to meet the needs of all of the natives. The ranges occupied by nonmeet the needs of all of the natives. The ranges occupied by nonnative owners, furthermore, are in most instances the most desirable in that they are close to the coast, where a comparatively large number of natives are dependent upon the range and reindeer for subsistence. The ranges occupied by nonnatives, in other words, are the more strategic ones from the standpoint of developing a selfsustained economy for the natives. A further reason lies in the fact that because of lack of attention during the past 7 or 8 years, the herds have become badly mixed; and each of the ranges which has heretofore been occupied by the reindeer of nonnative owners is now occupied by reindeer coming from various other ranges and belonging to natives. For example, in the round-up held by the committee at Teller there were reindeer from eight other ranges, some of which were 150 miles away from the Teller range. The Teller range is, of course, now considered a native range.

In the Golovin round-up, July 20 to 24, 1938, reindeer belonging to the Deering Native Reindeer Association were found to have drifted from the Deering range to the Golovin range across what is known as the upper Koyuk range.

On the Egavik range reindeer belonging to the Koyuk Reindeer Co. were found to have drifted a distance of about 100 miles. The mixing of herds makes it practically impossible to secure management. There is constant friction and controversy between natives and nonnatives. Failure to agree on round-ups and distribution of costs is also a cause of friction. The large expense to the natives of rounding up the total number of animals, coupled with a lack of control as to the number of animals that may be taken off, presents an impossible situation from the standpoint of private ownership. The mixing of herds results in a lack of attention. The inability of the natives to pay costs of management, inevitably please the

The mixing of herds results in a lack of attention. The inability of the natives to pay costs of management inevitably places the herds at the mercy of various hazards, such as woives, illegal killing, straying, and drifting into native caribou herds; and if this condition is continued, it will mean the total extinction of the reindeer. From the facts obtained it is, therefore, certain that the reindeer in Alaska must be handled as a unit and management perfected accordingly.

With Government ownership of a large number of reindeer and the direction and supervision which this ownership naturally entails, the Government can direct, educate, and train the natives in the best management practices and develop self-government among the natives in a gradual cooperative way. It is not beyond a reasonable hope that eventually the natives will have been trained in business and management to the point where they can take over the entire administration of their properties, and in this process the Government could distribute its reindeer to those who do not now have them.

It has further been urged by an opponent of the appropriation that nearly all of the Eskimos have reindeer at the present time, and therefore the purchase of 180,000 for the few Eskimo families who have no deer would be frivolous and wasteful. To one who knows the facts that argument is entirely without weight because it is based upon false assumptions. The facts are that the additional reindeer are required for the use, not only of Eskimos, but of other natives of Alaska, Aleuts, and Indians, who are equally in need of reindeer. Last fall I traveled for nearly a thousand miles along the Alaska Peninsula and in the Aleutian Islands, and almost everywhere in that region the natives begged me to obtain some reindeer for them. Most of them have no deer at the present time. In fact, I found only one small herd in the entire journey; a herd located near Alitak, on Kodiak Island, Alaska. So the reindeer are needed, not only for the Eskimos but also for the Indians and the Aleuts, who are just as much deserving of reindeer and who need them just as badly as do the Eskimos.

At the present time some of the Eskimos have very few reindeer, and there is no source from which they can get additional stock except through the purchase of the non-native-owned deer under the Reindeer Act. Some of the Indians of southeastern Alaska have requested reindeer on numerous occasions, but no supply has ever been available for them.

Moreover, for the life of me, I do not know where the information was originally secured, which was evidently furnished to a member of the subcommittee, that there were only 15,000 Eskimos in Alaska. The lowest figure that I ever heard of the Eskimo population was 18,000, and that figure did not include the Aleuts who reside along the Alaska Peninsula and in the Aleutian Islands region. The natives of the Alaska Peninsula and the Aleutian Islands are in desperate need of some new source of food. Reindeer would supply them with ample food in the way of meat, and thus their economic conditions would be markedly improved. In my judgment, the same is true of some of the Indians in southeastern Alaska.

So the facts show that there are thousands of natives of Alaska who at the present time have few, if any, deer and who would be immensely benefited by being supplied with deer.

The appropriation of the money now asked for and the carrying out of the Reindeer Act would do more than any one other thing to make two-thirds of the natives of Alaska not only eventually self-sustaining but enable them to live in a relative degree of security from famine. As the distinguished gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Johnson] so powerfully said, the carrying out of the Reindeer Act will help the natives of Alaska to help themselves. It is true that the purchase of the non-native-owned reindeer and equipment will not alone be sufficient. It will also be necessary to retrain the natives in herding the deer and in caring for them and in domesticating them and in all of the business matters which are involved in the care and ownership and use of reindeer and the sale as meat of the surplus deer. I foresee, Mr. Chairman, that in the course of another generation the natives of Alaska who are supplied with deer under a faithful fulfillment of the Reindeer Act will be in truth and in fact entirely self-supporting and able to manage without Government aid all of the phases of the business involved in the ownership and use of reindeer.

It has been charged here, Mr. Chairman, either directly or by inference, that this bill and the Reindeer Act are designed for the relief not of the natives but of certain white persons who own reindeer in Alaska. That charge is entirely without any foundation in fact. The report of the special committee indicates that about 32 percent of the non-native-owned reindeer belong to the so-called Lomen interests. And so it is inferred that those interests will really be the beneficiaries of any appropriation that is made. The sole and only object for pressing the passage of the Reindeer Act and of the appropriation for reindeer carried in the bill before us which animates those of us who advocated the passage of the Reindeer Act and who urge this appropriation is the welfare and benefit of the natives of Alaska. If, as an incident, citizens of Alaska or of other places who own Alaska reindeer receive fair compensation for the value of their property, it is no reason why any Member of Congress should hesitate to support this appropriation. The special committee has pointed out in unequivocal language, and from personal knowledge I assert as strongly as I can, that the only way to save the reindeer and the best way to save the natives is through the carrying out of the Reindeer Act, which means making the appropriation now carried in the bill.

True, it requires some foresight to agree with what is now being asked. It is necessary that we do what any good businessman would do under similar circumstances—look ahead for 5, or 10, or 20 years in order to determine just what will be the result for adopting either of the suggested courses of action. To fail to pass the appropriation is to continue the do-nothing policy, and that means the exhaustion of the reindeer and the pauperization of the natives. While by following the policy suggested by the special committee, and which I support with all my heart, we shall have a really substantial and ultimately self-sustaining industry for the natives of Alaska.

Of course Congress may, if it so desires, evade all responsibility for the welfare of the Eskimos and the Indians of Alaska. It is likely that if half of them should die of malnutrition little would be heard of it. They are a patient people and ordinarily they meet death from whatever cause without clamor or complaint. But, as a moral question, we cannot evade our responsibility so easily. Having taken away or destroyed their natural food sources we are morally bound to make some equivalent provision for them. That provision can best be made by carrying out the Reindeer Act.

In debate it has been said, in substance, that we should economize and balance the Budget and not give what amounts to a subsidy to the natives of Alaska. I venture to predict, Mr. Chairman, that if the program of economy should be sustained by the defeat of the reindeer item in the bill, that is precisely as far as the economy program will go. That will be the end of it. The plan for economy will be completely carried out at the expense of the natives of Alaska.

It is sometimes a matter of wonder to me how many Members of this body are able to make speeches against the evils of subsidies even if the natives should fairly be considered to have received a subsidy under the appropriation requested, that subsidy will be as a "drop in the bucket" against the enormous, the vast subsidies heretofore granted and now being granted to several classes of American citizens. The cotton farmers enjoy a subsidy, and the wheat farmers enjoy a subsidy, and it would be possible to name a number of other classes of citizens who receive Government aid in one form or another which can be called subsidies; so the natives will have nothing extraordinary, nothing unusual, if they finally obtain what Congress has decreed in the Reindeer Act they are justly entitled to receive. Ordinary foresight and the fundamental concepts of statesmanship support the appropriation which is now requested to fulfill the will of Congress as expressed in the Reindeer Act.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Keller].

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me this is the open season in the House for making statements that we do not know anything about. I may proceed along the same line myself, but I am going to try my best not to do so.

I have heard a number of statements made here this afternoon about the Coal Commission. There seems to be a very well formulated plan or plot here to scuttle that Commission, without knowing what its real service is or what its real service may be under proper conditions and if given sufficient time. It is to that matter that I desire to address myself at this time.

Mr. Chairman, there are 484,000 soft-coal miners in the United States and something more than 11,000 operators. It constitutes about the third largest individual industry in the country. The coal industry at the time this Commission was formed by an almost unanimous vote of both Houses was in such condition that every man who studied the problem was compelled to come to the conclusion that unless we did something with it the coal industry would go into a state of chaos and would further pull down the rest of the industry in this country.

· Mr. Chairman, the Coal Commission had to undertake an entirely new job. It did undertake this job. It had too large and too unwieldy a commission, but that commission had to experiment, and it did. It did not do a lot of this well, but it did enough to show what could be done. When the law was amended and when the new Commission went to work it was shown that it could accomplish something worth while, and if let alone and given the proper amount of money, it can do a good job of stabilizing the coal industry of the country.

I do not speak from my own information alone. I live and have lived in the midst of it all the years of my life.

I call attention to the fact also that of the several thousand small operators who asked to be exempted from the operation of this Commission, more than half have withdrawn their requests for exemption, and have asked that this Commission be given a fair, square trial.

When the pending bill is read for amendment, unless someone else does so, I shall offer an amendment to reinstate the amount provided by the Budget of three and a half million dollars, because if we are going to try out a matter of as great importance as this, we ought not to scrimp, pinch, and tie the hands of the men we are asking to study and carry out our ideas.

SENATE

MONDAY, MARCH 13, 1939

The Reverend Albert Joseph McCartney, D. D., minister, the Covenant-First Presbyterian Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people.

Let us pray. Almighty God and Father of us all, whose Spirit rules the minds and hearts of those who acknowledge Thee, as once again we meet together to take counsel concerning the welfare of the Nation, grant unto Thy servants in the Senate assembled the counsel and the wisdom that cometh down from above and is ever profitable to direct. So guide our deliberations that truth and justice, virtue and plety, peace and happiness may be established within our borders.

If anyone amongst us be troubled in heart, perplexed in mind, or burdened in body, come with Thy clarifying Spirit and healing touch to restore us to a state of strength and calmness.

We commend to Thy protecting care the President of the United States, the Vice President, and all into whose hands, through the voice of the people, Thou hast committed the governance of the state. These blessings that we invoke upon our own land we ask for all the peoples of the earth, to the end that peace and good will may be restored among the nations. This we ask in the name of the Prince of Peace, Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of Oregon, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Senate Joint Memorial 7

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled: We, your memorialists, the Fortieth Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, convened in regular session, respectfully represent that:

Whereas there has been introduced in the House of Representatives of the Seventy-sixth Congress of the United States of America a bill, being House bill No. 4036, entitled "A bill to amend the act entitled 'An act to regulate the importation of nursery stock and entitled 'An act to regulate the importation of nursery stock and other plants and plant products; to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to establish and maintain quarantine districts for plant diseases and insect pests; to permit and regulate the movement of fruits, plants, and vegetables therefrom; and for other purposes,' approved August 20, 1912 (37 Stat. 315)'';

Whereas the farmers of the State of Oregon sustain immense damage each year from plant diseases and insect pests, which spread from outside this country and from State to State and injuriously affect the fruits, plants, and vegetables in the State of Oregon, as well as those in other States, which plant diseases and insect pests are beyond the power of the State of Oregon to control without the assistance of the Federal Government, and it is necessary to provide a Nation-wide program to control such pests and diseases in order to protect the farmers within the State of Oregon: Now, therefore, be it order to protect the farmers within the State of Oregon: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Oregon (the house of representatives jointly concurring therein), That the Legislature of the State of Oregon hereby does petition the Congress of the United States of America to favorably consider and pass legislation to prevent the introduction and control the spread of and to eradicate plant diseases and insect pests, to regulate the importation of nursery stock and other plants and plant products, to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to establish and maintain quarantine districts for plant diseases and insect pests and to permit and regulate the movement of fruits, plants, and vegetables therefrom, as provided in House bill No. 4036 of the Seventy-sixth Congress; be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state of the State of Oregon be, and he hereby is, directed to transmit copies of this joint memorial to the Vice President of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each Member of Congress from the State

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of Colorado, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

Senate Joint Memorial 10

Whereas the Norris-Doxey Act which was passed by Congress and approved by the President in 1937 authorizes an appropriation of $2,500,000 for the following purposes: To increase farm-forest income; to improve living conditions on the farms; to increase employment; to prevent the movement of farm population to the cities; to conserve soil and water resources; to aid agriculture generally; the work to be carried on through the State forestry agencies and the land-grant colleges cooperating with the United States Department of Agriculture; and

Whereas the efficiency of much of the forest lands of Colorado would be greatly increased through an expanded farm forestry program; and program; and

Whereas the benefits from increased shelterbelts and tree plantings for flood- and wind-erosion control would add much to the income of Colorado farmers, improve farm homes, and render a valuable public service; and

Whereas the Federal assistance to date is inadequate to accomplish the above objectives: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the Thirty-second General Assembly (the house of representatives concurring herein). That this General Assembly of the State of Colorado urges the Congress of the United States to provide funds to carry out the provisions of the Norris-Doxey Act; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this memorial be forwarded to the President of the United States, the Vice President of the Senate, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, and the Senators and Representatives of the State of Colorado in the Congress of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolutions of the Legislature of North Dakota, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 185

Concurrent resolution memorializing Congress to increase the minimum number of employees required in agricultural States under the Unemployment Compensation Act

Be it resolved by the Senate of the State of North Dakota (the house of representatives concurring):

Whereas the present minimum number of employees fixed and required by the Federal Unemployment Act is eight persons; and Whereas such limit may not be too low in industrial States, but is too low and too oppressive a requirement in States where the income of the people, and particularly the business interests in such State, is wholly or almost wholly from agriculture: Now, therefore he it.

fore, be it Resolved, That we hereby memorialize Congress, and particularly our Senators and Members of the House of Representatives in Congress, to enact an amendment to the existing Federal requirement of a minimum of 8 employees, as required in the present Unemployment Act, so as to raise said minimum to not less than 20 employees in States where 75 percent or more of the gross income of such States is derived from agricultural sources.

House Concurrent Resolution 248

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of North Dakota (the senate concurring):

Whereas the farmers of the State of North Dakota are in a severe economic emergency because of the fact that it has cost them more to operate their farms than they have received for the crops produced; and more to operate their farms than they have received for the crops produced; and

Whereas the extreme drought of the past 5 years has made it necessary for large numbers of farmers to go on relief; and
Whereas the Frazier-Lemke Refinancing Act, which is about to be voted upon by Congress, will be of great assistance to the farmers of North Dakota and will save thousands of people from hunger and privation: Now, therefore, be it

*Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of North Dakota (the senate concurring), That we memorialize Congress to enact into law the Frazier-Lemke Refinancing Act; and be it further Resolved, That the chief clerk of the house of representatives transmit a copy of this resolution to the President of the United States Senate, to the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, and to the North Dakota delegation in Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolutions of the Leglislature of North Dakota, which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

House Concurrent Resolution 225

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of North Dakota (the senate concurring therein), Whereas the Hayden-Cartwright Act of Congress authorized a maximum of $4,000,-000 be spent for Indian Service roads; and

000 be spent for Indian Service roads; and
Whereas the appropriation of such an amount by Congress would provide for an expenditure of $250,000 for Indian Service roads on Indian reservations in North Dakota; and
Whereas the recommendations of the Bureau of the Budget for the fiscal year 1939-40 provides for an amount of only $2,000,000 to be appropriated by Congress for Indian Service roads, thus depriving the Indian reservations in the State of North Dakota of nearly $150,000 per annum: Now, therefore, be it

*Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of North Dakota (the senate concurring), That the Congress of the United States be and the same is hereby memorialized to provide in their present appropriation bills that the full amount of the Hayden-Cartwright Act, to wit, $4,000,000 be allocated the several Indian reservations of the United States for Indian Service road purposes; be it further

Resolved, That the chief clerk be instructed to send a copy of this resolution to the Speaker of the House of Representatives in Congress, the President of the Senate, to the Members of Congress from the State of North Dakota, to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and to the Bureau of the Budget.

House Concurrent Resolution 398

Concurrent resolution petitioning Congress to make appropriations ample for the road program of the Fort Berthold Reservation

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of North Dakota (the senate concurring): Whereas the three affliated tribes of the Fort Berthold Reservation have eight well-equipped Government schools, with four busses traveling over 90 miles of poorly constructed roads in all kinds of weather; and Whereas medical and hospital service at the agency renders appreciable service to the Indians, but the work in the field is made very difficult due to poor road facilities, creating a condition unsatisfactory and dangerous, alike to the field medical service, and the members of the three tribes; and

Whereas the construction of roads has enabled the young men of the reservation, just out of school, an opportunity to learn practical work and earn a livelihood; and

Whereas the tribal council favors the construction of all-weather Indian Service roads, to serve as "life lines" to truck trails and fire-suppression lanes to remote areas of the reservation; and

Whereas the allotment for the past 2 years has been $40,000 per annum, a much smaller amount than allowed in many jurisdictions of smaller area, and it is believed this sum may be curtailed: and

Whereas this fund does not allow for the employment of sufficient labor to operate equipment to advantage, nor employ available manpower, and this, not being supplemented by State or other funds, makes it necessary to rely solely upon gratuitous appropriations: Now, therefore, be it

*Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of North Dakota (the senate concurring), That the North Dakota Legislative Assembly urgently recommends that in the interests of health, welfare, and education, that a yearly allotment of not less than $75,000 be appropriated for the road program of the three affiliated tribes of the Fort Berthold Reservation; and be it further Resolved, That the secretary of state is instructed and directed to transmit copies of this resolution to the President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, each of the Members of Congress of this State, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of North Dakota, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

House Concurrent Resolution 368

Payments of old-age assistance, aid to the blind, and aid to dependent children, grants to ward Indians

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of North Dakota (the senate concurring therein):

Whereas there are on Indian reservations within the State of North Dakota a large group of ward Indians who are wards of the United States Government; and

Whereas many of these ward Indians living on Indian reservations are eligible for old-age assistance and are now receiving oldage assistance grants, and others, as they become eligible, will be making application for old-age assistance grants; and

Whereas there are many ward Indians living on Indian reservations who are blind and are eligible for aid to the needy blind; and tions who are blind and are eligible for aid to the needy blind; and Whereas many ward Indian children living on Indian reservations are receiving aid to dependent children, and many more will no doubt apply and be eligible for aid to dependent children; and Whereas payments of old-age assistance and aid-to-dependent-children grants are paid by the Federal Government, State, and county, and aid-to-blind grants are paid by the Federal Government and State to these ward Indians on the same basis as non-ward Indians and other citizens of the State of North Dakota not living on Indian reservations and who are not wards of the Federal Government: and Government; and

Whereas the payment by the county and State for old-age assistance and aid-to-dependent-children grants to ward Indians places a heavy burden on the State and those counties in which Indian reservations are located; and reservations are located; and Whereas ward Indians are wards of the Federal Government and it would seem that they should therefore be the sole responsibility of the Federal Government: Now, therefore, be it Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of North Dakota (the senate concurring), That the Twenty-sixth Legislative Assembly of North Dakota respectfully request the Congress of the United States to amend titles 1, 4, and 10 of the Federal Social Security Act so as to provide that 100-percent payments of oldage assistance, aid-to-the-blind, and aid-to-dependent-children grants to ward Indians living on Indian reservations be made by the Federal Government; and be it further Resolved, That attested copies of this resolution be sent to both Houses of Congress of the United States, to each of the Members thereof from this State, and to the Social Security Board, Washington, D. C.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of North Dakota, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 285

Concurrent resolution memorializing the Members of the United States Congress to pass a bill to establish a national land policy and to provide homesteads free of debt for actual farm families, which bill is now pending in Congress known as S. 136

Be it resolved by the Senate of the State of North Dakota (the house of representatives concurring):

Whereas there is a bill known as S. 136 now before the Congress of the United States to establish a national land policy, and to provide homesteads free of debt for actual farm families; and Whereas, if said bill is enacted into law, it will do more to relieve the agricultural situation in the United States than any measure that has heretofore been proposed in Congress and will bring immediate and permanent relief to more than 35,000 farm families in North Dakota whose farm homes are heavily mortgaged: Now, therefore, gaged: Now, therefore,

The Twenty-sixth Legislative Assembly of the State of North Dakota respectfully requests and petitions the Congress of the United States to give immediate and favorable consideration of this bill; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state cause sufficient copies of this resolution to be printed, and that he cause to be mailed a copy to the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States requesting that said resolution be read before each of said bodies, and also that a copy of this resolution be sent to each of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of North Dakota.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolutions of the Legislature of North Dakota, which were referred to the Special Committee to Investgate Unemployment and Relief:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 271

Concurrent resolution relating to the distribution of food com-modities by Federal relief agencies

Be it resolved by the Senate of the State of North Dakota (the house of representatives concurring):

but in many instances the distribution is not made to those who are in the greatest need thereof.

Whereas the present system of distribution is costly to both the United States Government, the State of North Dakota, and the several counties participating in the distribution thereof.

Whereas large quantities of the commodities distributed are not best adapted to the needs of the people of this State, which likewise results in waste and expense; and

Whereas the system of distribution results in diminishing the volume of wholesale and retail sales of commodities in the State, and the total cost of distribution equals the profits of regular dealers and merchants: Therefore be it and the total cost of distribution equals the profits of regular dealers and merchants: Therefore be it Resolved by the senate (the house of representatives concurring), That we memorialize the Congress of the United States to enact such measures as will correct these objections and that direct grants be made to the States for the purchase of such commodities of such kind and quality as are most adapted and suitable to the needs of such recipients, and that such commodities be distributed to persons found eligible and in need through regular commercial channels of trade by the issuance of purchase orders upon merchants and business establishments operating in North Dakota and offering for sale at points of consumption such commodities. commodities.

Senate Concurrent Resolution 287

Resolution urging the President of the United States and the Conesolution urging the President of the United States and the Congress of the United States to make such adequate provisions for public-relief needs in the State of North Dakota as are warranted by conditions as they have been developed in reports to the Governor of North Dakota and to members of the Twenty-sixth Legislative Assembly of the State of North Dakota by a special citizens committee, and urging that there be no further curtailment at this time of Federal funds for work relief, old-age assistance, aid for dependent children, aid to the blind, and for grants-in-aid to farmers grants-in-aid to farmers

Be it resolved by the Senate of the State of North Dakota (the house of representatives concurring therein):

Whereas the relief needs of the State of North Dakota, as they are developed by the inescapable facts, are greater at this time than at any time in the history of this State, the Twenty-sixth Legislative Assembly of the State of North Dakota respectfully represents to the President and to the Members of Congress of the United States the following facts:

States the following facts:

The State of North Dakota has approximately 680,000 people. For more than 7 years, because of drought, crop failures, insect pests, and other factors over which the people of the State have no control, there has been developed a tremendous burden of tax delinquency, arriving at the point where, to discharge its ordinary constitutional obligations to the people of the State, the government of North Dakota is faced with the greatest problem of its history.

On the basis of 4 members to a family, a population of 680,000 persons is the equivalent of 170,000 families in North Dakota. Of this number there are at present in a relief status, as evidenced by the employment on W. P. A. rolls of 14,300 and by the grant-in-aid list of F. S. A. approximately 30,000 families, a total of more than 44,000 families. In addition to this, it is estimated that easily 30,000 more families are reduced to a bare subsistence level of living and are unable to discharge normally their responsibilities as taxpayers. It thus becomes evident that approximately 90,000 families must accept responsibility for a tax burden of more than $25,000,000 in the forthcoming blennium. While facing further uncertainties of crop production, it is also evident that the burden of relief now indicated can be but slightly reduced in the coming year; and

Whereas it is apparent that the current Federal relief appropriations, while going a long way to meet need, are necessarily expended upon an emergency basis, while it is clearly evident that the State has before it a great problem of rehabilitation, it is respectfully urged upon the President and Members of Congress that appropriation of Federal funds to North Dakota be continued on a basis

priation of Federal funds to North Dakota be continued on a basis which will meet insofar as possible, utilizing the best available rehabilitation methods, the needs of the people; and Whereas it is clearly established by the facts that in large sections of North Dakota, because of crop failure, we now have what may be termed stranded populations; and Whereas it is evident that nothing is to be gained by moving these stranded populations to new areas where their future welfare must necessarily be determined by new agricultural practices with which few of them are familiar, and their welfare will be affected by economic factors which exist throughout the country; and

Whereas it is apparent that the future destiny of North Dakota and its proper development can best be assured by employing the efforts of the people who know the country, its production possibilities, the vicissitudes of its climate, and the natural problems it presents, we urge that the most careful attention be given to scientific methods for the rehabilitation of the people where they

We urge that more funds be made available for intelligently engineered and well-considered water-conservation projects, for the education of the people in new methods of land utilization, and for relief financing which will encourage stranded farmers and town workers to assume their full share of responsibility in re-

We respectfully represent that any curtailment of Federal ex-

We respectfully represent that any curtailment of Federal expenditures in North Dakota under present conditions cannot but result in suffering for individuals, loss of morale to the people, and in a lamentable loss of time in obtaining the objectives which must be attained to rehabilitate this State: Now, therefore, be it Resolved by the Senate of the State of North Dakota (the house of representatives concurring), That we urge a thorough investigation of the North Dakota relief situation directed to the end that for the present the best results for the welfare of the greatest number of people be made a practical objective.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of Minnesota, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Joint resolution by the Legislature of the State of Minnesota in regular session assembled assenting to the provisions of the Pittman-Robertson Act

Whereas the Congress of the United States has enacted an act commonly known as the Pittman-Robertson Act, which is entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in wildlife restoration projects, and for other purposes," having approval September 2, 1937; and wildlife restoration projects and for the further development of the game resources of the State of Minnesota; and Whereas the State of Minnesota, in order to avail itself of its proportions of the funds made available under said act, desires to assent to the provisions of the act: Now, therefore, be it Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Minnesota in regular session assembled. That the State of Minnesota assent to the provisions of the said Pittman-Robertson Act and such assent is hereby given, and that the secretary of state is hereby directed to send certified copies of this resolution to the President of the Senate of the United States and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and two copies to the Secretary resentatives of the United States, and two copies to the Secretary of Agriculture, Henry A. Wallace, and one copy to the office of the regional director of the United States Department of Agriculture at Milwaukee, Wis.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolutions of the Legislature of Minnesota, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Concurrent resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States and the Secretary of Agriculture on the need to establish a more stable program of subsidies to farmers for development and maintenance of farm woodlands and shelterbelts

Whereas the farm woodlands make up more than 5,000,000 acres of the 19,000,000 acres of forest land in the State of Minnesota; and of the 19,000,000 acres of forest land in the State of Minnesota; and Whereas forests are a soil-building and soil-conserving crop; and Whereas the practice of good conservation on these lands can be encouraged by special inducements such as those given under the agricultural conservation program; and Whereas this program now includes benefits for maintaining land in pasture and orchards: Now, therefore, be it Resolved by the Senate of the State of Minnesota (the house of representatives concurring). That the agricultural conservation program should also include a stable and comprehensive program of benefits for forestry practices on farm woodlands, including the protection of such woodlands from grazing, fire, and destructive protection of such woodlands from grazing, fire, and destructive logging; and be it further Resolved, That additional technical forestry aid, as authorized by the Norris-Doxey Farm Forestry Act, should be provided to instruct the farmers and woodland owners in this phase of the agricultural conservation program; and be it further Resolved, That the secretary of state be instructed to send copies of this resolution to the President of the Senate of the United States and to the Speaker of the House of Representative of the United States, and to the Secretary of Agriculture. Hon. of the United States, and to the Secretary of Agriculture, Hon. Henry A. Wallace, and to each of the Senators and Representatives of the State of Minnesota in the Congress of the United States.

Whereas widespread dissatisfaction exists among the producers of farm commodities in Minnesota and neighboring States relative to the losses incurred in ordinary farm operations; and Whereas the American farmer is forced to sell the major portion of what he produces on a world market and purchase all of his necessities on a highly protected stabilized domestic market; and Whereas the spread between the values of the commodities the farmer sells and those he buys places him at a serious disadvantage in the market places; and Whereas this price disparity has existed for over 5 years and promises to continue indefinitely and create disaster among agriculturies.

Whereas to encourage, create, develop, and maintain a stable,

Whereas our present economic system does not operate to protect the farmer when there is an exportable surplus of agricultural products, thereby resulting in the world price being paid on not only the exportable surplus of such agricultural products but on that consumed domestically as well; and

Whereas the existence of an exportable surplus of a vitally important food crop is a national necessity and from the consumer's standpoint nothing could be more dangerous than to create a deficiency in our stable food commodities through curtailment of production; and

Whereas to remove the disparity in prices and to guarantee equality to agriculture with industry and labor, it is wholly essential and absolutely necessary that the American farmer should receive a price for commodities which he produces which will assure him cost of production and in addition thereto an amount sufficient to pay taxes, interest, debts, and living expenses: Now, therefore, be it

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of Idaho, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency:

Senate Joint Memorial 9

To the Honorable Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

We, your memorialists, the Legislature of the State of Idaho, we, your memorialists, the negislature of the State of Idaho, respectfully represent that—

Whereas in recent years the Chicago Mercantile Exchange and other similar exchanges in the United States have included the white potato as one of the commodities in which their members may deal in future trading during certain months of the year;

Whereas Idaho potatoes are the only potatoes produced in the United States in which there is any trading to any great extent, and that trading is limited to the Chicago Mercantile Exchange;

Whereas this form of trading in futures on Idaho potatoes has resulted in greatly depressed prices for Idaho potatoes on the Chicago market and other principal terminal markets of the United States; and Whereas the Chicago terminal market on potatoes is the principal terminal market for potatoes of the United States and any depressed prices thereon affect all other markets on which Idaho potatoes might be sold; and

Whereas this form of trading and dealing in potato futures, particularly as they apply only to the State of Idaho, are beyond any control or regulation by this body; and

Whereas the matter of regulating all form of exchange trading in all commodities is subject only to the laws passed by the Congress of the United States: Now, therefore,

We, the Legislature of the State of Idaho do hereby most respectfully urge of your honorable body, the Congress of the United States, that your honorable body pass such legislation empowering the honorable Secretary of Agriculture to prohibit the sale of potatoes and other vegetables of like character for future delivery on any and all exchanges in the United States: Be it

Resolved, That the secretary of the State of Idaho be authorized, and is hereby directed, to immediately forward certified copies of this joint memorial to the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States, to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Idaho, and to the President, Franklin D. Roosevelt.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint memorials of the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, which were referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs:

House Joint Memorial 1

To the Honorable the Congress of the United States:

Whereas section 883, title 46, United States Code, as amended, was passed to regulate shipping between points in the United States, including Districts, Territories, and possessions thereof; and

Whereas under provisions of said section, Alaska is excluded in favor of points within the continental United States; and

Whereas this exclusion has operated as discriminatory against the best interest of Alaska by delaying delivery of goods and by increasing costs of transportation:

Now, therefore, we, your memorialist, memorialize the Congress of the United States to amend said section by striking therefrom the words "except Alaska", thereby making it lawful to ship merchandise over Canadian rail and water lines, providing the same privileges are extended by the Canadian Government to American bottoms in the Canadian waters between the United States and Alaska.

And your memorialist will ever pray.

House Joint Memorial 20

To the Honorable Congress of the United States, to Hon. Harold L. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior, and Hon. Anthony J. Dimond, Delegate to Congress from Alaska:

Your memorialist, the Legislature of Alaska, respectfully represents:

That there was passed by the Congress of the United States and approved June 30, 1932, an act governing the operation of roads, trails, and bridges in Alaska, found in section 321b, title 48, United States Code, and also section 3, 47 Statutes at Large, page 446, and which act gives the Secretary of the Interior the power, by order or regulation to make rules and regulations governing the use of roads, trails, and other works in Alaska, including the fixing and collection of tolls where deemed necessary and advisable in the public interests: and

Whereas pursuant to the power and authority vested in him by virtue of the act aforesaid, the honorable Secretary of the Interior, by order No. 905, dated March 25, 1935, has promulgated a set of regulations for the use of highways in Alaska and the operation of motor vehicles, section 2 of which regulations reads as follows:

"Sec. 2. To the Public Health Service of the United States, the Senate, the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, and to the Honorable Anthony J. Dimond, Delegate to Congress from the Territory of Alaska:

boats of 5 tons or over; and
Whereas the practical results of this construction and administration has discriminated against a large part of the fishing population of the Territory of Alaska and this discrimination has been unjust since the owners and operators of boats under 5 tons are, as a rule, much less able to care for emergencies such as sickness or disability of any kind than are their fellows engaged on larger boats; and this has resulted in such seamen, through illness or accident, being forced to pay expenses for hospitalization, in many cases to such an extent as to lose their entire investment in their boats; and

Whereas it is not believed that it was the intention of the Congress to so limit the construction of the words "merchant marine seamen," and it is believed that the said section 26 of title 24 of the United States Code, Annotated, should be amended to remove this discrimination:

Now, therefore, we, your memorialist, the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, in fourteenth regular session assembled, do hereby petition the Congress of the United States to so amend the said section 26 of title 24 of the United States Code, Annotated, so as to include in the term "merchant marine seamen" all persons engaged in commercial fishing without respect to the size of the boat or appliances used, and that in cases of sickness requiring hospitalization such care shall be given at the nearest hospital to the patient's home or home port.

from Alaska:

Your memorialist, the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, in fourteenth regular session assembled, respectfully submits that—Whereas the life, the welfare, the prosperity, and the happiness of approximately one-half of the population of this Territory is totally dependent upon the Alaska fisheries and the manner and method in which the same are administered by the United States Bureau of Fisheries; and

Whereas the people of Alaska have long sought to obtain a voice in the regulation, administration, and the control of said fisheries, but the same have continued to be administered by the United States Bureau of Fisheries of the Department of Commerce, which has no direct contact with the people of Alaska and no machinery whereby the people most interested can present their views or make available to the United States Bureau of Fisheries the practical experience and observations of those who have spent their lifetime taking fish in Alaskan waters; and

Whereas, in view of the situation hereinbefore set forth, the fishing population of Alaska is justified in requesting that some means be provided whereby those who make their livelihood from Alaska's fisheries can participate in the preparation of the necessary regulations for the conservation and utilization thereof:

Now, therefore, your memorialist respectfully prays that the Congress of the United States enact a law creating a commission of eight or more members, to be known as the Alaska Fisheries Commission; the members thereof to be appointed by the President of the United States or the Secretary of Commerce, as Congress shall determine, and to be chosen from among the actual bona fide resident fishermen of the several fishing areas or districts throughout the Territory, upon the recommendation of all the bona fide resident fishermen of the particular area, or districts; such recommendation to be made through regular established unions, associations, or other organizations composed exclusively of fishermen.

And your memorialist further prays that by said act of Congress the duty and authority be imposed upon said Alaska Fisheries Commission, and its members, of meeting annually with the United States Commissioner of Fisheries, or his Alaska agent, in the capital or elsewhere in the Territory, as shall be designated by said Commissioner, for the purpose of holding hearings, receiving recommendations, and discussing the regulations to be promutated by the Secretary of Commerce concerning the Alaska fisheries; such meeting to be held annually prior to the issuance of the annual regulations.

And your memorialist further prays that the members of said Alaska Fisheries Commission may be reimbursed for their actual and necessary transportation expense in going to and from the annual meeting of said commission and may receive a per diem of

Your memorialist, the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, in Your memorialist, the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, in fourteenth regular session assembled, respectfully submits that—
Whereas during the year 1937, 1,255 boats, with crews of approximately 2,000 men, were employed in fishing for salmon and about 700 men were engaged in fishing for halibut, and the industry produced $3,001,813 in fish products in the waters of southeastern Alaska lying south of the fifty-ninth degree north latitude and east of the one hundred and thirty-seventh degree west longitude. During that year approximately 6,000,000 pounds of herring were used for batt, which was the general annual average from 1932 to 1937; and

Whereas the records of the Bureau of Fisheries show that the industry of packing herring for food has been practically wiped out because the larger herring have all been used and the remaining are the small herring which are being manufactured into herring meal and oil. This industry has increased, but if the use of herring for meal and oil continues the entire herring supply will soon be gone, and accordingly no herring will be available to supply bait for the halibut and salmon trolling fleet; and

Whereas H. R. 3024 was introduced in Congress by the Honorable Anthony J. Dimond, Delegate from Alaska, on January 23, 1939, and the purpose of the bill is to forbid the taking of herring in the waters of the Territory of Alaska southeast of the fifty-ninth degree north latitude and east of the one hundred and thirty-seventh degree west longitude, except for curing for human consumption and for bait, and it is the belief of the fishing industry of the Territory of Alaska that this bill should be enacted into law:

Now, therefore, your memorialist respectfully urges the enactment of H. R. 3024 into law.

And your memorialist will ever pray.

Your memorialist, the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, in its fourteenth session assembled, respectfully represents that:

Whereas the prices paid for halibut to the fishermen have not been considered and scaled in proportion to the extremely curtailed fishing season for halibut, resulting in the inability of the said fishermen to make a living for themselves and their families with consequent economic distress to themselves and the communities in which they live, making it impossible, among other things, for these men to maintain their boats and gears in seaworthy and workmanlike condition: Now, therefore, shingle industry of this State was saved; and

House Concurrent Resolution 15

Requesting the United States Senators and Members of Congress from Oklahoma to initiate and cooperate in supporting legisla-tion to restore cotton to its former economic importance in world

Whereas by reason of legislation creating trade barriers to the cotton trade, discriminating freight rates, the tariff, and other legislation, and by reason of world economic conditions and comlegislation, and by reason of world economic conditions and competition from cotton growers in foreign countries with living standards below that of this country, the cotton farmers in the Southern States have been reduced to a tragic financial condition, their export markets have been almost lost, they are subject to competition which they are handicapped in meeting, and the growing of cotton made economically impossible under existing conditions; and

Whereas unless concerted action is immediately taken by the Senators and Members of Congress from the cotton States looking to the relief of the cotton farmers from the handicaps under which such conditions have come about, the growing of cotton may soon become a thing of the past in this country, and the welfare and income of large sections of the United States seriously affected: Now, therefore, be it

Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Seventeenth Legislature of the State of Oklahoma (the senate concurring therein), That the attention of the Congress of the United States is respectfully directed to the fact that cotton is the leading product is respectfully directed to the fact that cotton is the leading product in America's commerce and international trade, and that the cotton farmer represents the world's largest primary wealth-producing group, and that it is of paramount importance to the producers of this commodity, as well as to the continued life of world trade on the part of the United States that this interest be adequately rehabilitated and fostered. To that end the Senators and Members of Congress from the State of Oklahoma are respectfully urged to take immediate steps to meet with the Senators and Representatives from all other cotton States for the purpose of securing concerted action by the Congress for the relief of the cotton farmers and of the industry from the handicaps and barriers under which they and it now suffer in the marketing of cotton, domestic and foreign, and it is respectfully suggested that among the things they are called to advocate the following:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 3

Concurrent resolution requesting the Federal Government to reimburse the State of Oklahoma for all revenue lost by the State To the honorable President and the Congress of the United States: Government of Indian lands located in the State of Oklahoma

Government of Indian lands located in the State of Oklahoma
To the honorable President and the Congress of the United States:
Whereas cause of complaint upon which this petition and claim is grounded arises under the Constitution, treaties, and laws of the United States of America due to the following facts:
First. The State of Oklahoma was admitted to the Union with one-half of its area free from all taxation by the new State.

The eats of Congress under which the State of Oklahoma was one-half of its area free from all taxation by the new State.

The acts of Congress under which the State of Oklahoma was admitted into the Union, as enforced by the Supreme Court of the United States (Choate v. Trapp, 224 U. S. 665), diminished the sovereign right of the State to levy a land tax for State purposes on land owned by citizens of Indian blood in fee simple. The United States owned no property right in the land exempted at the time the tax exemption, which is a property right, was contracted, for the reason that the Indians at the time owned the land in fee simple, and Congress had no power under the Constitution to enforce such tax exemption by the terms of the Act of Admission for the reason that Congress has no power to control a land tax for State purposes, and further, because a State cannot surrender a right of sovereignty by the acceptance of the provisions of an act of admission by which the new State is admitted on an equal footing with the other States.

Second. The Five Civilized Tribes of Indians (Choctaws, Chicke-

Second. The Five Civilized Tribes of Indians (Choctaws, Chicka-Second. The Five Civilized Tribes of Indians (Choctaws, Chickasaws, Cherokees, Creeks, and Seminoles), the members of which as citizens of Oklahoma were exempted by the United States from a State land tax before they were moved to what was later the Indian Territory, held lands east of the Mississippi River under occupancy. The United States, by treaties with the various tribes, granted to the respective tribes lands in the Indian Territory in exchange for the lands occupied in the East. The various treaties granted the western lands to the Indians and to their descendants in fee simple, and the land was described by metes and bounds. As consideration to induce the Indians to leave their homes and go into an uninhabited area, the United States by treaties guaranteed to the various tribes that they should be protected in their tribal rights forever and that their land should never be incorporated into any State with-that their land should never be incorporated into any State without their consent. The United States recognized the Indians as landlords by leasing portions of their lands, buying other parts, and selling them additional land for cash.

Third. The President of the United States, in pursuance of the treaties, executed to each tribe deeds conveying to each such tribe, in trust for the members and their descendants, the land ceded by the treaties aforesaid in fee simple. The deed specifically reserved the right to reversion or escheat to the United States in case the Indians became extinct or abandoned their land. This possibility of reversion was specifically waived by Congress (sec. 15, Acts, March 3, 1893). Congress consented to the allotment of the land in severalty to the members of each tribe. The President engrafted onto the deed a provision that the Indians could not sell their lands without the consent of the United States; the Supreme Court has consistently held (March Tiger v. Western Inv. Co., 221 U. S. 286) that this restriction did not affect the property right of the Indians. The deeds to each tribe are similar in all material respects.

On March 3, 1893, Congress expressed by act a desire to create a State to embrace the Indian Territory within its boundary (27 Stat. 612). Accordingly a commission was created, later called the Dawes Commission. This commission was empowered to negotiate with the Five Civilized Tribes with the view of inducing the Indians (1) to surrender their rights to remain forever free from the government of any State, (2) to partition their common estate and allot to each member of the tribe his equitable share of the tribal land, and (3) to become citizens of proposed new State of Oklahoma.

Oklahoma.

For the purpose of obtaining relief from the perpetual charge of protecting the Indians in their tribal rights, the commission was empowered, in the event the Indians would not allot their land, to purchase outright the 18,785,781 acres owned by the Five Civilized Tribes (sec. 15, Acts, March 3, 1893).

Fourth. The act appointing the Commission, empowered the Commissioners to enter into negotiation with the five tribes as said in the act, "with a view to such adjustment, upon the basis of justice and equity, as may, with the consent of such nations or tribes of Indians, be requisite or suitable to enable the ultimate creation of a State"; but the Commission, acting beyond the scope of its authority, ignored all principles of justice and equity, in that the Commission made, the Congress approved, and the Supreme Court upheld, agreements by which the United States was relieved of the burden of protecting the Indians, at the sole expense of the future State, which, under Federal policy, was to assume the burden of these people. The Congress, at the expense of the taxpayers of Oklahoma, discharged a national obligation for which it stood pledged to purchase more than 19,000,000 acres of fertile land, without cost to the United States Treasury by guaranteeing to the various tribes tax exemption from future State taxation as follows:

(1) Charchese 40 acres tax free land on held by ellettes. ation as follows:

(1) Cherokees, 40 acres tax-free land as held by allottee.

(2) Creeks, 40 acres tax free for 21 years from date of patent (32 Stat. 500)

(3) Seminoles, 40 acres forever (30 Stat. 567).

(4) Choctaws and Chickasaws owned 4,000 square miles in a solid body all nontaxable while held by allottee for 21 years from date of patent (30 Stat. 507).

solid body all nontaxable while held by allottee for 21 years from date of patent (30 Stat. 507).

Fifth. In pursuance of the agreement by which the United States guaranteed that they should, for a period, hold land free from taxation, the Indians divided their lands, their tribal courts and legislatures were dissolved, and they became citizens entitled, under the Constitution to all immunities enjoyed by other citizens, and to no greater privileges than other citizens enjoy. By the act under which Oklahoma was admitted into the Union "on an equality with the other States" (34 Stat. 367) Congress sought to diminish the sovereignty of Oklahoma by denying to the State the right to tax citizens of Indian blood, to whom the United States had promised tax exemption at the expense of the proposed new State, in satisfaction of a national obligation.

Sixth. After admission, Oklahoma never voluntarily relinquished its right to tax, as other lands are taxed, the land owned by citizens of Indian blood, in fee simple; the State levied such tax, which was questioned by injunction; the Supreme Court of Oklahoma upheld the State's sovereign right to tax such land; but on appeal, the Supreme Court of the United States (Choate v. Trapp, 224 U. S. 665) sustained the injunction on the ground that the tax exemption was a property right which Congress had power to bestow. Later the same exemption or immunity was extended to oil and gas produced from Indian lands; not only the Indian's one-eighth royalty interest but also the oil producer's seven-eighths "working" interest bus likewise held to be exempt.

one-eighth royalty interest but also the oil producer's seven-eighths "working" interest was likewise held to be exempt. Seventh The State of Oklahoma has, therefore, been deprived of the sovereign constitutional right to tax for State and local purposes, land and minerals within the State, owned in fee simple; that the act of Congress exempting the land is not the supreme law of the land, but an usurpation of authority not conferred by the Constitution; and that the Constitution confers no powers on Congress by which the sovereignty of a State may be diminished, impaired, or contracted away, by the provisions of the act under which the new State is admitted into the Union.

Eighth. This national obligation, voluntarily assumed by Congress, was judicially recognized by this court in Choate against Trapp, where it was held: That the Indians furnished a consideration, in the surrender of treaty rights, "sufficient to enable them to enforce the benefits conferred" in the form of a tax exemption.

Since the United States has compelled Oklahoma to pay this national debt, the State is entitled to an accounting, at the expense of the United States; and for redress in a sum sufficient to reimburse the State of Oklahoma, for the lawful revenues of which the State has been unlawfully deprived.

Ninth. The Indian is a ward of the Federal Government and not a ward of the State of Oklahoma, and

SILVER CERTIFICATES AND FEDERAL RESERVE NOTES

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, recently the Congres-SIONAL RECORD and reports on hearings held by the House Coinage Committee have carried the assertion that silver currency has an advantage over Federal Reserve notes because silver currency does not involve an interest burden whereas Federal Reserve notes represent payment of interest to the banking system.

With reference to the above-mentioned assertion by defendants of the silver program, I wish to have the RECORD show at this point the text of a letter sent to me under date of March 10, 1939, by the Honorable Marriner S. Eccles, Chairman, Board of Governors, Federal Reserve System.

I ask that the letter be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and printed in the body of the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BOARD OF GOVERNORS OF THE FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM, OFFICE OF THE CHAIRMAN Washington, March 10, 1939.

Washington, March 10, 1939.

Hon. John G. Townsend, Jr.,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Senators: I acknowledge receipt of your personal letter to me of March 3 in which you quote remarks of Congressman White of Idaho and ask certain questions.

Your first question is whether Federal Reserve notes involve the payment of interest on the part of the public using them and to the benefit of the banking system.

The issuance of Federal Reserve notes as such does not involve interest, payment any more than the issuance of any other kind.

interest payment any more than the issuance of any other kind of currency. A person who has a bank deposit can withdraw it in currency and does not have to pay interest; a person who has no deposit and has to borrow must pay interest on his loan, regardless of the kind of currency in which he withdraws the proceeds, or whether he leaves them on deposit and checks against them

Your second question is whether the issuance of silver certificates

Your second question is whether the issuance of silver certificates reduces the interest burden on the general public.

The issuance of silver certificates in payment for silver purchases by the Treasury in no way diminishes the interest burden on the general public. It is true that if the Treasury paid for silver purchased otherwise than by issuing silver certificates it would have to increase the public debt by the amount of these payments, but that is not, I believe, what is meant by the question. There has never been a proposal that the Treasury pay for silver out of general revenues or out of borrowed funds. Aside from this, the issuance of silver certificates has no bearing whatsoever on the interest burden.

Your last question is whether the issuance of silver currency increases the interest-earning capacity of the banking system.

There is no connection whatsoever between the issuance of silver and the interest-earning capacity of the banking system. The only connection under present conditions is highly indirect and exactly the opposite of that implied in the question. The issuance of silver certificates adds to excess reserves, and this in turn would tend to reduce interest rates were it not for the fact that they are already at the lowest level on record, and for short-term paper are at the vanishing point.

I hope that these explanations will be of help to you.

Sincerely yours,

M. S. ECCLES.

COTTON PRICE ADJUSTMENT ACT OF 1939—REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE AND FORESTRY

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 1303) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, with respect to cotton, and I submit a report (No. 164) thereon. I ask unanimous consent that the report of the committee may be printed in the

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be received and the bill will be placed on the calendar, and, without objection, the report will be printed in the RECORD.

The report is as follows:

The Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1303) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, with respect to cotton, having considered the same, report thereon favorably, with a recommendation that the bill do pass without amendment.

GENERAL STATEMENT

The primary purpose of this bill, cited as the "Cotton Price Adjustment Act of 1939," which amends the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, with respect to cotton, is to protect and maintain the income of cotton growers. At the same time, it will bring about a systematic and gradual reduction of the quantity of cotton now held by the Government as security for loans made during the marketing years of 1937 and 1938.

Up to the present time the Commodity Credit Corporation has made advances on approximately 12,000,000 bales of cotton, representing an investment of nearly $560,000,000. Unless some measure is adopted during the present session of Congress changing the policies of the present farm law with respect to accumulation of large stocks of cotton under loans, it appears inevitable that additional large quantities of cotton will be so acquired during the coming year.

This bill will correct the situation by turning the current production into the normal channels of trade through the means of cotton price-adjustment payments. It in no way affects the operation of the 1939 acreage allotments provided for under the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938. Also, the soil-conservation program will be continued unchanged, and cooperating farmers will receive, as usual, any payments thereunder to which they might be entitled.

SECTIONAL ANALYSIS OF BILL

Section 1 provides that the title of this measure shall be the "Cotton Price Adjustment Act of 1939."

Section 2 of this bill amends section 303 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 by adding thereto a new subsection authorizing and prescribing the terms under which price adjustment payments on cotton may be made. This section provides that in any year when the average price during the marketing year of Middling %-inch cotton on the 10 designated markets is below 75 percent of the parity price of cotton, the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized and directed to make price adjustment payments to cotton producers. It is provided that only those farmers who keep within their farm-acreage allotments established under the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act will be eligible for payments.

These payments are to be based on the average production on the farm-acreage allotments on the date of sale, at rates equal to the amount by which the average price at the designated markets on the day previous to the date of sale by the producer is below 75 percent of the parity price. The maximum rate of any payment is limited to 5 cents per pound. The following illustrates how such payments would be calculated: If the price on the day previous to the date of sale is 7 cents per pound, assuming 75 percent of parity to be 12 cents, then the rate would be the difference between 12 cents and 7 cents, or 5 cents per pound. If the price rose to 8 cents, then the payment would be 4 cents, and with each 1 cent rise in price the rate accordingly would be reduced 1 cent. When a price of 12 cents is reached it would obviate any payment whatsoever. Should the price decline below 7 cents per pound, the payment would be calculated at the rate of 5 cents per pound, inasmuch as such rate is the top limit.

It also is provided that no payments shall be made on any cotton upon which loans have been made pursuant to the loan section of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938. This provision coupled with the fact that growers will receive more income for their cotton if they accept such payments rather than obtain loans, in the opinion of your committee, will cause the bulk of the current and future cotton crops to move freely into the regular channels of trade. There would be no incentive to the growers to place their cotton under Government loans and further increase the already burdensome surplus owned by the Commodity Credit Corporation.

As used in this subsection, average production for any number These payments are to be based on the average production on

As used in this subsection, average production for any number of acres is defined to mean the average production per acre for the farm for the 5 calendar years preceding the year for which such average production is determined, adjusted for abnormal weather conditions, times such number of acres.

This section also contains a provision to allow any grower whose crops are destroyed to receive such payments on the quantity of cotton by which his average production is in excess of his actual production.

This section contains an authorization of an appropriation for such sums as may be necessary to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out the provisions of the bill.

Section 3 of this measure amends subsection (b) of section 343 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 by providing that if the national allotment for any year is determined under the formula set out in said act to be less than 11,000,000 bales, then the national allotment for such year shall be 11,000,000 bales. In other words, the minimum national allotment is fixed at 11,000,000 other words, the minimum national allotment is fixed at 11,000,000 bales.

Section 4 of this bill amends the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 by adding after section 393 thereof three new sections.

The first of these new sections, section 394, authorizes and directs the Commodity Credit Corporation, after July 1, 1940, to acquire title to cotton from the 1934 crop remaining as security for loans made by the Corporation and, after discharging all obligations with respect to such cotton, to transfer title to the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation, at such times and in such quantities as may be applied for by that Corporation. The latter agency is directed to dispose of this cotton in ways which will tend to expand markets for or increase consumption of cotton or cotton products, or develop new uses thereof, provided such disposition does not interfere with the sale and distribution of cotton and cotton products in the normal channels of trade.

Under this section approximately 1,600,000 bales of cotton from the 1934 crop would be transferred to the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation. Of this quantity not in excess of 500,000 bales, or products thereof, may be donated for distribution to needy recipients. The Corporation is empowered to sell any unsuitable qualities of cotton and purchase in the open market in lieu thereof qualities which will be suitable for the prescribed purposes.

Section 395 (a) provides that any cotton producer who reduces lieu thereof qualities which will be suitable for the prescribed purposes.

Section 395 (a) provides that any cotton producer who reduces his cotton acreage on his farm in 1939, not less than 20 percent nor more than 75 percent, below his soil-conservation allotment, and who devotes the land so withdrawn to soil conserving and soil building uses, may be compensated by the release to him by the Commodity Credit Corporation of a like quantity of cotton at a price of 3 cents per pound, basis Middling, % inch. It is required that any farmer who purchases cotton under this plan shall, wherever practicable, receive cotton on which a loan was made to him; but if necessary the Corporation may release to him any cotton of the 1937 or 1938 crops to which it has acquired title. The Corporation is directed, when necessary to carry out the purposes of this section, to acquire title to any cotton held as security for any loan made or arranged for by the Corporation by paying to the borrower the sum of $1.25 a bale. All expenses and obligations, including accrued interest and carrying charges, assessed against cotton released under this section will be borne by the Corporation.

Section 395 (b) requires that any grower who purchases cotton from the Government in lieu of production in 1939 shall not be penalized in computing allotments in subsequent years. In making such future determinations this section specifies that any acreage so diverted from the production of cotton in 1939 shall be deemed to have been planted to cotton and to have produced the same average yield as the acreage actually devoted to the production of cotton on such farm in 1939.

Cotton released under this section will not thereafter be eligible for a loan from the Commodity Credit Corporation. Such a loan from the Commodity Credit Corporation.

Cotton or cotton on such farm in 1939.

Cotton released under this section will not thereafter be eligible for a loan from the Commodity Credit Corporation. Such a loan would defeat the purpose of this section, which is patterned after the Smith cotton-option plan incorporated in title II of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, approved May 12, 1933. This plan proved of great benefit to cotton growers at practically no expense to the Government.

Should extra growers account to the section of the control of the section of the control of the section of the sec to the Government.

Should cotton growers cooperate to the extent of 100 percent with this provision by purchasing 75 percent of their allotment from the Government instead of producing it, then 9,000,000 bales would be repurchased. This would reduce the tremendous surplus with which we are now confronted to approximately 3,000,000 bales, or a carry-over of normal proportions. Then in 1940 the United States would not be hampered with such a large surplus as it has been for the past several years.

Section 396 provides that any grower who so desires after July.

been for the past several years.

Section 396 provides that any grower who so desires, after July 1, 1940, may repossess cotton pledged by him as security for a loan with the Commodity Credit Corporation. The amount which may be so released in any marketing year is limited to 2,500,000 bales, with the further stipulation that no cotton shall be released during the months September to December, inclusive. The release of cotton under this section is discretionary with the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Commodity Credit Corporation is forbidden to release any of such cotton unless recommended by the Department of Agriculture. ment of Agriculture.

ment or Agriculture.

Cotton released under this section is to be transferred to the grower at a price sufficiently below the loan value and other charges against such cotton as may be necessary to enable borrowers to sell such cotton, provided that the amount does not exceed $1.50 a bale below the average 10 spot-market price, adjusted for the particular quality of cotton and its location as in the 1937 release program. The Corporation shall assume and discharge whatever costs necessary to enable the grower to put the cotton into the channels of trade.

SUMMARY AND CONCLUSIONS

It is the opinion of your committee that this bill will solve the present serious cotton situation, especially from the long-time point of view. It is a type of emergency measure which will improve conditions from year to year. As the surplus is liquidated the cost of the measure should diminish to the vanishing point

Its first objective is to increase the income of the cotton grower and bring it somewhere near the same percent of parity enjoyed by other farmers; second, it is designed to stop the further piling up of cotton in Government loans, which now total nearly 12,000,-000 bales, and at the same time turn the cotton into trade channels; third, it will provide cotton for relief purposes where it can be utilized by people too poor to buy needful cotton goods, and other portions of it can be used for entirely new and untried uses; fourth, it will provide for the flow of the coming crop as well as some of the loan cotton into the channels of consumption in such a way as to prevent dumping and the consequent disastrous further decline in cotton prices. It also will insure farmers that they may plant, if they wish, 27,000,000 acres of cotton this year and that there will be an allotment of at least 11,000,000 bales in any year. It is the belief of your committee that if this bill is enacted into law that we soon will see a rising cotton market, and that conditions among cotton growers will greatly improve.

RECOMMENDATIONS

Your committee has held extensive public hearings on this bill and has given thorough and careful consideration to its provision. Your committee recommends that the bill be passed at the earliest possible time.

TERRITORIAL RIGHTS OF GUATEMALA

Mr. REYNOLDS. I submit a resolution and respectfully request that it be read to the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the clerk will read.

The legislative clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 100), as

Resolved, That the Senate of the United States requests that the Secretary of State submit to it (if not incompatible with the public interest) information as to what, if anything, is being done by our Government toward protecting, as a part of the Monroe Doctrine, the alleged territorial rights of our sister Republic of Guatemala in its dispute with Great Britain over Belize (British Honduras), as evidenced by the White Book, recently released by the Guate-malan Government, protesting the procedure of Great Britain and appealing to the universal concurrence of civilized nations to come to her aid, and in which the Guatemalan Government has unsuccessfully urged that Great Britain accept President Franklin D. Roosevelt as arbitrator.

Mr. PITTMAN. I ask that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

INVESTIGATION AS TO BARRIERS AND BURDENS UPON INTERSTATE COMMERCE

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I submit for appropriate reference a resolution which calls the attention of the Congress to a very serious situation. By this resolution I am asking that a committee be appointed to investigate the situation referred to.

Back in the days before the Constitution we had 13 nations in this country. They built tariff barriers, and the situation became so critical that some States threatened war on other States. Then it was that the great minds of that day saw the need of an organic law that would forbid tariff walls between States, the need of a union where commerce would flow freely.

In these recent years we have seen in the name of police power, tariff walls built which are threatening the very life of the Nation.

We believe in the police power, but we do not believe in it as a smoke screen or a camouflage to hide an illegal or un-When it is used in that way it is constitutional purpose. not a reasonable or justifiable use of the police power.

The milk situation in Washington in the past few days has brought this situation to the attention of the people in a dramatic fashion. If Washington were to sell milk at 9 cents a quart, there would be three times the amount of milk consumed. It would be possible to have shipped into the District, in glass-lined refrigerator cars, the finest milk in the world from the Middle West.

We are at the seat of government here, and this is a good place to begin in seeing that commerce shall flow freely between the States again so that no one can, under the guise of the police power, invade the rights of the producing class the farmers. Let us hope that it will not be long before the era of tariff barriers between the States shall be over.

We are one people, one nation, and anything that creates economic barriers and differences tends toward resurrecting the secession idea. I hope the Congress will adopt this reso-

I ask that the resolution be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 101) was read and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, as follows:

Whereas legislation enacted by the several States, and by the Congress with respect to the District of Columbia, regulating the bringing into such States, and such District, of legitimate articles of commerce does in many instances actually result in the establishment of artificial and unconstitutional barriers to the free flow of trade and commerce among such States, and between such States and such District, although the enactment of such legislation purports to be an exercise of the police power to protect the health and other interests of such States and such District;

Whereas the extent of such legislation has become so general that it constitutes a serious burden upon interstate commerce and has a serious adverse effect upon the economic life of the Nation: Therefore be it

Resolved, That a special committee of three Senators, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, is authorized and directed to make a full and complete study and investigation of legislation and other governmental action which results in the establishment of barriers to and burdens upon interstate commerce, and of the effect of such legislation and other governmental action upon such commerce and upon the economic life of the Nation. The committee shall report to the Senate, as soon as practicable, the results of its study and investigation, together with its recommendations.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions and recesses of the Senate in the Seventy-sixth and succeeding Congresses, to employ such clerical and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures, as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $10,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate, upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

R. 2868) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recom-mend to their respective Houses as follows:

MCMILLAN, J. BUELL SNYDER, EMMET O'NEAL, GEO. W. JOHNSON, W. P. LAMBERTSON, Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, there is one item in the conference report which I think the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. Frazier] desires to discuss. I move the adoption of the

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I wish to inquire what was done with the appropriation for grasshopper control.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, as the Senator from North Dakota knows, the House originally included in the bill $2,000,000 for what has been designated as the grasshopper item. It also included some others. The Senate put in the bill the larger amount of $5,417,000, being the full amount which the Agricultural Department requested. The House twice passed upon the matter and declined to accede to the Senate amendment; and the conference committee reported an increase of $1,000,000 over the original House figures.

The Senate members of the conference committee did what could be done to maintain the Senate figures. It was my own judgment and the judgment of others that the wise thing for Congress to have done was to have appropriated the full amount, in order that we might meet the problem, as we thought, once and for all. The House took a different view; so we acceded to what we thought was the best amount obtainable at this time, which is an increase of $1,000,000. That leaves available for grasshopper work $3,000,000 from this appropriation, $700,000 of money unexpended from previous appropriations, and approximately $1,000,000 in materials.

It should be added that if this amount proves to be definitely inadequate, we have the Agricultural appropriation bill coming, and there will be other deficiency bills. This action does not shut the door to increasing the amount available for the purpose; and it has seemed to us that we were driven to asking the Senate to adopt the conference report, although it is not satisfactory to the Senate or the Senate conferees.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I desire to say a word on the grasshopper situation.

The Department think they need the full amount. In the past they have had a smaller amount for the eradication of grasshoppers and other similar pests, but have not had sufficient to take care of all the vacant land in the agricultural district that must be taken care of, where the grasshopper eggs hatch. Last year a great deal of grasshopper poison was spread throughout the Middle West States, but we had one of the worst grasshopper years we have ever had; and the claim of the Department was that they did not have enough poison to cover all the infested areas, and for that reason what was done was not effective.

I had hoped—and that seems to be the view of the representatives of the agricultural districts in the Middle West—that we could get sufficient money this year to spread poison over the vacant land that is not cropped, so that the grass-hoppers might be killed there just as well as on the cultivated lands. I should like to see it tried out. If they cannot be stopped, we shall have to let them go; but if we have a small amount like $3,000,000 this year, the Department will make the same excuse they made last year. It seems to be the general consensus of the Department of Agriculture and others who administer the work that unless they have sufficient money to cover the whole territory there is very little chance of eradicating the hoppers.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, I agree with what has been said on this subject by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. Frazier].

The Senators from the States affected have had frequent conferences with the Bureau of Entomology and the Bureau of the Budget; and it is conceded that the amount fixed by this conference report will be totally insufficient to carry on a proper program. It seems to me that if the Government does not appropriate an amount sufficient to carry on an adequate program it would be a waste of money to attempt any program at all. I cannot understand why this cannot be seen by the conference committee.

I certainly am opposed to the conference report as it stands

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the conference report will be agreed to.

Mr. FRAZIER. I object to agreeing to the conference report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question, then, is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, personally I believe it is a mistake to cut down the appropriation for grasshopper relief. We have appropriated money for that purpose in the past, and I think a great deal of it has not resulted in any good. The campaign against grasshoppers has not been successful.

It is claimed, as the Senator from North Dakota has said, that this failure came about mainly because the amount appropriated was not sufficient to provide the necessary poison to spread over the country affected by grasshoppers and to cover the land that was not cultivated, on which no farmer or anyone else was interested in exterminating grasshoppers, with the result that the crop of grasshoppers from such land later on went over on the other land and destroyed the crop.

The Department's work is somewhat experimental, as nearly as I can ascertain. Other experiments have failed; and the attempt now is to be made, if we will appropriate sufficient money, to spread the poison over cultivated and uncultivated land as well, with a view of taking in the whole grasshopper district and exterminating the grasshoppers, whether on cultivated land or on land that is not under cultivation.

It is believed by those in charge that the amount of money appropriated by the Senate is not very large for carrying out such a program, and that, indeed, to permit some of the uncultivated lands to go untreated may result in the end in no good being done to the cultivated land, where the poison has been placed, and where it has been effective. As I understand, the program of those who desire to try out the experiment is to treat the uncultivated land.

While we sometimes look at the matter laughingly, perhaps some thinking it is not of much importance to meet and overcome this grasshopper scourge, I wish to say to the Senate that control of the pest is a Nation-wide problem, in my opinion; that is a greater problem than we comprehend.

Of course, it is uncertain at this time of the year whether there will be a grasshopper plague on any land. It depends somewhat upon the weather. The right kind of weather will exterminate all of the pests. On the other hand, if the weather is propitious for the hatching of the grasshoppers, none of them will be exterminated, and there will be a horde of grasshoppers which will destroy the crops in all of the grasshopper area, comprising something more than 20 States of the Union.

The infested area is growing in extent, as I understand, spreading a little each year, so the pest will get into agricultural States, which have not been afflicted with it in the past. I think it would be a great mistake if we did not try this larger experiment, and seek to cover the whole country at once, and be prepared for the infestation.

If the weather is such as to cause to be hatched all the grasshoppers the eggs of which are now laid in the soil, in the grass, both on cultivated and uncultivated land, and all of them mature, the amount of money we have heretofore appropriated will not come anywhere near meeting the contingency.

I believe other Senators will agree with me, if they give the subject serious consideration, that this is a question of national importance. As I see it, it is a mistake to endeavor to attack the problem in a small way. The scourge has been growing for years, and it is now covering a large part of the midwestern section of the country.

Mr. President, it seems to me that Congress ought to appropriate at least the amount of money contained in the amendment of the Senate. I appreciate what the Senator from Colorado has said, and it appears to me to be reasonable; but I think the Senator will agree with me that if we are to try this larger scale experiment, then the money appropriated in the conference committee report will not be sufficient to do the work.

I do not know whether or not there is anything else in the bill which needs immediate action; I would not wish to delay it in any way, and I do not like to be unreasonable about the matter; but it seems to me we can well afford to reject the conference report and see if our conferees cannot succeed in convincing their brethren from the House that the larger amount should be provided, the amount appropriated in the Senate committee amendment.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, in connection with the remarks of the Senator from Nebraska, I wish to say that I have had some experience with inadequate appropriations for grasshopper control. I quite well recall that 2 years ago the Governor of my State telephoned me of what may be called a grasshopper epidemic in one small region in New Mexico, covering at that time only one county. It was necessary at that time to have assistance in combatting that infestation, such assistance as other States had been receiving. I went to the Department of Agriculture and found that their funds for this purpose were at that time entirely exhausted. There was no money whatever to be used in the State of New Mexico in an attempt to combat the grasshopper plague. Fortunately the Department understood the problem and sought to and did cooperate, finding other funds which could be made available for controlling the grasshopper epidemic. Perhaps the use of the funds for that purpose was not quite a correct use of them; but the emergency existed, and there was no other place where the money could be obtained; so this money was used for the purpose. and it was used successfully in the particular county where the need arose.

I understand, as perhaps the Senator from Montana and others have understood, that the condition which existed last year and the year before will be greatly exaggerated the coming year if what is reasonably to be expected comes to pass. I do not know whether an appropriation of $2,000,000 or $3,000,000 or $5,000,000 is necessary; but I do believe that the Congress should make an appropriation sufficient to meet the emergency, whatever it may be, when it arises this spring or the coming summer. I know the emergency cannot be met at the time it arises. I have had previous experience with it, and it is my desire that Congress provide an appropriation adequate to meet the condition as it may reasonably be expected to arise.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I do not rise to discuss in particular detail the item under consideration, because my knowledge of the grasshopper pest is limited. I arise to say that in this world we are not settlers but pilgrims, and mankind in this pilgrimage is confronted with a constant battle to overcome things which seem to seek to exterminate the human race. It is still an open question as to whether mankind or insects shall ultimately inherit the earth.

It is my opinion that mankind in his contest with the insect world has about a 50-50 chance to survive.

Those who make an intimate study of the insect world are amazed at that minute life. There are over 4,000,000 different kinds of insects in the world; most of them are open enemies to mankind and they all are our competitors for the world's food supply. Most classes of insects can breed, if, as, and when they choose, in such numbers as they choose, and they can breed either sex they wish at any time they choose, or can breed neuters.

The insect world is not only able to breed with selectivity, but to estimate in advance the numbers they seem to require. Insects are of inexhaustible fecundity. There are more ants in the world than any other living creature, and it is mathematically possible for a pair of houseflies to have 2,000,000,000,000,000 descendants in one season. Any movement taken in this Congress, or in any parliament anywhere, looking toward exterminating insect pests, should have zealous support, because, while it seems bizarre in this prosaic, commonplace world to say that mankind might be exterminated by insect pests, yet if we consult those who know this subject, they will show that mankind is in more danger from bug bane than from any other thing which may seem to threaten man's existence in the future.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I merely rise to call attention to the fact that I gave notice to the Senate that I would speak today touching the joint resolution looking to change in the neutrality law, but I ask the Senate to remove that assignment in view of other engagements, because I am on the conference committee of the House and the Senate considering the bill we call the naval bill and military bill, which has all promise of continuing for some days. I beg the liberty of asking that I be permitted to withdraw my notice. I will at a later time give notice when I may discuss the subject of the proposed change in the neutrality law.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, the Senator from Colorado has explicitly stated the case. The Senate conferees made all the representations and arguments to the House conferees which have been made on the floor of the Senate today, and we experienced the greatest difficulty in getting the House conferees to agree to what we think was the moderate increase which we have already made.

The fact is that we told the conferees that representations had been made to us in the hearing that the Department would rather have no appropriation at all than to have the appropriation provided by the conference report.

The House has been unyielding in the matter, and there are provisions in the bill which it is essential to have passed immediately. They involve many of the employees of the Senate itself who cannot be paid now; it involves the set-up of the Wage and Hour Division; and it is essential that the bill be passed immediately.

As stated by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Adams], the Agricultural appropriation bill is yet to be considered, and another deficiency bill, perhaps two, are to be considered; and if there is any possibility of getting the House to yield on the grasshopper matter, it can be attended to in any one of those bills.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I can understand why the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Glass], the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, should advance precisely the argument that he has to the end that the issues in controversy might be brought to a conclusion. Yet for my own part I feel that the Senate ought to decline to accept the report and make at least one more effort to accomplish the larger appropriation that is sought in the effort to bring about a degree of eradication of the grasshopper pest.

I made up my mind last summer and last fall that expenditures for grasshopper eradication by the poison method were proving futile, were proving an utter waste of millions of Federal dollars annually. I observed at first hand the efforts that men were making to accomplish eradication. Through the summer and fall I witnessed the devastating effect of hordes of hoppers as they moved in, even on areas that once had been treated with the poison. I then made up my mind that I should, so far as my influence went, tolerate no more Federal appropriations for grasshopper eradication along the line that had been practiced.

It was late in the fall when representation was made that the failure of the program was traceable alone to the fact that there was an existing limitation upon the money that was available to accomplish the end sought. I have to acknowledge today that the representation is at least in some degree justified.

The Bureau of Entomology has made its recommendations concerning the amount of money that was required to do the job properly. Before I am prepared finally to say that the expenditure is waste, is futile, I want to see the Bureau of Entomology given the full and free opportunity they desire as presented in their estimates. If under that kind of appropriation the program should ultimately prove futile, I should be the last one to come back a year from now and ask for a continuation of that program. But I say with all seriousness, Mr. President, that to spend less—certainly as much less as is proposed by the House of Representatives—is going to prove an outright waste, an absolute waste of every dollar that is expended.

I should like to feel differently about the matter if I could, but the representations presented before the Appropriations Committee of the Senate made it clear to me that the Bureau of Entomology ought to be given the full amount requested by it, or there ought not to be appropriation of one red cent to continue this particular kind of program. If we limit the amount to $3,000,000 I fear that a year from now; yes, short of that time, we shall have demonstration before us, that every penny of it was an outright waste; that the effort was futile.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris] has splendidly represented the need for the larger appropriation to the end that there may be larger coverage in the conduct of the eradication program itself. I hope that the Senate will not accept the report, but will require a further effort on the part of its conferees to obtain the full amount of the appropriation requested.

Mr. ADAMS. I fully concur with the other members of the conference committee of the Senate as to the desirability of securing the full appropriation. As the Senator from North Dakota knows, the matter was carried through the subcommittee, the full committee, and on the floor of the Senate. The only point at which I disagree with Senators who have spoken is with respect to the feeling on the part of some Senators that the amount on which we were able to secure agreement with the House would be wasted.

In the State of Colorado in the last year much good was accomplished. I do not agree with those who feel that the expenditure of the $3,000,000, plus the $700,000, plus the $1,000,000 in available materials, or $4,700,000 in all, will not accomplish any good.

We are confronted with a practical situation in addition to that. I am perfectly willing to continue to make an effort to secure additional funds. I have done everything I could. So have the other Senate conferees. The question now is whether we should accept the House proposal or go back into conference for further effort. But there are other matters involved. The Wage and Hour Division of the Department of Labor is involved. The money for that great institution is now depleted. We are providing money in the measure to keep that organization under way. If the bill is not passed the Wage and Hour Division will stop functioning.

Another consideration which would, of course, influence no Senator, is that the matter of an extra clerk for every Senator is involved in the bill.

It seems to me that the thing for us to do is to accept what we were able to get from the House with respect to insect pests, and then make an effort in connection with the next agricultural appropriation bill, or a deficiency bill. or a new joint resolution, to obtain additional money which, I agree with the Senators who have spoken, is needed. But I think that we would be wasting our efforts and doing injury to certain essential agencies of the Government if we did not adopt the conference report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives, announcing its action on certain amendments of the Senate to House bill 2868, which was read, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES

Resolved, That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 23 to the bill (H. R. 2868) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, and for other purposes, and concur therein with an amendment as follows: follows:

Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment amended to read as follows:

"PROCUREMENT DIVISION, PUBLIC BUILDINGS BRANCH

"General Federal Office Building, Washington, D. C.: For the acquisition of the necessary land and the construction of a building for additional office space in the District of Columbia under the provisions of the Public Buildings Act approved May 25, 1926 (44 Stat. 630), as amended, including the extension of steam and water mains, removal or diversion of such sewers and utilities as may be recessary and for edministrative expenses in connection therewith nations, removal or diversion of such sewers and definites as may be necessary, and for administrative expenses in connection therewith, $3,500,000"; and

That the House agree to an amendment to the engrossed copy of said bill, in which the concurrence of the Senate be requested,

On page 5, line 2, of said engrossed bill, after "$850,000", insert a colon and "Provided, That such additional sum shall also be available for administrative expenses of the Wage and Hour Division for the fiscal year 1939 heretofore incurred, otherwise properly charge-able thereto."

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, there are two amendments in the House message. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 23, which has to do with the building originally designated as the Census Building, but which by agreement is to be a general office building and not restricted to the Bureau of the Census.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 23.

The motion to concur was agreed to.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, an additional amendment was made by the House. I cannot give the number, as it apparently has no number. The amendment makes money available to the Wage and Hour Division.

I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment to the engrossed bill on page 5, line 2.

The motion was agreed to.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. BYRNES. I send to the desk the conference report on the independent offices appropriation bill, and ask for its consideration at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will read the conference report.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses

as follows:
The committee of conference report in disagreement amendments numbered 17 and 18.

CARTER GLASS. JAMES F. BYRNES, RICHARD B. RUSSELL. ALVA B. ADAMS, PAT MCCARRAN,
JOHN G. TOWNSEND, Jr.,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

C. A. WOODRUM, JED JOHNSON,
JAMES M. FITZPATRICK,
JOHN M. HOUSTON,
R. B. WIGGLESWORTH, EVERETT M. DIRKSEN, FRANCES CASE, Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I move the adoption of the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. BYRNES. I move that the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 17 and 18.

The motion was agreed to.

CREDITS TO BRAZIL

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, before we proceed with the agricultural bill, which I take it that astute and energetic student, the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], is anxious to have action upon, I desire to say a word to the Senate. The public press brings information that our Government had entered upon some plan to lend its credit and its money, to the amount of $120,000,000, to the Government of Brazil.

Mr. President, I call attention to the fact that the Senate is not in complete order. I should like to have the complete attention of Senators.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order. Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President. I repeat that my attention is arrested by the announcement that this Government has entered upon some contract or plan for advancing its credit to the Government of Brazil. To the now attentive Senate I describe the plan as one of lending its money to Brazil. I am informed that is being done by the indirect method of having an institution which has been created under our Government, called the Export-Import Bank, to serve as the agency for an underground, subterranean process that violates the law.

I observe also that there is an assumption that if the money can be obtained from this Government and its people in such sums as is assumed, some portion of it, unless I misconstrue the action, is to be dribbled and trickled at certain periods, at the end of certain months, as a part of the interest due for years by the Government of Brazil upon bonds that are held by the American people, bonds which, up to this point, have been not only wholly in default but fraudulently maintained.

Mr. President, I am pained to observe that when we are assuming to extend favors to Brazil, Brazil at the same time, within the last 2 weeks, has closed an arrangement with Germany by which the machinery of Germany is to be sold to Brazil; and Brazil is to have the privilege, sir, of so-called credits from Germany, to the exclusion of the United States, and that in the meantime coffee and certain other products from Brazil are to be afforded to those with whom she is dealing-I refer particularly to Germany-in excess of any allowed the United States.

I observe also that, notwithstanding the supplies this country could afford Brazil, contracts have been made by Brazil and her representatives with agents representing Germany, while the agents of Brazil are in the United States negotiating loans. These German contracts as made are directly opposed to the United States. Brazilian agents in the United States are assuming to grant at least the opportunity of competition to this country, and at the same time are draining our finances by some arrangement that is assumed to be in the form of a loan through an instrumentality designated as the Export-Import Bank.

Mr. President, I have observed that the reports and the promises assume the payment to be of interest on certain bonds held in the United States. This honorable body will not forget that 11 years ago a similar promise was made by the same government and 7 years past a similar announcement as to this past-due interest on debts due citizens of the United States. The Senate will not neglect to note that six times the promise was revived and repeated; but that in the meantime the bonds on which no money has been paid were held by the American public. The bonds are held in some of the banks of our country. No interest is being paid; but the bonds are being negotiated, wherever possible, to the citizens of the United States. I very much deplore that our country and its instrumentalities-I may say its officials—can find it agreeable to enter upon an arrangement to pledge the money of the United States in a loan to a country which, having had many, many millions of dollars from our country, will pay nothing, promise everything, and do nothing.

I deplore even more the fact that a process of government seems to prevail in this, my country, by which great undertakings such as those to which I am now alluding can be entered upon with no effort of cooperation with a legislative body, despite the law of Congress which forbids, if we read it aright, such lending to countries which are in default, which Brazil clearly must confess.

In particular, sir, I must protest for myself against what we call double dealing by those-

That keep the word of promise to our ear And break it to our hope.

In the meantime, drawing our money, Brazil negotiates trade agreements with foreign countries, and now duplicates such agreements in the very week in which some envoys of this land are in our Capital pretending friendship to us on the one hand, and receiving favors from us on the other.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. LEWIS. I yield.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Will the Senator be good enough to advise the Members of this body why the United States Government finds it necessary to gain favor with Brazil by lending her $120,000,000 of the taxpayers' money when, in truth and in fact, the people of the United States buy more than 40 percent of all the exports from Brazil?

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I acknowledge the information imparted by the Senator from North Carolina. Some time ago he and myself, with other Senators collaborating in expression, called attention to that very situation with respect to Brazil, at which time I added-and I now wish to repeat—that Brazil has been able to encourage 30,000 Japanese to take charge of certain areas in Sao Paulo, where cotton is being produced in competition with the cottonproducing section of the United States. In the meantime a very large colony of thousands upon thousands of Germans are solicited to be in Brazilian locality as the direct representatives and agency in Brazil of the commerce of Germany, these acting as intermediaries against the United States. As my able friend from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] correctly states, it is while we take goods of Brazil in a large amount that she negotiates, through the agents of Germany living in Brazil, to take goods from Germany. To answer the Senator, I do not understand why this is so. I rise before my honorable colleagues demurely to confess an unfortunate ignorance on the part of a Senator who does not obtain information from any source which can be called reliable, other than newspaper reports. From this I behold a course being taken without reference to that body which, under the law, collaborates on foreign affairs, and with which, it would be assumed, someone would have some consultation.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator again vield?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Let me remind the able Senator from Illinois that a few years ago the Brazilian Government was desirous of making a purchase of certain obsolete battleships belonging to the Government of the United States. At that time the Republic of Argentina objected to our selling the obsolete warships to the Government of Brazil, and as a result thereof Great Britain was called upon to construct ships for the Government of Brazil. Let me also make the observation that I have been informed-whether or not the information is correct I am unable to say—that a portion of the $120,000,000 which it is proposed to lend to Brazil is to be utilized in repaying the British Government for certain obligations that are due at the present time from Brazil.

Mr. LEWIS. I coincide with the able Senator from North Carolina, and add a further word. Certain debts are due from Brazil to Great Britain. There is interest due upon some of those obligations; and one of the very understandings in obtaining the money from the United States under the proposed loan is that a part of the money is to be applied to the debts due to Great Britain. It is that against which I protest. I do not mean that I would not have England collect her debts or that I would not have Brazil pay her debts. However, I am not reconciled to my own country, in her present condition, lending her money and credit to other nations to enable them to pay their debts due to other countries while they are also in debt to us in the amount of millions of dollars and pay nothing.

Mr. President, I have already taken more time than I had intended.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. I am interested, as are all other Senators, when the able Senator from Illinois addresses the Senate. He has given evidence of ripe scholarship respecting constitutional law. In view of the fact that the Constitution does not permit any officer of the Government to pay out money from the Treasury of the United States unless Congress appropriates such money, will the Senator advise us before what committee of the Senate is pending the bill proposing to appropriate $120,000,000 to be loaned to Brazil?

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Arizona that I reciprocate from gratitude his allusions to myself. Only a moment ago I remarked that I, as a Member of this honorable body, have been compelled to obtain information on this very alive and weighty subject from such current stuff as came through the newspapers. Speaking for myself, I have not been honored with information from any official source as to the proposal. I have seen no bill coming to the Senate. I have heard of no message from our President or Cabinet being presented. I am not conscious of any information being advanced; and I am perfectly conscious that no guidance from us is asked.

I now answer further, with a sense of somewhat wounded vanity, that at a time when all available information touching public affairs, particularly of an international character, should be submitted to this body or to some representative of it, I do not like the conception that my colleagues and I are regarded as so insignificant as to be ignored. Yet there comes to us neither the opportunity to ask nor the courtesy of tendered guidance or direction. We, the Senate, are given no information by which we may be directed. In answer to the Senator I will say that to my knowledge we have not been appealed to for information or direction, nor have we been given information on the proposed legislation.

I now answer the Senator from North Carolina. I deplore the existence of such a state of affairs. I join the Senator from Arizona in deep regret.

Mr. ASHURST. Before the Senator from Illinois leaves that subject, surely we are not to contemplate with equanimity the statement that an official of the United States Government proposes to loan $120,000,000, or any other sum, to a foreign power without the authority of Congress for such loan, because if there be one subject upon which the people of the United States have made themselves vocal, upon which we, indeed, know their views, it is that not a dollar should be loaned to a foreign government unless and until that government gives safe and good security for the repayment of such money. It is the policy of foreign governments, it is a part of their scheme, a part of their plan of life, never to repay a dollar to the United States if they can avoid doing so. In view of that situation, I do not perceive how or why, under the Constitution, an official of the United States may lend any money to a foreign government, because, forsooth, without an act of Congress, it would be a violation of the law; indeed, it would be a violation of that which is higher than the law—the common judgment and fixed determination of the American people. I believe the able Senator from Illinois has today performed a public service in this respect. Instead of lending money to foreign governments Congress ought to be busily engaged in enacting protective-tariff laws in order to protect the United States.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield to me?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I should like the Senator to know that only a few weeks ago it was reported to the Congress, through the press, that the Brazilian Government had outlined a 5-year armament program under which, according to the press, they proposed to make an expenditure of $100,000,000. The same press report stated that more than $70,000,000 of that sum would go to Germany for armament, approximately fifteen or twenty million dollars would go to the British Government for armament, and that the United States would be favored by the Brazilian Government as the result of its contemplated purchase of about $7,000,000 worth of airplane equipment.

Now, I observe, as the Senator has mentioned, we are on the verge of making a $120,000,000 loan to Brazil; and, in pursuance of the statement made by the Senator from Arizona, I wish to direct the attention of the Members of the Senate to the fact that only a short time ago this Government is said to have loaned more than $25,000,000 to the Republic of China.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois permit me to make a correction of what I said a moment ago?

Mr. LEWIS. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Arizona. Mr. ASHURST. I stated that no foreign government intends to repay the United States. I was incorrect. The Government of Finland is an honest government and undoubtedly has honest officials. That Government has, I believe, repaid or is making repayment upon their debt to the United States. I may be in error, but I believe Finland is the only government that is making payments to the United States on its debt as it falls due.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President-

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. MURRAY. I may say that the Irish borrowed $10,000,000 from the people of this country with which to prosecute their revolution, and that the entire $10,000,000 has been repaid, with interest, to the American people. That was a voluntary act and an example of good faith which other countries might emulate.

Mr. ASHURST. I am not surprised that the people of Ireland pay their debts, for that is their history for 700 years. As I understand that particular matter, however, it was not an obligation which the Irish government was required to pay, and if they had not repaid the items, the Irish government would not have been delinquent in any sense, as that transaction was personal and individual. Ireland is a classic example because her people are repaying that which in morals and in law they are not required nor expected to repay.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield further to me?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina. Mr. REYNOLDS. I assume that the Senator from Montana is referring to the liquidation of obligations by the Independent Irish Free State?

Mr. MURRAY. By the Irish Free State Government, although there was no obligation on the Irish Free State Government to assume that obligation. It did so voluntarily and freely.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President-

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. GLASS. The Senator from Illinois has been kind enough three times to yield to me, but I have not yet been able to say what I wanted to say.

Mr. LEWIS. I again yield to the Senator from Virginia and request that other Senators shall recognize the courtesy extended.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, Senators have short memories. The Senate and the Congress a few days ago, without a single dissent, extended the life of the abominable Export-Import Bank, and not only extended its life, but increased its authority to loan. It gets its funds from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. I assume that under this enactment of the Congress, which passed this body without dissent, the loan referred to is being made.

Mr. LEWIS. May I not ask the able Senator from Virginia if he does not concede that finally such loans come from the United States and out of the United States Treasury?

Mr. GLASS. Of course; all appropriations we make come out of the United States Treasury, just as all the money the Congress appropriates for relief comes out of the taxpayers. but the taxpayers do not seem to have sufficient sense to Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator from Virginia, regardless of his opinion of the Export-Import Bank, which he describes as abominable, has correctly stated what has occurred within recent days in the Congress. The Export-Import Bank was created by authority of Congress for the purpose of helping to facilitate the exportation of American products to foreign markets. Its activities have been very largely limited to the help which it has granted to enable American exporters to find markets and to finance the exportation of American products to foreign countries.

I have not seen a copy of the agreement that has been entered into between Mr. Hull, as Secretary of State, and the former Ambassador from Brazil, Mr. Aranha, who has been in this country for the past few weeks, but I understand that it is predicated somewhat upon the same situation to which the Senator from North Carolina referred a moment ago in regard to a so-called loan to China.

The Government of the United States made no loan to China. The Export-Import Bank made a loan to an American corporation for the purpose of enabling that corporation to ship American goods to China, and the whole transaction occurred between the Export-Import Bank and the corporation which was engaged in the exportation of goods to China. I think probably the Chinese Government in some fashion guaranteed the payment of the obligation to the American corporation which extended the credit after obtaining it from the Export-Import Bank. That, however, was not a direct loan by the Government of the United States to China, although the Chinese Republic was interested in its citizens or its own corporation obtaining the credit which enabled it to buy $25,000,000 worth of American goods.

That matter was gone into before the committee when Mr. Jones, Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, appeared before it advocating the extension of the law to which the Senator from Virginia referred. Mr. Pierson, president of the Export-Import Bank, also appeared before the committee in the same cause.

I do not think we can rely upon newspaper reports about what is contained in the agreement, and I do not understand that Secretary Hull has entered into any agreement to loan directly to the Brazilian Government a certain amount of money-and the Export-Import Bank would not have any authority to do that—but that it is a credit which has been made available for the purpose of enabling Brazil, either through some agency of its own or through some private organization operating under the Government, to purchase a large quantity of American products. Certainly I do not understand that the agreement contemplates that $70,000,000 of money advanced by the Export-Import Bank is to be spent in Germany or is to be used to repay Great Britain or anybody in England any debt that the Brazilian people may owe. It is entered into and contemplated for the purpose of aiding in the exportation of American products to Brazil, which has been the main object, and the main activity, I will say, of the Export-Import Bank in furnishing credit to facilitate the transportation and sale and financing of American products.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois permit me to ask the Senator from Kentucky a question?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will be glad to answer the Senator's question if I can, but I do not know whether I can.

Mr. REYNOLDS. If the Chinese Government borrows $25,000,000 from a corporation that is organized and operating in the city of New York and the corporation thus organized and operating in the city of New York borrows $25,000,000 from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, I will ask the Senator if the Republic of China is not getting its money from the taxpayers of the United States.

Mr. BARKLEY. In a sense the Senator might so interpret it; but what happened was that the Export-Import Bank made a loan to an American corporation desiring to export to China $25,000,000 worth of American goods. It did not export the goods to the Chinese Government; it exported them to a corporation organized in China for the purpose of enabling this quantity of American goods to go forward to China. I am not certain, but it is my understanding that the Chinese Government did guarantee that the corporation located in China would repay to the corporation located in America the money that it borrowed from the Export-Import Bank.

Mr. REYNOLDS. There was, therefore, a guaranty by the Chinese Government to the Government of the United States that the loan would be liquidated?

Mr. BARKLEY. It was not a direct loan by the Government of the United States to the Chinese Government; there was not a direct guaranty by the Chinese Government to the United States Government; but, in order that the Chinese corporation, which desired to purchase $25,000,000 worth of American goods might do so, the Chinese Government in some fashion did guarantee the repayment of the loan. It is my understanding that a similar arrangement, although involving a different amount, has been entered into in regard to the transaction between the Secretary of State, operating, of course, through the R. F. C. and the Export-Import Bank, in order that the financing and exportation of a large quantity of American goods to Brazil might be facilitated.

I will say to the Senator that I have not seen the contract or agreement; and I do not think the newspaper reports to which the Senator has alluded give the real inside of the transaction, the basis of it, and the modus operandi by which it is to be carried forward.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I acknowledge the contribution of the able Senator from Kentucky, who ever contributes, sir, what may be necessary both to information and to guidance in matters touching the Government. But first I will have him gather the thought, if there is a parallel between the action in the case of China and that in the case of Brazil, that first he is confronted with the fact that there is no law that touches China wherein the law prohibits loans to a country in default of its debt when its debt is held by the United States. Secondly, sir, regarding the institution called the Export-Import Bank-my able colleague has defined something of its terms-I do not know what has possessed officials in these latter days by which it is assumed that we must adopt this circumlocutory process of subterranean reachings to achieve some object which could be accomplished just as well plainly and outwardly, with the object disclosed and its purposes revealed.

I therefore, for that reason, cannot agree with my able friend that because a thing is done by these indirect methods and in this indirect manner it becomes legal, whereas otherwise on its face it would be confessed to be illegal and in violation of law.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator further vield?

Mr. LEWIS. Certainly, I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The question whether it was a violation of law for the Export-Import Bank to make this arrangement is one upon which there might be difference of opinion. It is not my understanding that the Brazilian Government is in default of any obligation it owes to the Government of the United States. I may be mistaken as to that; I may not have that information; but I do not understand that to be the case. There are, of course, municipal bonds and municipal obligations of various South American countries which were sold over a period of time to citizens of the United States, largely through the salesmanship of American corporations and American banks-a matter into which we went in some detail some years ago-which are in default and which may forever be in default. I do not understand, however-and if I am mistaken about that I am subject, of course, to correction—that the Brazilian Government as such owes the United States Government as such any amount on which it is in default.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I beg to inform my able friend from Kentucky that the law is addressed to bonds which have been issued by other countries, sent into America, and, from agencies of any nature, passed to the citizen, which are now held by the citizen in default, with no payments upon them, and no spirit indicating an effort to do so. The law is not limited to loans from the United States Government to the Brazilian Government. My able friend seems to assume that that is the expression of the law.

Mr. BARKLEY. Oh, no. I was alluding to what I thought the Senator a moment ago contended, that the Government of Brazil is now indebted to the Government of the United States in an amount in which it is in default.

Mr. LEWIS. To the people of the United States.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, the mere fact that there may have been sold to the American people, largely through the instrumentality of American corporations and American banks, municipal obligations of certain countries in South America—not only Brazil, but Argentina, Uruguay, Paraguay, Chile, Peru, and all the others of them—obligations of cities or counties or parishes or even districts which are in default does not make it unlawful for the Export-Import Bank to make loans to American corporations to enable them to ship American goods into those countries. Since the Export-Import Bank was organized to help us find a market for American products, certainly it was not the intention of Congress to make such a transaction as that unlawful.

Mr. LEWIS. Then I understand that my able friend would intimate that, despite the law, if there can be found some method by which some agency can be created whose hand may do the act that the body is forbidden to achieve. it will be legal and right. I answer him, does he not recall that after the World War, during which we loaned large sums for the conduct of the war, our Government loaned money to France and England ostensibly for the purpose of aiding industry and giving rise to new commerce; that the loans were made through two different boards, and that an agency that came over purported to be a financial agency on the one hand and dealt with the Board on the other; and yet I remind my able friend that those debts have not been paid, and the answer comes to us constantly and ever, "We do not owe the United States. We did not borrow this money from the Government. We borrowed it through a board, and issued the bonds which are now outstanding in the United States," largely held by a couple of banks to which we need not now refer.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Senator will yield-

Mr. LEWIS. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. The so-called Johnson Act, I suppose, is the one to which the Senator has alluded as making it unlawful for the American Government to make loans to any country which is in default of obligations which it as a government owes to the United States. The war debts, which were the basis of the Johnson Act and which had been defaulted, are obligations of the governments of Europe, which during the World War and following the World War borrowed money directly from the Government of the United States. The debts were refunded through a joint commission set up by Congress and largely reduced in amount, so that those obligations are now direct obligations of the governments of Europe to the Government of the United States.

Mr. LEWIS. I must correct my able and eminent friend and assure him that he has a wrong conception. The Johnson Act was specifically addressed, among other things, to the debts due from South America. Allusion was made to the fact that there was $290,000,000 of such debts—my able friend participated in the debate in a small degree and myself in a lesser degree—and among other governments that were referred to the Senator remembers that bonds were issued by certain governments, which need not be named now, when it was known in one case that the government had no authority to issue the bonds, but the son of the head of the government was sent to America and negotiated them, with forgery attached to the transaction.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. LEWIS. It was to these matters that the law to which we are now alluding was addressed, as well as to the other matter my able friend may conceive was in the mind of Congress.

Mr. BARKLEY. Those matters were gone into during the discussion, but while I have not read the act for some months it is not my recollection that the act specifically refers to those transactions.

Mr. LEWIS. They are not referred to in the act, but the basis of the act was the matters to which I am referring.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, even the son of a President would not have been able to impose those bonds upon the American people without the cooperation, which he had, of certain large banking institutions in this country, which facilitated the transactions and were instrumental in palming off, as we then said and as we could still say, these bonds upon the people of the United States.

Mr. LEWIS. I thank the Senator from Kentucky. He has given suggestions of value.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President-

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. May I submit a question to the able Senator from Illinois and to the Senator from Kentucky? Suppose the $25,000,000 loaned to China and the $120,000,000 loaned to Brazil, whether in the form of a direct loan or in the form of an advance of credit, are never repaid: The loss will finally fall on the taxpayers of the United States, will it not?

Mr. LEWIS. If the able Senator from Idaho is addressing his question to the Senator from Kentucky, I yield to that Senator in order that he may reply.

Mr. BARKLEY. I assume so; just as we might say that if the $3,000,000,000 which the Home Owners' Loan Corporation has loaned is never repaid by the home owners, the taxpayers of the United States, of course, will suffer; and the same thing is true of all the other loaning agencies which have been created. They may be called fictions of law, but they are corporations. I refer to the Federal Housing Administration, the United States Housing Authority, and various other institutions set up by authority of Congress which have made loans directly to individuals, although the money has come from the Treasury of the United States. If we can imagine a wholesale default on the part of all the borrowers from those institutions, of course the taxpayers will likewise lose.

Mr. LEWIS. Yes; that is true.

Mr. BARKLEY. The object of the creation of the Export-Import Bank was not in order to enable somebody somewhere else in the world to obtain credit or to borrow money, but was to enable the American people to find a market for and sell their otherwise unsalable surpluses of American products which are weighing heavily upon the markets in our own domestic field.

Mr. BORAH. Of course, if the Home Owners' Loan Corporation becomes a failure, the taxpayers will have to settle, but in that matter we are dealing with our own people. We are endeavoring to take care of them under adverse circumstances. But I do not think the taxpayers are willing to engage in loans all over the world knowing that they will have to take care of them in case of failure to pay, and judging the future by the past, there will be a failure to pay. We now have some $12,000,000,000 of obligations due and unpaid. The taxpayers of this country will have to pay them, and so far as dictators and republics and democracies are concerned, there is no difference between them when they come to pay debts. They default just the same in one instance as in the other. Italy and Great Britain stand side by side in their defalcation and refusal to pay the honorable debts which were contracted during and after the war.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President-

Mr. LEWIS. I thank the Senator from Idaho for his suggestion. I now yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I desire to state to the Senator from Illinois that it is my recollection at the present time that there have been floated with investors in this country approximately $360,000,000 in bonds issued by various municipalities in Brazil and by sundry states of the United States of Brazil, and I am informed that some bonds of the Brazilian Government itself constitute part of the $360,000,000, and that they have not only failed to liquidate any of the principal itself but they have failed to liquidate the interest up to date.

I make this inquiry of the Senator because, like the Senator from Idaho, I am interested in the taxpayers of the United States.

In case the Export-Import Bank of this country makes a loan of $120,000,000 to a corporation in this country, and the corporation in this country utilizes the $120,000,000 to finance the export of goods to Brazil, and the Brazilians fail to liquidate their obligations to the home corporation, and the home corporation goes broke, how are the taxpayers of America ever going to collect the $120,000,000 which the State Department, we will assume, has agreed to let Brazil have?

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I have occupied more time than I thought I would when I rose to bring forth a suggestion which I thought might be considered by this body. I wish to conclude with the observation that it is to be dreamed that at some appropriate time, somewhere, somehow, our honorable officials of Government will find it not incompatible with their dignity to report to the United States Senate something of the transactions which touch the Government, and in the consideration of which the Senate, by the Constitution is made a collaborating agency.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Schwellenbach in the chair). Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Export-Import Corporation is required by law to make a report to Congress, and does so, and has done so since its existence.

Mr. LEWIS. I must inform my able friend that one of my grievances is that there is no law which compels this institution, which has been designated by a dignified term, by which it is elevated in the financial nomenclature as the "Export-Import Bank," to make any suggestion whatever before it acts. It is an ex post facto report, under the law—after the crime.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, all the acts of the Government, and the reports of Cabinet officers and departments, are, in a sense, ex post facto. They cannot report to Congress what they have done until they have done it, and the law does not require them to report in advance. They are required only to report what they have done.

Mr. LEWIS. I must advise my able friend that the President of the United States sends to this honorable body and to the full Congress from time to time information as to matters which he seeks, and very carefully and courageously asserts that he prays that the Congress will allow him this, that, or the other, naming them. I am not able to see why that does not apply to the matters we are discussing.

that does not apply to the matters we are discussing.

Mr. BARKLEY. That applies to general legislation, and certainly the Senator from Illinois would not expect that the Export-Import Bank or the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, or any of the other lending agencies, would come to Congress every time they were engaged in an individual transaction and get the consent of Congress to make a loan.

Mr. LEWIS. I answer the Senator, I would so expect, when I knew there were laws against it, prohibiting it, and that the spirit of the American public was protesting it. If they wish to make an exception, they should present the facts on which they seek such an exception, and get authority.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the Senator yield to me long enough to read the law?

Mr. LEWIS. The Senator may read it again to me. I myself have had occasion to consider it.

Mr. BARKLEY. It might be well to put it in the RECORD at this point.

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BARKLEY. The law reads:

That hereafter it shall be unlawful within the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States for any person to purchase or sell the bonds, securities, or other obligations of any foreign government or political subdivision thereof or any organization or association acting for or on behalf of a foreign government or political subdivision thereof, issued after the passage of this act, or to make any loan to such foreign government, political subdivision, organization, or association, except a renewal or adjustment of existing indebtedness, while such government, political subdivision, organization, or association is in default in the payment of its obligations, or any part thereof, to the Government of the United States.

The point I am making is that none of these obligations which are in default are obligations to the Government of the United States, and unless they are obligations to the Government of the United States it is not illegal, in my view, for any of the agencies which have general legal authority to do so to make loans such as the one referred to apparently is intended to be, in order to enable American citizens to sell in foreign markets what they have produced and cannot sell here. My contention is that the mere fact that certain governments in South American or elsewhere, or certain municipalities or subdivisions of those governments, have issued bonds which are outstanding in the hands of private owners in the United States who have purchased them, does not bring them within the terms of this law, because it is limited to obligations in default to the Government of the United States.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?
Mr. LEWIS. The able Senator from Kentucky and I differ.
I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. MINTON. If the Senator will read the second section of the Johnson Act he will see that Government corporations are expressly excluded. The second section reads:

As used in this act the term "person" includes individual, partnership, corporation, or association other than a public corporation created by or pursuant to special authorization of Congress, or a corporation in which the Government of the United States has or exercises a controlling interest through stock ownership or otherwise.

Mr. BARKLEY. I did not read the second paragraph because I thought the first paragraph was perfectly plain; that it had to be an obligation to the Government of the United States as such in order that there might be a violation.

Mr. LEWIS. I must correct my able friend the Senator from Indiana. The provision there is accepted as one applying to what had happened previously, to the past, and in nowise applies, as I see it, to future obligations.

Mr. President, I must insist that what is needed is cooperation between these agencies of our Government and its legislative body, particularly in matters which refer to foreign nations, matters dealing with foreign peoples, particularly those whom we have had described from time to time as willing to have portions of their territory made a base of supplies and a resting place for our enemies, armed for assault, possibly, on the Panama Canal; that before loans and favors and great credit are extended to such as these, a much clearer understanding should exist between the representatives of the people. It is not sufficient that mere bureaus should take upon themselves so great a degree of responsibility after what has already transpired with respect to the nations referred to by Senators describing the indebtedness and their attitude of mind and conduct toward us.

Mr. President, at this particular time in world conditions, with enmittee disclosed toward us, and the general attitude of noncooperation on the part of those from whom we might expect friendship, this is not an hour to have things undertaken which may invite us again to conflict of a very serious nature, for if Brazil is again in debt to this country she may be found doing again what she has done, seeking recourse to other nations.

I remind my colleagues that when Brazil was in debt, Brazil had to call upon her friend Germany, and later Germany proceeded to lend aid to Brazil, which the distinguished President of our country in those days was compelled to protest.

I deplore that the conditions should exist which do exist. The Senator from Kentucky, the eminent leader on this side, called attention to the fact that I might have information less than that which may be gleaned from the newspapers. I assure him I read with great completeness the whole contract, to place such percentages of certain debts and of the outstanding debts at certain periods of time. It may be that our Government has started upon a new course as to all these loans; I do not know. My colleagues recall that when Cato arose at a certain time on the floor of the great Roman senate and sought to bring his country to some answer for its conduct, there was one by the name of Checio del Vechio who would rise and rush out to the door and sanctimoniously turn his eyes to the heavens, and when he returned his reply to Cato would be, "The stars are not propitious," and then he would move to adjourn the senate for the salvation of the republic.

I should like to inform the officials of our Government, whoever they are, wherever they are, and under whatever circumstances they may be, that just now in all matters involving foreign governments, in view of the relations of the world, the stars are propitious for a little closer cooperation and a greater degree of confidence between necessary and constitutional bodies in government, looking to the protection of the Republic.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I desire to state that I have enjoyed very much what the able Senator from Illinois [Mr. Lewis] has had to report today to the Members of this body, and, in view thereof, I wish to state that in my opinion Mr. Aranha, of Brazil, gave this country the finest dry cleaning it has ever experienced. The gentleman comes here and obtains $120,000,000. In addition to that he suggests that we send our W. P. A. workers to South America to develop his country at the expense of the taxpayers of the United States. He was so thoroughly pleased with his visit to our Capital City of Washington, where he was very generously entertained, that he issued in New York before his departure a very interesting statement, which perhaps escaped the eyes of the Members of this body, and in view of the fact that it might have escaped their attention, I wish to read the statement of the greatest "dry cleaner," the finest salesman, the world has ever known.

The article is headed:

ARANHA EN ROUTE HOME, PLEASED BY UNITED STATES PACTS

New York, March 11.—Foreign Minister Oswaldo Aranha, of Brazil, sailed home today, confident that the $120,000,000 financial and commercial agreements reached between his country and this would improve Pan American relations.

Why would not $120,000,000 improve the relations between the United States and any country in the world which received $120,000,000 of the money of the taxpayers of the United States of America? But what I ask is whether this matter is going to please very greatly the taxpayers of the United States of America, who in all probability will be called | upon to assume that burden?

Says Mr. Aranha:

"I am happy we have started a broad spirit of cooperation which may lead all countries in the same direction," • • • adding that it was "a good thing" because the United States was beginning to realize it is a creditor nation."

The gentleman reminds the people of the United States that it is a very fine thing that at last the United States of America had begun to realize that it is a creditor nation. In other words, he tells the United States of America that the people of America cannot expect the friendship or retain the friendship of the people of South America unless the United States of America is willing to buy the friendship of the people who live south of the Rio Grande.

I repeat to the Senate that he is the finest salesman I ever heard of in my life. The article continues:

He said Brazil would be able to supply more than one-third of the $2,000,000,000 worth of raw materials which the United States has been buying from foreign countries.

I got a laugh out of this language in the article, and I am sure that Senators who are familiar with the undeveloped portions of American territory will appreciate what he has to say concerning what was done by him in conference with our high executives when he was in the United States. I read from the columns of the daily press:

Plan for large-scale immigration to be submitted. A concrete plan-for large-scale emigration of American farmers, skilled technical workers, and college graduates to Brazil to aid in the country's development, is expected to be submitted to Washington at an early date, it was learned today. Thousands of inquiries have deluged the Brazilian Embassy and American State Department in the wake of revelation that Foreign Minister Oswaldo Aranha has proposed to President Roosevelt that skilled workers and farmers on W. P. A. relief rolls be sent to Brazil in a colonization project similar to the Matanuska colony in Alaska.

Mr. President, this clever salesman from the south suggests to the President of the United States that the President of the United States have those who are on the W. P. A. and relief rolls in the United States today placed aboard ships and sent to Brazil for the purpose of developing that High officials here pointed out that one major stumbling block in the first proposal by Aranha is that W. P. A. funds cannot be expended outside of the territorial jurisdiction of the United States without an act of Congress making specific provision.

I should like to have the article embodied in the RECORD as part of my remarks. The article makes mention of the interest of the Export-Import Bank in the matter of the loan of $120,000,000.

In connection with the suggestion that W. P. A. workers be employed in the territory of Brazil, I wonder if it was clear to anyone that just to the north, in the Territory of Alaska, there are 587,000 square miles of land, a vast area waiting for colonists to come and develop it. Of that 587,000 square miles of American territory within the confines of America, there ought to be found more than 35,000 square miles of land subject to grazing by sheep, goats, and reindeer, and more than 33,000 square miles of land capable of cultivation by farmers from our country. If we have in mind the slightest idea of sending W. P. A. workers on a tour to South America, I for one prefer to send them to the Territory of Alaska.

Mr. President, I want the Senator from Illinois, who has been so intelligently discussing matters in relation to our sister republics of South America, to know that I am extremely desirous of continuing on friendly terms with Brazil, but I can see no reason why we should be called upon to send to Brazil $120,000,000 of the money furnished by the taxpayers of the United States to curry favor with To the contrary, they should be endeavoring to curry favor with us, because last year the United States bought more than 40 percent of all the exports from Brazil, and, as a matter of fact, the United States bought more from the republics south of the Rio Grande, Mexico, Central America, South America, and the West Indies than the combined purchases of the three other major nations of the world that do business in South America.

I ask that the article in question be printed in the RECORD at this point as part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Lundeen in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

[From the Times-Herald of Washington, D. C., March 12, 1939] United States To Colonize Areas in Brazil—Plan for Large-Scale EMIGRATION TO BE SUBMITTED

A concrete plan for large-scale emigration of American farmers, skilled technical workers, and college graduates to Brazil to aid in the country's development, is expected to be submitted to Washington at an early date, it was learned today.

Thousands of inquiries have deluged the Brazilian Embassy and American State Department in the wake of revelation that Foreign Minister Oswaldo Aranha has proposed to President Roosevelt that skilled workers and farmers on W. P. A. relief rolls be sent to Brazil in a colonization project similar to the Matanuska colony in Alaska.

PROJECT TENTATIVE

Brazilian sources said today the project still is in its tentative stage, but is one of the important phases of Brazil's new economic plan, which Aranha will develop on his return to the Brazilian

It was indicated President Roosevelt had listened attentively to Aranha's colonization proposal discussing it with him in two separate conferences, but that no definite commitments were made on behalf of this Government.

High officials here pointed out that one major stumbling black in the first proposal by Aranha is that W. P. A. funds cannot be expended outside of the territorial jurisdiction of the United States without an act of Congress making this specific provision.

In the preliminary talks, Aranha proposed that the United States finance the colonization plan, continuing the colonists on W. P. A. rolls until they could establish themselves in their new home. Within a year or two, the Brazilian official estimated, the colonists would be self-supporting, and no longer a burden to the American Treasury.

Officials here privately said this plan presented many problems for which they could see no immediate solution.

Brazil badly needs-Aranha told Washington officials-young and ambitious farmers, men in the skilled trades, particularly railroading and mining, and young college graduates with engineering training to develop Brazil's interior.

He indicated his Government, when a workable plan is completed, will be willing to set aside for homesteads tracts of rich farming lands in the pleateau country.

The colonization project, it was emphasized, is as yet in its tentative stage, but is one in which the Brazilian Government is vitally interested. Some weeks may pass before it is brought to its prac-

Numerous inquiries to the State Department have indicated a widespread interest in the proposal. Such inquiries at present are being referred to the Brazilian consul-general's office in New York City.

TYPICAL INQUIRIES

Typical of the inquiries are the following:
From Colorado a young mechanical engineer wrote:
"I am a mechanical engineer just out of college a few years and like others I find I am unable to get employment as I am competing with men who have years of experience.

"I believe this idea to be very sound and for one would be very glad to go, providing I could retain my United States citizenship."

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. DAVIS. Did I understand the Senator to say that the Foreign Minister of Brazil desired us to send our W. P. A. workers to that country?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I was just reading from a newspaper a clipping which I asked to have incorporated in the RECORD. The clipping said that on two occasions Mr. Aranha had conferences with the President of the United States in contemplation of sending our W. P. A. workers to Brazil for the purpose of developing that country.

Mr. DAVIS. Does he expect to pay their wages and expenses out of the $120,000,000?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I assume, from the article, that we in the United States are to pay their wages, pay their expenses while there, and pay their transportation to Brazil.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. Where does the Senator get that information?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I got it from a newspaper.

Mr. MINTON. That the United States will pay their wages and pay their way to Brazil?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Yes. I ask that the newspaper clipping be returned to me. I did not read all of it. I glanced over it very rapidly yesterday.

Mr. MINTON. What newspaper is it from?

Mr. REYNOLDS. This is from the Washington Herald-Times of Sunday. I read as follows:

In the preliminary talks, Aranha proposed that the United States finance the colonization plan, continuing the colonists on

Anyone who knows anything at all about Brazil knows that it is a great country. One might say it is highly uninhabited. It is about one-third larger than the United States. It has a population of only about 45,000,000 people. But everyone knows that about 99 percent of all the people in Brazil are poverty-stricken. When you meet a man you can judge he is not a millionaire if he does not wear a clean pair of pants.

Officials here privately said this plan presented many problems for which they could see no immediate solution. Brazil badly needs—Aranha told Washington officials—young and ambitious farmers, men in the skilled trades, particularly railroading and mining, and young college graduates with engineering training to develop Brazil's interior.

He indicated his Government, when a workable plan is completed, will be willing to set aside for homesteads tracts of rich farming lands in the plateau country.

Our Government is now setting aside fine high tracts of land in the country to the north of us in the Territory of

A major part of the plan for economic development calls for construction of a new network of transportation lines.

He wants us to build transportation lines for them.

Railroads must be built and highways constructed to open up the vast Brazilian hinterlands, in which lie fabulously rich mineral deposits.

All, he suggests, at the expense of the United States of America.

One of the most important financial aids granted by the Export-Import Bank under the just consummated Brazilian American economic agreement calls for extension of huge credits for development of Brazil's transportation system.

By the way, in regard to advancing money for railroads in the development of South American countries, I call to the attention of the Members of this body the fact that it is my recollection that a few years ago we advanced many millions of dollars either to Peru or to Chile; and none of that money has ever been returned.

The colonization project, it was emphasized, is as yet in its tentative stage, but is one in which the Brazilian Government is vitally interested.

No doubt they would be vitally interested if they could obtain tens of thousands of W. P. A. workers at the expense of the taxpayers of the United States to construct their highways, build their roads, and develop all sections of the country at the cost of the people of America.

Some weeks may pass before it is brought to its practical stage. Numerous inquiries to the State Department have indicated a widespread interest in the proposal. Such inquiries at present are being referred to the Brazilian consul general's office in New York City.

Typical of the inquiries are the following:

Typical of the inquiries are the following:

From Colorado a young mechanical engineer who wrote:
"I am a mechanical engineer just out of college a few years, and like others I find I am unable to get employment as I am competing with men who have years of experience."

That is an unfortunate thing on account of the unemployment situation in this country. However, I do not believe that our unemployment situation is in such a distressful state that we must send American citizens to Brazil to develop another country at the expense of the American taxpayers.

I believe this idea to be very sound and, for one, would be very glad to go, providing I could retain my United States citizenship.

I am glad to note that the young man believes that his United States citizenship is the most valuable thing in the world

Mr. President, like all the other Members of this body. I am desirous of remaining on friendly terms with our sister republics to the south. At the same time, if we have to buy that friendship by the utilization of the dollars of the taxpayers of the United States, I do not think it is worth it, particularly in the case of Brazil. Why should we have to buy her friendship by letting her have $120,000,000 of the money of the taxpayers of the United States, when it is a known fact that the United States of America favors Brazil year in and year out by buying more of her exports than all the other major countries of the entire world?

We have had some sad experiences in that particular direction. As I mentioned a moment ago, when I was directing an inquiry to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. Lewis], a few years ago Brazil wanted to buy some obsolete battleships from us. We wanted to sell her those battleships; but Argentina objected. Argentina is under the thumb and influence of Great Britain. Why should she not be? Great Britain buys all her beef and all her wheat. Argentina objected to our selling the obsolete battleships to her rival, Brazil. What happened? We found that action to be a very smooth trick on the part of the British to get the business of the Brazilians. When Uncle Sam, as a result of the protest of Argentina, was knocked out of the opportunity to sell the old battleships to Brazil, Brazil placed her money with Great Britain and asked Great Britain to build battleships for her. That was the situation.

Mr. President, we are the big brother of the republics to the south of us. That fact is evidenced by many, many transactions. I wonder if we are really sincere. I ask the Members of this body whether or not we have a sincere and genuine friendship for the 130,000,000 or 140,000,000 people to the south of us. Let us see.

Earlier in the day I introduced a resolution. It may be said to have been in behalf of the people of our sister republic of Gautemala. That resolution is in the form of an appeal to the civilized people of the world, a cry which has gone up from the people of the country of Gautemala itself. The people of Guatemala are appealing to the conscience of the civilized world for help. The people of Guatemala say that Great Britain is up to her old tricks. The people of Guatemala say that Great Britain, being up to her old tricks, is trying to steal more property from her, at a time when Great Britain is doing her very best to make an ally of us in order that she may attempt to hold together the one-fourth of the earth which she possesses today.

In other words, Great Britain says, "We want you Americans to help us maintain the peace upon the face of the earth." Why should she not wish our help? Mr. President, the situation is like that of the fellow who comes to me and steals $100 out of my pocket. He robs me, and I go after him. I want to fight for the return of my property. He holds up his hands in holy horror and says, "Why, my dear friend. Let us be peaceful. Let us not quarrel. Let us not fight." Of course, he does not want to fight, because he has robbed me of all I have.

That attitude is typical of the British. They have taken one-fourth of the earth by bloody conquests and aggressions everywhere. Now they have it, they come to America and say, "We want you to help us maintain the empire which we obtained by bloody aggression all over the world."

In the course of the debate earlier in the day, I remember that the able Senator from Montana [Mr. Murray] reminded the Senator from Illinois [Mr. Lewis] of the fact that the Irish Free State had completely liquidated its obligation to the United States as to both principal and interest. When he mentioned the Irish Free State I was reminded that in 1717, immediately after the aggressions against Great Britain had ceased, Great Britain herself started aggressions, and began them on the people of Ireland. Today about 2,000,000 or 3,000,000 of the people of Ireland are under the yoke and domination of Great Britain. For years they have pleaded and fought for independence, but to this day they have never obtained independence.

In the Western Hemisphere we find John Bull up to his old tricks. What do we find? To the south of us, just north of the Mosquito Coast, there is a little country known as British Honduras. Some refer to it as Belize. Along about the year 1783 the Spanish had charge of that territory. It was one of the Spanish colonies. Spain entered into an agreement with Great Britain that certain interests in Great Britain might have the right and the franchise to secure certain timber and other products of the land. According to my recollection, another agreement was entered into about 1786; and from the franchise that she had. Great Britain eventually became the sole possessor of British Honduras. Later, as a result of that controversy, a treaty was entered into. In 1859 the British agreed to settle the matter by making a certain delimitation of the territory. However, Great Britain has never performed her part of the agreement. She never settled anything. In 1859 we took an interest in the matter and were going to the aid of the people of Honduras as a protection due them under the Monroe Doctrine of 1823.

At this juncture, in view of the fact that I have seen a number of additional Senators come in, I wish to read the resolution.

(At this point Mr. Reynolds yielded to Mr. Harrison to make a statement concerning House bill 3790, which appears elsewhere under the appropriate heading.)

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the morning hour has expired. The Senator from North Carolina is recognized.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President-

Mr. REYNOLDS. I shall be happy to yield to the Senator from Maryland in a second.

Mr. TYDINGS. Very well. I do not wish to interrupt the speech of the Senator from North Carolina, but I should be very grateful if the Senator could advise me about when it will be possible for me to ask the Senate to proceed with the consideration of the legislative appropriation bill.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am going to yield in about 5 minutes, I say, Mr. President, if we of the United States are desirous of being of assistance to our sister republics to the south, for whom we proclaim great friendship, that then we should come to the aid of our sister republic of Guatemala that is being unjustly dealt with by the British. As a result of that situation, I submitted today a resolution which I now desire read. I have a copy of the resolution before me. It is as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate of the United States requests that the Secretary of State submit to it (if not incompatible with the public interest) information as to what, if anything, is being done by our Government toward protecting, as a part of the Monroe Doctrine, the alleged territorial rights of our sister Republic of Guatemala in its dispute with Great Britain over Belize (British Honduras), as evidenced by the White Book recently released by the Guatemalan Government protesting the procedure of Great Britain and appealing to the universal concurrence of civilized nations to come to her aid; and in which the Guatemalan Government has unsuccessfully urged that Great Britain accept President Franklin D. Roosevelt as arbitrator.

Mr. President, I believe if the United Government would today evidence its friendship and provide help for the sister Republic of Guatemala to the south that the British would back water, and would deal fairly with the Guatemalans and would not try to take Guatemalan territory that the Guatemalans believe belongs to them. I make the statement advisedly, recalling that about the year 1895, when John Bull was up to his same old tricks, he tried to grab some land from Venezuela that belonged to Venezuela, claiming at the time that her territory of British Guiana extended farther northward than it really did. The British made that claim because at that time gold had been discovered in southern Venezuela and northern British Guiana. In that instance the people of the United States knew that Great Britain was up to her same old tricks of taking that which did not belong to her.

Great Britain is always willing to give away the property of someone else. Mr. President, you will recall that at Munich she was perfectly willing to give some of Czechoslovakia's property to Germany in order to bring about "appeasement." When we read about the settlement at Munich we all thought that that was something never heard of before. What a hue and cry arose! The very idea of Great Britain giving somebody else's property to spare a civil war! Yet she has been up to that all her life.

My recollection of history is that in 1817 there was difficulty in regard to Florida. She wanted Florida; we of the United States had made up our minds that we were going to have Florida. At that time Florida belonged to Spain. About 1817, after the end of the Napoleonic wars, defeat having come to Napoleon June 18, 1815, when Spain appealed to her ally, Great Britain saying, "Save us; do not let the United States take our property," what did John Bull say? He said, "You must be 'appeased'; give them the property and do the best you can in regard to settling your boundary with Mexico and Texas." Great Britain is always willing to give away the property of someone else. It was in 1817 that we first heard the word "appeasement."

In just a word or so more, Mr. President, I shall conclude. Here is what the poor people of Guatamala say—this is from the White Book, a copy of which I have before me:

Great Britain, defender of the rights of weak nations, implacable judge of aggressive states, has refused and refuses to comply with the obligations which she solemnly contracted in the convention of 1859, and has declared all discussion closed.

the obligations which she solemnly contracted in the convention of 1859, and has declared all discussion closed.

In the face of this inconceivable attitude, the only recourse of the Republic is to appeal to the universal conscience of civilized nations, to protest against the procedure of Great Britain against a nation which is small and which is weak because of its territory and its population.

In conclusion, Mr. President, I wish to say that all we have to do is to tell Great Britain to deal fairly with Guatamala and that we ought to do under the Monroe doctrine itself, just as in 1895, when she tried to steal the property of Venezuela President Cleveland interfered. In reference to that, I ask that there be embodied in my remarks a statement beginning with the words:

A much graver controversy suddenly flared up in 1895 concerning the disputed boundary of Venezuela and British Guiana.

And to continue the quotation to the place I have marked in the book.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the excerpt will be printed in the RECORD.

The excerpt referred to is as follows:

A much graver controversy suddenly flared up in 1895 concerning the disputed boundary of Venezuela and British Guiana. When, in 1835, British settlers at Belize had encroached upon the limits of Guatemala, that Republic in vain solicited the mediation of the United States under the Monroe Doctrine. No great immediate harm to the doctrine came from this neglect, although the passive attitude of the United States at that time doubtless encouraged the activities of Great Britain on the Mosquito Coast, which became such a challenge to the Monroe Doctrine in 1848–50. The Guatemala incident had been an example of how a little aggression, unrebuked, may lead to others more serious. The Venezuela boundary affair was similar.

The frontier between Venezuela and British Guiana had never been agreed on between the two sovereigns. The roots of the controversy reached far back into colonial history, and the area concerned was a pestilential hinterland at first of little value. In 1840 Robert Schomburgk surveyed the boundary for Great Britain. Great Britain put forth his survey as "merely a preliminary measure, open to further discussion between the Governments of Great Britain and Venezuela." It threatened Venezuela's control of the Orinoco River. Venezuela would not take it, even when Lord Aberdeen offered (1844) deviations away from the Orinoco, which left Great Britain an equivalent amount of territory in the interior. Civil commotion in the South American state made impossible amplegotiations before 1876. Venezuela in 1884 offered to accept Lord Aberdeen's proposed line, but Great Britain now rejected it. Prospectors had discovered gold fields in the back lands of both countries. Great Britain expanded her claims westward to take in rties. Great Britain expanded her claims westward to take in gold fields in Venezuela and the Venezuelans countered by pushing their claims extravagantly eastward to the Essequibo River, to include the Guiana gold fields. Venezuela had no force to defend her claims, while Great Britain was the most powerful empire in the world. The Venezuelan Government since 1876 had invoked, without tangible result, the good offices of the United States. It next offered to arbitrate the whole area in dispute, i. e., the expanded claims of both countries. The United States expressed to England sympathy with this proposal, but the British Government refused to arbitrate unless Venezuela would first give up all the region east of the Schomburgk line. Venezuela broke off diplomatic relations with Great Britain (1887). President Cleveland, during his first administration, offered to Great Britain the good offices of the United States for arranging an arbitration, but without success.

A case had now arisen in which a first-class power still pos-ration, but without success.

A case had now arisen in which a first-class power still possessing colonies on one of the American continents might, by advancing boundary claims and refusing to arbitrate them, arbitrarily expand its territory in violation of that dictum of the Monroe Doctrine which interdicted further colonization of the American continents. The statistics in the British official yearbook, the Colonial Office List, had suddenly increased the area of British Guiana by about 40 percent between 1885 and 1886. Cleveland, during his second term in 1894, recommended arbitration to American continents. The statistics in the British official yearbook, the Colonial Office List, had suddenly increased the area of British Guiana by about 40 percent between 1885 and 1886. Cleveland, during his second term in 1894, recommended arbitration to Great Britain. Congress supported him by a vigorous joint resolution. The President had been further nettied at Great Britain's seizing the Nicaraguan customs in April to force payment of a claim, as well as by her persistent refusal to arbitrate the Venezuela controversy. Secretary of State Gresham was loath to make an issue of the Venezuela boundary, but after his death his successor, Richard Olney, at Cleveland's suggestion, presented, in the form of a dispatch (July 20, 1895) to the United States Ambassador at London, a demand to know whether Great Britain would or would not arbitrate the dispute, which, he said, concerned the Monroe Doctrine, the principles of which had become a "doctrine of American public law." No responsible jurist has ever conceded such a quality for the doctrine. Olney went on to say in tones which recall Webster's note to Hülsemann that: "Today the United States is practically sovereign on this continent, and its fiat is law upon the subjects to which it confines its interposition." Most belatedly (November 26, 1895) the British Prime Minister, Lord Salisbury, who held the office of Foreign Affairs, responded in effect that although England since 1823 had been willing to accept the noncolonization principle of the Monroe Doctrine, this was not a case which concerned it; that the proposal of the United States to impose an arbitration on the disputants was unreasonable and not to be justified by international law.

A foreign power had thus taken it upon itself to explain to the United States the Monroe Doctrine ad hoc. If Great Britain was immensely superior to the United States in naval and military strength there remained always the weak British flank of Canada. There were other factors present to enter into the situation and giv in the ring.'

Cleveland resolved not to take the rebuff. In a special message to Congress (December 17, 1895) he requested authorization to appoint a commission to investigate the merits of the dispute. "When such report is made and accepted," he said, "it will, in my opinion, be the duty of the United States to resist by every means in its power, as a willful aggression upon its rights and interests, the appropriation by Great Britain of any lands or the exercise of governmental jurisdiction over any territory which after investigation we have determined of right belongs to Venezuela. In making these recommendations I am fully alive to the responsibility incurred and keenly realize all the consequences that may follow." Congress speedily created the fact-finding commission.

The qualified character of Cleveland's statement, indicated by the italics introduced above, left the President plenty of room to back out if the people did not rally nationally to stand behind him on this new foreign issue. His correspondence, now printed, suggests more anxiety about the radical political situation within the United States than the safety of the Monroe Doctrine. Cleveland's whole career in the White House was so forbearing on matters of foreign policy that some have been led to suspect that in this spectacular exception he was resorting to the time-honored device of beating the big drum on a foreign issue in order to deafen the country to political dissidents at home a few months before the nominating conventions of 1896. In the West the Populists were rapidly gathering strength and threatening to capture the leadership of the Democratic Party. In private and public utterances, at the time and since, Cleveland has explained his stand solely on the issue of the Monroe Doctrine and his confidence that Great Britain would really arbitrate. The standard biographies of Olney (H. James) and Cleveland (A. Nevins) have accepted this explanation. The fact that Olney's famous dispatch, which Cleveland called a "20-inch gun," was not published until the message of the President to Congress confirms Cleveland's explanations. The country as a whole—despite the chagrin of intellectuals—rallied behind the President. Events in distant parts of the world were conspiring to afford him—as they did Seward in 1867—the opportunity for a striking diplomatic victory. In South Africa a crisis was rapidly heading up over the question of the Transvaal. Kaiser Wilhelm II of Germany, having dropped Bismarck, was addressing himself energetically to the development of naval power and to colonial expansion. On January 2, 1896, occurred Jameson's raid, in which a handful of British subjects invaded the Transvaal for the purhelm II of Germany, having dropped Bismarck, was addressing himself energetically to the development of naval power and to colonial expansion. On January 2, 1896, occurred Jameson's raid, in which a handful of British subjects invaded the Transvaal for the purpose of stirring up a rising of the "outlanders" against the Boer State. It collapsed miserably. The next morning the German Kaiser deliberately published a telegram to Kruger, the Boer President: "I express to you my sincere congratulations that without appealing to the help of friendly powers you and your people have succeeded in repelling with your own forces the armed bands which had broken into your country and in maintaining the independence of your country against foreign aggression." The effect on England of Cleveland's Venezuela message was mild compared with the shock to the British Empire that followed the publication of the Kaiser's message, which Langer terms one of the greatest blunders in the history of modern diplomacy. In the London music halls the crowd now cheered Yankee Doodle and booed The Watch on the Rhine. The trend of future German policy revealed itself as under a flash of lightning. At that moment Great Britain in "splendid isolation" stood before the world without allies, without friends among the great powers, on the verge of a war crisis with the United States over the paltry issue of the jungle boundary of Guiana, involving a principle which meant so much to the American mind, so little to the British Empire. Joseph Chamberlain, Secretary for Colonial Affairs, urged the Prime Minister (January 4, 1896) to make a naval demonstration against Germany coupled with a declaration against interference in South Africa, and "to make a serious effort to come to terms with America * *."

From that time British foreign policy took a different direction toward conciliating disputants and building up allies and friends against a new menace—that of a German colonial and naval power which might combine with England's rivals on the Continent

Europe's distresses had redounded to the advantage of the United States in achieving its independence, in consolidating its nationality, in laying the territorial basis for its future. Now an analogous situation was taking shape, soon to turn to America's advantage as she stepped into the position of a world power.

Overnight the Anglo-American crisis disappeared, when Chamberlain, in a memorable speech at Birmingham (January 25, 1896), stated: "We do not covet one single inch of American territory. War between the two nations (England and the United States) would be an absurdity as well as a crime. * * * The two nawould be an absurdity as well as a crime. The two nations are allied and more closely allied in sentiment and in interest than any other nations on the face of the earth. While I should look with horror upon anything in the nature of a fratricidal strife, I should look forward with pleasure to the possibility of the Stars and Stripes and the Union Jack floating together in defense of a common cause sanctioned by humanity and justice." Lord Salisbury publicly declared in the House of Lords: "I do think the princip in of the Monree Poctrine was controversially quite unbringing in of the Monroe Doctrine was controversially quite unnecessary for the United States. Considering the position of Venezuela in the Caribbean Sea, it was no more unnatural that the zuela in the Caribbean Sea, it was no more unnatural that the United States should take an interest in It than that we should feel an interest in Holland and Belgium." Within a few weeks Venezuela and Great Britain had agreed in principle to arbitrate, after long negotiation as to detail, during which Joseph Chamberlain made a flying visit to the United States. They concluded at Washington (February 2, 1897), in close understanding with the United States, a treaty prescribing the conditions. The tribunal consisted of two Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, two English jurists, and an umpire chosen by the four, the Russian jurist, F. F. de Martens. It brought in an award (October 3, 1899) roughly conforming to Lord Aberdeen's proffered modifications of 1844 of Schomburgk's line.

Great Britain's new foreign policy, developed by her predica-

Great Britain's new foreign policy, developed by her predicaments in Europe, Asia, and Africa, greatly strengthened the position of the United States in dealing with the Cuban crisis and readjusting the international situation of the Isthmus, also, as we shall presently see, in settling a new and serious dispute with the Dominion of Canada over the Alaskan boundary.

The Venezuelan controversy at first appeared to help consecrate the general principle of international arbitration. In the corre-spondence which followed the celebrated message of December 17, 1895, Secretary Olney had suggested a convention which might provide for settlement by arbitration of all future controversies between the United States and Great Britain, including the Venezuelan boundary, and which, as to the latter, would give due recognition to long-continued occupation by Venezuelans or by British subjects. Lord Salisbury, too, desired to sweep the Venezuelan question into some broad arrangement for arbitration. Though this had to give way to the conclusion of a treaty between Venezuela and Great Britain, worked out under Anglo-American discussions, both Governments were now eager to follow up the idea, then novel, of a general arbitration treaty. They signed such a convention at Washington (Olney-Pauncefote Convention, Jan. 11, 1897). By its terms important issues, such as questions of territorial claims or national rights, could be presented to a tribunal of six arbitrators, three from each side, with a majority of five necessary for a binding award. In case of no award, there would not be recourse to hostile measures of any description until the mediation of one or more friendly powers had been invited by one or both disputants. A separate tribunal was to settle minor issues by simple majority vote. Parliament promptly ratified this, but the United States Senate withheld its consent, principally because it feared being thus deprived of its authority to pass on the matter of allowing arbitration of particular disputes as they came up. This senatorial insistence really marked the setting of brakes on the American policy of arbitration.

Mr. REYNOLDS. In addition to that. Mr. President. I

Mr. REYNOLDS. In addition to that, Mr. President, I ask that there be embodied in my remarks the introductory pages of the White Book, which was prepared by officials of the Guatemalan Government in which they appeal to the conscience of the world and ask the aid and the moral support of the people of the world for her protection against the encroachments and aggression of Great Britain.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

PURPOSE OF THIS BOOK

PURPOSE OF THIS BOOK

Prolonged and disagreeable has been the controversy between the Governments of Guatemala and Great Britain because of the Belize question, which rests primarily on the fact that this latter power has always resisted and still resists complying with the obligations which it assumed by the treaty of 1859 between it and the Republic of Guatemala. By said treaty were determined the boundaries between the republic and the British settlement of Belize, established since 1783 in purely Guatemalan territory when Guatemala was still a Spanish colony. Under the circumstances and for reasons which will be seen in the course of this treatise, Guatemala lost a valuable zone, which, in passing to foreign sovereignty, also closed the outlet to the Atlantic to extensive regions, which constitute, because of their incalculable resources, the most extensive and valuable natural reserve of the republic. But Great Britain assumed for its part in 1859 a transcendental compensatory obligation, the noncompliance with which on its part has caused serious damages to this country, made the territorial sacrifice fruitless, damaged the good faith and sincerity of international pacts and given origin to a discussion which has lasted almost 80 years, the origin, development, and documented details of which are precisely the object of this publication.

By virtue of the treaty signed in 1783 by the Count of Aranda,

By virtue of the treaty signed in 1783 by the Count of Aranda, party of the first part, and the Duke of Manchester, party of the second, Spain granted Great Britain a permit to cut dyewoods in the small sector comprised between the Hondo and Belize Rivers; but under the express condition that said permit, limited to its exclusive purpose, was granted provided that Spanish sovereignty over said sector be maintained inviolate, Great Britain being further absolutely prohibited from constructing therein fortifications founding settlements or cultivating the land under any pretext whatever.

Three years later the convention of 1786 was signed in London by which the area granted for the usufruct was extended southward as far as the Sibun River, and permission was granted to England to cut other kinds of timber, to make plantings and construct dwellings. But in a definite and absolute manner Spanis sovereignty over that zone and the English promise to comply faithfully with the obligations assumed again were ratified.

As is seen, those solemn pacts, duly perfected, prove that Great Britain never had dominion over the territory of Belize and that the rights derived from the concessions granted were absolutely limited, always leaving Spanish sovereignty completely and unrestrictedly in force.

strictedly in force

Nevertheless, English expansions in territory beyond the limits fixed continued in a slow but constant encroachment. It was difficult for the authorities of the Kingdom of Guatemala to prevent this. The systematic piracy exercised principally by the British along Central American coasts had dispopulated them and British along Central American coasts had dispopulated them and made life thereon or in the vicinity thereof impossible.

With the conditions in this state, Central America gained her independence in 1821, organizing a federal republic, and, on obtaining her independence from Spain, assumed, as did the other countries of America which had been under its dominion, the sovereignty of the former over the territory of the respective colonial divisions which had been Spain's.

Great Britain was one of the first powers to accredit representation to the Central American Government. She proved thereby her recognition of the independence and the results thereof insofar as the new republic's succession to the rights which had belonged to Spain was concerned.

The Government of the State of Guatemala in the Federation of Central America, in legitimate exercise of those rights, granted various concessions to exploit the forests situated to the south of the Sibun River and to the north of the Sarstoon River, respecting always the boundaries of the permits granted to the English by the pacts of 1783 and 1786.

A map which the national government had drawn shows the area of the above-mentioned Spanish concessions, as well as the extent of the de facto English usurpations in purely Central American territory.

What was there to do in face of the encroachments and the actual impositions made by a great power at those times when Central America, recently emancipated and prey to a long civil war, which finally destroyed the federation, could not, due to its material weakness, oppose the usurpation force against force.

The de facto occupation allowed Great Britain to extend the old usufruct which it restrictedly enjoyed; but then it no longer based its claims on agreements with Spain, nor did it restrict its occupation of Belize to timber cutting; the old pirate shelter, orginally a simple settlement established for concrete purposes, now openly exhibited the character of British sovereignty over Guatemalan territory, on Central American soil; the Anglo-Spanish treaties of 1783 and 1786 no longer had any significance in restraining acts of violence. Great Britain extended her claims of dominion over all Central America, under the obsession of attaining for herself the construction of the interoceanic canal across Nicaragua. This is why the islands of the bay, belonging to Honduras, were occupied, in violation of the sovereignty of mother; the Atlantic coasts of Nicaragua were under her protectorate, by means of the ludicrous fiction of a ridiculous King of Mosquitia, chosen from the savage tribes which inhabited it and with whom Great Britain had entered into an agreement; and if the energetic intervention of the United States, culminated in the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty of 1850

Faced with the inevitability of the unrestrictable penetration, it became necessary for the Government of Guatemala to negotiate actively the celebration of a boundary treaty with that power, but said desire failed in face of English opposition to negotiate.

After the adjustment of the above-mentioned Clayton-Bulwer pact—and 6 years later the treaty known as the Dallas-Clarendon, which modified the former, both between the United States and England; and this latter country being required by one of the clauses of the second treaty to settle its boundaries with Guatemala, it sent as its representative Mr. Charles Lennox Wyke, urgently charged with entering into the same agreement which it had formerly tenaciously rejected.

The Clayton-Bulwer Treaty stipulated:

"The United States and Great Britain agree not to ever assume, use, occupy, or exercise dominion over any part of Central America, use, occupy, or exercise dominion over any part of Central America, as well as not to obtain or maintain any exclusive control over the projected canal."

And in the Dallas-Clarendon Treaty of 1856 the following was agreed:

"(1) That Her Britannic Majesty's settlement called the Belize, or British Honduras, on the shores of the Bay of Honduras, bounded on the north by the Mexican Province of Yucatan and on the south on the north by the Mexican Province of Yucatan and on the south by the River Sarstoon, was not and is not embraced in the treaty entered into between the contracting parties on the 19th day of April 1850; and that the limits of the said Belize, on the west, as they existed on the said 19th day of April 1850, shall, if possible, be settled and fixed by treaty between Her Britannic Majesty and the Republic of Guatemala within 2 years from the exchange of the ratifications of this instrument, which said boundaries and limits shall not at any time hereafter be extended."

The 2 years fixed for the new treaty had passed without the boundaries with Guatemala being determined. It was only at the expiration of the time that England decided to send to Guatemala her representative, Mr. Lennox Wyke, with powers to discuss the matter. The negotiator brought a draft treaty drawn in such a manner that thereby Guatemala was to recognize openly and frankly the boundaries which the English Government wished to establish, without mentioning therein work, compensation, or any other phrase which could signify that Guatemala considered herself, as in reality she was, the legitimate owner of the territory of Belize.

Minister Lennox Wyke's instructions were clear to such an atomic Belize.

Minister Lennox Wyke's instructions were clear to such an extent that they could leave no doubt regarding Great Britain's intentions. He showed them confidentially to the Minister of State, Mr. Aycinena, who was the negotiator for Guatemala, in order to convince him as to the necessity of not stating in the agreement which was to be carried out anything which could signify the cession of territory and the payment of compensations. But as the Guatemalan Government demanded recognition, on the part of Great Britain, of the rights which she was disposed to relinquish, without which she would not sign the convention, the English diplomat agreed to include the provisions, in favor of Guatemala, contained in article VII, but drawing it up personally, in accord with his Government's convenience and to its entire satisfaction; although not without affirming that the true compensatory meaning of said article in favor of Guatemala was of course understood and that he Wike would make the explanations processory to and that he, Wyke, would make the explanations necessary to his Government, which in good faith would comply with the agreement.

Article VII was drawn up in vague, inexact terms, with no guaranty or fixed period; in short, it was a skillful diplomatic piece of work employed by a powerful country against a weak one. Nevertheless, it signified a definite obligation for England, which should fulfill it at the same time that Guatemala recognized the boundaries with Belize. The article was an integral part of the convention and gave Guatemala what she so needed at that time to promote her general development, the possibility of communicating with the Atlantic, opening the way for its future prosperity by expediting commercial channels. Therefore, the convention of 1859, in stipulating the mutual advantages of both contracting parties—and even though in its text the word "compensation" was not written—fixed to each party a definite obligation, corresponding logically and absolutely to the benefits attained.

Supposing, without conceding it, that the Anglo-Spanish pacts of 1783 and 1786 had given England sovereignty over the region comprised between the Hondo and Sibun Rivers, the demarcation which was to be agreed upon should precisely cover only that comprised between the Hondo and Sibun Rivers, the demarcation which was to be agreed upon should precisely cover only that region; but by the Convention of 1859, Guatemala relinquished, furthermore, her legitimate sovereignty over the enormous area comprised between the Sibun River to the south as far as the Sarstoon River, between the mouths of which there is approximately 130 kilometers in a straight line; and that condition obliged England to insert article VII, in the above-mentioned convention which; although it has no apparent relation to the boundary demarcation, is a logically compensatory clause.

If article VII is not considered in that sense and as an integral part of the pact in which Guatemala relinquished implicitly her dominion in favor of Great Britain over a territory to which that country had no right, the great power cannot explain the inserdominion in favor of Great Britain over a territory to which that country had no right, the great power cannot explain the insertion of the clause which obliges it to carry out public works in a foreign country in a simple boundary pact.

And not only is the compensatory sense of article VII established in an implicit form. In later official English correspondence with regard to this matter, this is clearly proved, as may be amply seen in the documents published in this treatise.

It was evident that it was a question of avoiding the difficulties presented to Great Britain by the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty, one of the purposes of which was to prohibit English expansion in Central America, or the acquisition of new territories by any reason whatever.

tral America, or the acquisition of new territories by any reason whatever.

If in the Convention of April 30, 1859, it had been stated expressly that Guatemala ceded to England the extensive territory comprised between the Sibun and Sarstoon Rivers, England would ostensibly have violated the treaty's provisions; if it had been said categorically that the construction of the road was a compensation, this also would have proved the violation of obligations which admitted no argument. It was necessary, under the special conditions, for Guatemala, to recognize clearly and fully the frontier of the Sarstoon, as if Great Britain had been the owner of the territory bounded by that river, if it were not to seem that the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty had been violated.

That is the origin of article VII of the Convention of 1859, and the reason for its vagueness and indefiniteness.

Guatemala was to trust in English good faith. Mr. Lennox Wyke was the guarantor, under his personal honor, that his country's cooperation in the construction of the road agreed upon would be an unquestionable fact. And the English Government was so grateful for the proofs of friendship given by that of Guatemala, by the accommodation of accepting article VII as it was drafted by Lennox Wyke, that the head of the Foreign Office addressed warm expressions of appreciation to it.

Soon this Government was to understand the extent of its in-expressions of appreciation to it.

Soon this Government was to understand the extent of its ingenuity and candid faith, when the British Government, on learning the amount of the estimate of the cost of the road, which was ridiculous due to its smallness, objected, considering the work too expensive. The very rich and powerful empire considered herself unable to pay the sum of £150,000 for the territory of Belize.

The correspondence exchanged was taken up by painful haggling to reach the conclusion that it was impossible for England to comply with article VII which its own plenipotentiary had drafted at his own pleasure and discretion.

It was necessary to enter into new conversations to substitute

It was necessary to enter into new conversations to substitute article VII by another supplementary convention with which the English Government might be able to comply. And, after long and intricate diplomatic notes, there was signed in London the supplementary convention of 1863, by virtue of which article VII disappeared and, in exchange Guatemala was to receive £50,000 in such installments and under such conditions that surely some cause would be given to cancel every obligation without making any payment. Time was to justify these fears.

But there was no necessity of that. Guatemala was engaged in one of the many wars which characterized the period subsequent to her independence, and could not ratify the supplementary convention within the period of 6 months. And neither did England ratify it; in face of these facts Great Britain declared that she owed Guatemala nothing and that article VII was canceled and void.

The unusual doctrine which England sustains to avoid compliance with bilateral obligations is interesting. The convention of 1859 is null and void in the part favorable to Guatemala, but is in full force in all parts favorable to England.

Guatemala has sustained, with the reason of logic and the obvious meaning of the convention of '59, that, inasmuch as the modification of article VII was not approved, this article remains as expressed in the original convention, and should be fulfilled in accordance with the object had at the time of its drafting.

For 79 years Guatemala has been demanding faithful compliance with the boundary convention, without obtaining any satisfactory recently.

And it is not long ago that Great Birtain, basing herself on the same convention, asked Guatemala to proceed with the demarcation of the frontier. As was natural, Guatemala then asked if the English Government were ready to comply fully with the pact, because only in that case was the Government of Guatemala ready to carry it out in its final phases. And the reply was curious, Why mention the road desired in 1859, if Guatemala, since 1908, has had a railroad to the Atlantic?

the road desired in 1859, if Guatemala, since 1908, has had a railroad to the Atlantic?

This fact proves that the noncompliance of England with her obligations imposed on Guatemala the great expense of the construction of the railway, to increase the material prosperity of the Republic in compliance with article VII itself, and even when in this same clause its compensatory condition appears, establishing that "the limits of the two countries being now clearly defined, all further encroachments by either party on the territory of the other will be effectually checked and prevented for the future."

In the Dallas-Clarendon Treaty (1856) the United States and England agreed to exclude from the pact of 1850 the Settlement of Belize. On what could the English base this request and on what the United States its agreement? Possibly on the Anglo-Spanish pacts of 1783 and 1786 which fixed the boundaries of the English settlement between the Hondo and Sibun Rivers.

Buchanan, Minister of the United States before Great Britain, replied in 1854 to Lord Clarendon that the Government of the United States did not accept any English claim to Belize, excepting the temporary "right to make use of timber of different kinds, fruits, and other products in their natural state, recognizing fully that the former Spanish sovereignty over the country belongs to Guatemala or perhaps to Mexico," and, as the Convention of 1859 brought the boundary very much to the south as far as the Sarstoon, it is evident that one of the parties to this last agreement had made encroachments into the territory of the other, and that to remain in possession of such encroachments it promised to cooperate in the material prosperity of Guatemala and agreed that, once the boundaries of the two countries were clearly defined, all subsequent encroachments was impossible for the future.

Guatemala was 50 years without the communication to the Atlantic promised by England in compensation for her sovereignty in Belize, from 1859 until the inauguration o

It is absolutely necessary to bear in mind the advantages attained by Great Britain by the Convention of 1859, that is to say, by the good will of Guatemala in signing the convention in the way that England needed to acquire title to the sovereignty of Belize, which formerly she did not possess, and to avoid the responsibilities undertaken in the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty with the United States.

taken in the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty with the United States.
Guatemala demanded as a condition sine qua non recognition of adequate compensation for the renunciation of her rights to Belize. She agreed to sign the convention, suppressing all that which signified a definite statement of cession of territory and the receipt of compensation; she trusted and believed in the promises of the negotiator, Lennox Wyke. England would be loyal and everything discussed and promised would be faithfully carried out; Central America felt the threat of filibuster invasions and the plans to create a slave state in her midst, and was sensitive in face of the disconsolate picture of the feared invasions, similar to the one overcome by her in 1856; the convention which she had before her would be protection against the dangers by virtue of the valued proximity of a part of the British Empire.

The Guatemalan Government asked for something in writing as

The Guatemalan Government asked for something in writing as record of the bilateral agreement, but the caution with which it was necessary to proceed in face of the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty prevented all written record; there must be faith in the pledged English word. The convention was signed.

The convention was signed.

The English Government alleges that it had never recognized Guatemalan rights to Belize; opposed to this assertion are the history of the occupation of Belize, the prohibition to exercise sovereignty over the usufructuary territory, the exact demarcation within the indellible boundaries of the Hondo and Sibun Rivers and the absence of a legal title to take possession of the extensive area of territory as far as the Sarstoon River, which belonged to Guatemala by right of inheritance from the Spanish nation. However, the question be investigated, it is evident that Guatemala, in signing the recognition of the Sarstoon River as the southern frontier of the recognition of the Sarstoon River as the southern frontier of Belize, tacitly relinquished part of her territory which passed to England under a legal title of recognition.

Great Britain has alleged the possession of Belize, not by virtue of the English-Spanish treaties of 1783 and 1786, but by reason of the English-Spanish treaties of 1783 and 1786, but by reason of the English-Spanish treaties of 1783 and 1786, but by reason of the English-Spanish treaties of 1783 and 1786, but by reason of the English-Spanish treaties of 1788 and 1786, but by reason of the English-Spanish treaties of 1788 and 1786, but by reason of the English-Spanish treaties of 1788 and 1786, but by reason of the English-Spanish treaties of 1788 and 1786, but by reason of the English-Spanish treaties of 1788 and 1786, but by reason of the English-Spanish treaties of 1788 and 1786, but by reason of the English-Spanish treaties of 1788 and 1786, but by reason of the English-Spanish treaties of 1788 and 1786, but by reason of the English-Spanish treaties of 1788 and 1786, but by reason of the English-Spanish treaties of 1788 and 1786, but by reason of the English-Spanish treaties of 1788 and 1786, but by reason of the English-Spanish treaties of 1788 and 1786, but by reason of the English-Spanish treaties of 1788 and 1786, but by reason of the English-Spanish treaties of 1788 and 1786, but by reason of the English-Spanish treaties of 1788 and 1786, but by reason of the English-Spanish treaties of 1788 and 1786, but by reason of the English-Spanish treaties of 1788 and 1786, but by reason of the English treaties of 1788 and 1786, but by reason of the English treaties of 1788 and 1786, but by the English treaties of 1788 and 1786, but by the English treaties of 1788 and 1786, but by the English treaties of 1788 and 1786, but by the English treaties of 1788 and 1786, but by the English treaties of 1788 and 1786, but by the English treaties of 1788 and 1786, but by the English treaties of 1788 and 1786, but by the English treaties of 1788 an of armed conquest during the Anglo-Spanish war of 1798. What armed conquest was that? The Battle of the Key of St. George, the 10th of September 1798, when General O'Neil, governor of Yucatan, was unsuccessful in his attempt to land in the port of Belize because the English, in violation of their obligations which were solemnly fixed in international treaties, had fortified the town and stationed naval forces along the coast. Without taking into consideration at this point whether such armed action could be sustained as a basis for the "right of conquest," the case could affect only the territory granted in usufruct by Spain to Great Britain; that is, the area comprised between the Hondo and the Sibun Rivers; to the south of this river there never was armed action by the English against Spanish troops, much less against those of the republic after 1821.

But even supposing the effectivity of that "conquest" of which

But even supposing the effectivity of that "conquest" of which there is no trace in history, excepting the acts of pirates and adventurers, before us are the contents of the Treaty of Amiens (March 28, 1802) the fourth article of which provides: "His Britannic Majesty will restore to the French Republic and its allies, to wit, to His Catholic Majesty and the Batavian Republic, all the possessions and colonies which belonged to them, respectively, and the Batavian Republic, all the possessions and colonies which belonged to them, respectively, and have been accounted by force of arms during the tively, and have been occupied by force of arms during the course of the war, excepting the island of Trinidad and the Dutch pos-sessions of the island of Ceylon."

The conquest, if there was one, is eliminated as a right to the title of Belize.

Nevertheless, it may be said that in 1850 England possessed the Nevertheless, it may be said that in 1850 England possessed the territory as far as the Sarstoon River; such a confession by Great Britain is the best proof of its territorial usurpations beyond the Sibun River; the usurpation never was conquest.

Great Britain, defender of the rights of weak nations, implacable judge of aggressive states, has refused and refuses to comply with the obligations which she solemnly contracted in the convention of 1859, and has declared all discussion closed.

In face of this inconceivable attitude, the only recourse of the Republic is to appeal to the universal conscience of civilized nations, to protest against the procedure of Great Britain against a nation which is small and weak because of its territory and population. Justice does not prescribe, and to it we shall appeal with faith in our right. faith in our right.

This book will be the best brief which we can present to form an exact opinion of the case. It is a book of explanation not of combat. The documents which march across its pages will be more eloquent than legalistic and historic arguments. He who reads the painful development will have the discernment necessary to form a personal and exact opinion of the question; he will have a merciful smile for our statesmen of 1859, so ingenuous in their honorability and good faith.

This publication will reach all places where homage is rendered to faith in international obligations, where enlightenment dwells and history is investigated, and, above all, it will reach the consciousness of the nations of America.

RECIPROCAL TAXATION OF FEDERAL AND STATE EMPLOYEES

During the delivery of Mr. REYNOLDS' speech,

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. REYNOLDS. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. I thank the Senator from North Carolina for permitting me to interrupt him for a moment. I mercly wish to make a very brief statement.

It was understood that today House bill 3790, dealing with reciprocal taxes on the salaries of State employees and Federal employees, which has passed the House and been reported by the Finance Committee of the Senate, would be taken up for consideration. That announcement was made by the leader, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Barkley]. However, considerable delay has been encountered with reference to that proposed legislation in the form of amendments, which were offered by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Bailey], and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE], dealing with increased taxes on the importation of certain fish, animal, and vegetable oils. It was such an important matter and so far-reaching in its effect upon the administration's reciprocal trade agreement program that the committee has had hearings on those amendments, and the testimony involved morning and afternoon sessions for almost a week. So we find it impossible to take this bill up as we had hoped to do today.

The reason I make this statement in the time of the distinguished Senator from North Carolina is because of a decision recently rendered by the Supreme Court, which has been construed in such a way as to give the Federal Government the right to tax the salaries of certain State and local employees. It has created some confusion and question as to whether such a law might operate retroactively upon State and local employees. So the bill passed by the House, and which has been recommended by the Senate Finance Committee, states specifically that such taxes cannot be retroactively imposed by the Federal Government, thus relieving any impression that State or local employees who had been exempt in the past would be taxed upon the incomes derived from their back salaries.

The Committee on Finance was unanimously of the opinion that the Federal Government should not proceed to collect such taxes retroactively.

There was some difference of opinion, I may say, as to the taxes to be imposed in the future; but if these back taxes are to be collected for the year 1935 in the case of those employees who filed income-tax returns, assessments must be made by the 15th day of March next. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue felt some hesitancy about giving out any statement to the effect that these taxes on past salaries might not be collected. In view of the fact that the House has passed this measure in a form that removes the idea that retroactive taxes upon these salaries might be imposed, and in view of the fact that the Finance Committee, so far as that part of the bill is concerned, were unanimous in their recommendation to the Senate and in the belief-which I am sure every Member of the Senate entertains—that these taxes should not be imposed retroactively upon the salaries of such State and local employees, I feel certain that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue will be justified and relieved of any criticism in announcing to his collectors throughout the country that they need not make the assessments upon the salaries of such employees for the year 1935, even though the period of limitations may expire before we pass this bill.

I make this statement at this time, Mr. President, and if there is any Senator who has any doubt as to the position I have announced here, I wish he would say so at this time. [A pause.] Since no Senator has raised any objection to my statement and explanation, I will say nothing further concerning this matter. I thank the Senator from North

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATIONS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will read the bill.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the heading "Senate—Office of the Secretary", on page 3, line 2, after the figures "$4,000", to strike out "and $1,000 additional so long as the position is held by the present incumbent"; in line 11, after the figures "$2,460", to insert "press relations officer, $2,140"; and in line 14, after the words "in all", to strike out "$142,040" and insert "$143,180", so as to read:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Committee employees", on page 3, line 25, after the figures "$7,000", to strike out "and $1,000 additional so long as the position is held by the present incumbent", so as to read:

Appropriations—clerk, $7,000; assistant clerk, $4,800; assistant clerk, $3,900; three assistant clerks at $3,000 each; two assistant clerks at $2,220 each; messenger, $1,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 8, after the figures "$3,900", to insert a semicolon and "assistant clerk, $2,880 and $500 additional so long as the position is held by the present incumbent", so as to read:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 8, after the words "in all", to change the total appropriation for committee employees from $502,580 to $504,960.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Office of Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper", on page 8, line 16, after the word "three", to strike out "attendants to women's toilet rooms" and insert "female attendants in charge of ladies' retiring rooms", so as to read.

three female attendants in charge of ladies' retiring rooms, Senate Office Building, at $1,500 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I desire to ask whether this bill increases the appropriations over those of last year or year before last.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I shall be glad to give the Senator from Utah a full report on the matter.

The amount of the bill as passed by the House is $21,636,278. The amount of increase by the Senate committee is $348,321. Therefore, the amount of the bill as reported to the Senate is $21,984,599.

The amount of appropriation for the last fiscal year, 1939, was $22,210,883.50, which is more than for this year. In other words, the bill this year carries about $225,000 less than the amount carried by the bill of last year.

The amount of the regular and supplemental estimates for 1940 was $24,359,851. The bill as reported to the Senate carries $2,375,252 less than the 1940 estimates and $226,284.50 less than the appropriation for the fiscal year 1939. In other words, it represents a 10-percent decrease in the estimated Budget amount.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 8, line 19, before the figures "$1,500", to insert "adopted May 13, 1938", so as to read:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, line 5, after the word "expenses", to strike out "$9,360" and insert "$11,880", so as to read:

Legislative garage: For maintenance, repairs, alterations, personal and other services, and all necessary incidental expenses, $11,880.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, line 18, after the word "Rules", to strike out "acting through the Architect of the Capitol, who shall be its executive agent" and insert "including four female attendants in charge of ladies' retiring rooms at $1,500 each; in all, $314,428, of which $14,000 shall be immediately available: Provided, That structural changes in the Senate Office Building shall only be made with the approval of the Architect of the Capitol", so as to read:

Senate Office Building: For maintenance, miscellaneous items and supplies, including furniture, furnishings, and equipment, and for labor and material incident thereto, and repairs thereof; and for personal and other services for the care and operation of the Senate Office Building, under the direction and supervision of the Senate Committee on Rules, including four female attendants in charge of ladies' retiring rooms at $1,500 each; in all, $314,428, of which $14,000 shall be immediately available: Provided, That structural changes in the Senate Office Building shall only be made with the approval of the Architect of the Capitol.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 29, to

For the repair, alteration, and equipment of rooms 90-B, 92-B, 94-B, and 96-B for use as barber shop and beauty shop, $1,905.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Library of Congress—Books for adult blind", on page 36, line 7, after the word "amended", to strike out "$275,000, including" and insert "including not exceeding $17,000 for personal services and", and in line 12, after the name "Librarian", to insert a comma and "$275,000, together with the unexpended balance of the appropriation for this purpose for the fiscal year 1939", so as to read:

To enable the Librarian of Congress to carry out the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide books for the adult blind," approved March 3, 1931 (2 U. S. C. 135a), as amended, including not exceeding $17,000 for personal services and not exceeding $500 for necessary traveling expenses connected with such service and for expenses of attendance at meetings when incurred on the written authority and direction of the Librarian, $275,000, together with the unexpended balance of the appropriation for this purpose for the fiscal year 1939.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Library Buildings", on page 37, line 19, to strike out "$273,618" and insert "$280,470", so as to read:

Salaries: For the superintendent, disbursing officer, and other personal services, in accordance with the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, including special and temporary services and special services of regular employees in connection with the custody, care, and maintenance of the Library Buildings, in the discretion of the Librarian (not exceeding $750), at rates to be fixed by the Librarian, $280,470.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Government Printing Office", on page 40, line 16, after the words "in all", to strike out "$3,685,000" and insert "$3,820,000"; and in line 24, after the word "exceeding", to strike out "$2,685,000" and insert "$2,820,000", so as to read:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Office of Superintendent of Documents," on page 43, line 9, after "(44 U. S. C. 40)", to strike out "$630,000" and insert "$665,-000", so as to read:

For the Superintendent of Documents, assistant superintendent, and other personal services in accordance with the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, and compensation of employees paid by the hour who shall be subject to the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate and fix rates of pay for employees and officers of the Governmenting Printing Office," approved June 7, 1924 (44) 15 C 40) 4865 000 U. S. C. 40), $665,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the committee amendments.

The bill is still before the Senate and open to amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I offer an amendment. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 30, line 8, it is proposed to strike out "$80,040" and insert in lieu thereof "$81,220."

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, this is an increase of $1,180 in order to take care of a situation in the new Library Building. As chairman of the Joint Committee on the Library I have had occasion, of course, to cooperate with the Architect of the Capitol, and I have familiarized myself somewhat, in that capacity, with the needs of the new building.

This magnificent addition to the Library will soon be available, and a storekeeper is needed. I have been advised by the Architect of the Capitol that they need and must have someone to be in charge of the supplies and the property over there, to make distribution among the employees, and the salary which he proposes to pay that employee is $1,800. He now has $620 available for the payment of the salary, so that $1,180 is all that is necessary to make the additional appropriation sufficient to pay this storekeeper.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, as I understand, the Architect of the Capitol in making his report to the Committee on Appropriations intended to call attention to this matter, but through oversight did not do so.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is correct.

Mr. TYDINGS. So it would be fair, as no opportunity was given him later, and it was an oversight, for the amendment to be agreed to, and for us to take it to conference and examine it and see what its merits are. It was omitted purely through oversight.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think the Senator's suggestion is a wise

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, on page 6, line 15, after "$3,900" and the semicolon, to insert the word "two" and to strike out the word "clerk" and insert "clerks", and in the same line to strike out the word "four" and insert "three."

Mr. TYDINGS. Let us have the amendment reported. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 6, line 15, after "$3,900" and the semicolon, it is proposed to insert the word "two" and to strike out "clerk" and insert "clerks."

Mr. McKELLAR. Provide for two assistant clerks at $2,880, and then strike out "four" and insert "three." The purpose is to increase the salary of the clerk who has charge of all the nominations of postmasters. His work is very difficult and very important. He receives only $2,200. He is a very efficient man, and, in my judgment, should have an increase in pay. This does not provide for a new clerkship at all, but merely the addition of $660 to the compensation of a clerk who comes in contact with every Senator, because every Senator has postmasters to be appointed.

Mr. WALSH. What is the gentleman's name?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. William M. Fry. Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, the difficulty is that while perhaps the Senator's amendment is desirable, it was not brought to the attention of the committee and we have had no chance to examine into it in any

Mr. McKELLAR. Will not the Senator take it to conference and consider it there?

Mr. TYDINGS. The committee adopted, almost unanimously, a resolution that there would be no increases of the salaries of the ordinary personnel at this session of Congress; and, having adopted that resolution, and other Senators having dropped particular projects in which they were interested, I would obviously be in the position of not keeping faith with the committee if I should say that I would like to see the amendment go to conference. I do not know but that the amendment may be a good one. I should say to the Senator that if he would bring it to our attention we would look into it, but in view of the committee's resolution that there would be no increases at this session of Congress I certainly would be in no position to say that the committee was agreeable to the amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I shall not ask anything unreasonable; but it is a fact that Mr. Fry comes in contact with every Senator's office; he is very efficient; he looks after the postmaster nominations for every Senator, and he is really entitled to more money.

Mr. TYDINGS. If the Senator will bring the matter to the attention of the committee at another time, or in connection with some other bill, so that we can really go into it, it may be that the amendment could be adopted; but the Senator will appreciate that I am in no position to agree to it in connection with the pending bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. I appreciate that fact and will not insist

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I have an amendment which I should like to have reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 7, line 16, it is proposed to strike out "seventy" and insert "one hundred and three."

Mr. TYDINGS. Does the Senator intend to speak to his amendment?

Mr. DANAHER. I should like to speak to the amendment. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. DANAHER. I should like to have the clerk state the other amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On line 19, after the word "chairman", it is proposed to insert "and one additional clerk for each Senator from a State having a population of one million or

Mr. TYDINGS. A parliamentary inquiry. The first amendment was read and, before we could discuss it, I asked the Senator if he was going to speak to his amendment, and he indicated that he was. Has the amendment been adopted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In view of the fact that the reading of the amendment was not concluded, the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. TYDINGS. I make the inquiry because I will have to oppose the Senator's amendment; but I did not want to preclude his remarks.

Mr. DANAHER. The Senator is entirely correct, and what he has stated is my understanding of the situation. In submitting the entire amendment, and asking that the clerk read it in its entirety, I desired to bring to the attention of he Senate exactly what the full effect of the amendment would be.

I have in mind that there are 33 States of the 48 each of which has a population of more than a million. Those of us from the more populous States find ourselves engaged constantly in correspondence of an important nature. People naturally and properly are becoming more governmentminded and more government-conscious-more interested in what Congress is doing. Therefore, with the increase of public business, serious demands upon our inadequate personnel have been created. There are States, to be sure, with such small populations that the present allotment is entirely adequate, but in a large proportion of the States many people are constantly submitting their inquiries and their public business to their Senators. So I have felt, and I ask Senators to consider the suggestion, that the Senators representing more populous States should very properly have one additional clerk each. Therefore I ask that the figure be amended from "70" to "103," and I also ask that the appropriation to cover that particular matter be set forth in line 19. That is why I asked the reading clerk to continue, and now ask that the amount appropriated in line 19 be increased from $724,200 by the amount of $54,540.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, it seems to me to be illadvised to consider an amendment of this kind on the floor of the Senate without some examination by the committee into its merits or demerits. Here is an amendment which will increase by $54,000 the appropriation for committee help and whether or not the proposal is sound and the way it is being handled is wise, even if it is desirable, we are in no position to discuss.

For example, we all know that the Senators from New York State and the Senators from the smaller States of the Union have the same amount of money with which to run their offices. According to my way of thinking that is obviously unfair. I think the help a Senator has ought to be predicated somewhat upon the population he represents, because obviously a man representing a great populous State such as Pennsylvania or Ohio requires considerable clerical help, whereas one representing a State with a small population requires very little office personnel in comparison.

Under the Senator's proposal we would not be dealing with that need per se. We would be simply saying that there should be 17 or 18 new clerks, whatever the number would be. In my opinion, under the Senator's amendment, we would be giving clerks to Senators who did not need them. The committee felt they should not do this, and that if any Senator needed an extra clerk for a short period of time, because of any good case he could make out, the correct procedure would be to present a resolution and have the extra clerk paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate during the emergency. Then, of course, recurring appropriations would not be made.

To attach an amendment of this magnitude to a bill of this kind without any consideration in committee I think would be ill-advised. There is something in the Senator's general approach to the problem, and if at another time he will come before the Committee on Appropriations, when we can work out an amendment, I will be one of the first to try to help him; but I do not think we can do it on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Connecticut yield?

Mr. DANAHER. I yield.

Mr. KING. There is something to be said in favor of the Senator's amendment; but I invite his attention to a situation which possibly he has overlooked.

From my State I receive perhaps a limited number of letters measured by the number which come to me from other States. I have received many letters from the Senator's State dealing with taxation, immigration, and various matters which come before committees of which I am a member.

My own State, whose population is limited measured by the population of some other States, furnishes a small part of the great number of letters that come to me for consideration. Take, for instance, the economy investigation which is now being conducted. I doubt not that my friend the chairman of the committee receives hundreds, if not thousands, of letters connected with the investigations being conducted by that committee. He comes from a State whose population is rather insignificant compared with the population of New York.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I object to the word—Mr. KING. The word "insignificant"?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Yes. They are not very numerous, but they are very significant.

Mr. KING. I will qualify my statement and say they are numerous and very important. The point I tried to make is that if we attempt to determine the amount that shall be allotted to the various Senators for their office help based upon the population of their various States we make a mistake. I repeat, the amount of correspondence is in part due to the committees of which Senators are members and the importance of the measures which are before those committees. Let us consider the Finance Committee. Thousands and thousands of letters are received by members of that committee. When the last tax bill was under consideration I received many thousand letters, although perhaps not more than a few hundred came from my own State, in regard to the matters before the committee. I mention that to show the unfairness, perhaps, or certainly the inadequacy, of the amendment offered by the Senator in dealing with the situation

Mr. DANAHER. I call the Senator's attention to the committee employees listed on pages 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7, indicating allotments to those committee members who, like the distinguished Senator from Utah, are so popular that people even from my State are writing to them. I can quite understand that the nature of the business is such that the Senator would be so engaged.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DANAHER. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The committee clerkships are deceptive. The Senators by and large have as many clerks as the chairmen of the committees do. The chairmen of the committees simply transfer their clerks to the committees, in which case they are carried as committee clerks. As a matter of fact, chairmen of committees have no more clerks, except, perhaps, the chairmen of half a dozen committees, than have Senators who have no committee chairmanships at all. Therefore it is deceptive to read that there are so many clerks and assistant clerks for committees. Senators will find that the chairmen have no other clerks than those assigned to the committees. They simply transfer them to the committees when they become chairmen.

I should like to ask the Senator from Connecticut if his amendment provides what States shall receive these 33 clerkships?

Mr. DANAHER. For the RECORD I will say that the following States have populations of 1,000,000 or more: Alabama, Arkansas, California, Colorado, Connecticut, Florida, Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, Nebraska, New Jersey, New York, North Carolina, Ohio, Oklahoma, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Virginia, Washington, West Virginia, and Wisconsin.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DANAHER. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am sure the Senator appreciates that I do not want to be at all discourteous, but I point out to him that, as I see it, the amendment could not be adopted, because it would go out on a point of order as being legislation on an appropriation bill. But even so, an amendment of this magnitude ought to be brought before the Committee on Appropriations, where it can be examined in more detail than is possible on the floor of the Senate.

I ask the Senator if he will not withdraw his amendment and present it at some other time, in connection with a deficiency bill for next year.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I believe the Senator's reference to a point of order is the best argument so far submitted, and I will yield on the matter of a point of order.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not want to take the Senator off the floor, but I point out to him that eventually I will have to make the point of order against his proposal. However, I did not want to do it too quickly.

Mr. DANAHER. I wish to have it definitely understood by the Senator from Maryland that there has been no interpretation on my part of a lack of courtesy on his.

Mr. TYDINGS. I appreciate that.

Mr. DANAHER. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TRUMAN in the chair). The Senator from Connecticut withdraws his amendment.

Mr. ADAMS. May I make a suggestion? From my experience I think what Senators need is not an extra $1,800 clerk, but a high-grade, well-paid clerk who can act as an underscretary to aid us in legislation and aid us in the more important work of our business. We furnish the heads of departments with all the help they want. If the head of this or that department wants lawyers, wants experts, we have no hesitation in giving him unnumbered assistants at $7,500, $8,000, $9,000, and $10,000 a year. But we work with merely a clerical force. We have never had the courage to provide for the Senators who must pass upon legislation the necessary high-grade help to aid us to do our job. It is not an $1,800 clerk we need. We need one who can do high-grade work in our offices and whose ability and talents can command $5,000 or $6,000 or $7,500.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still before the Senate and open to further amendment.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment, on page 6, line 19, after the first semicolon in that line, to insert the word "two", and in the same clause to strike out the word "clerk" and to insert "clerks."

Mr. President, the purpose of the amendment is to give to the Committee on Privileges and Elections one extra clerk. I wish to say to the Senator who is in charge of the bill that I have on more than one occasion talked to the committee about this matter. I have asked the committee for the clerk. At this moment the Committee on Privileges and Elections has before it two contests involving two seats in the Senate, as well as half a dozen important legislative bills. There is no committee in the Senate whose records ought to be more faithfully preserved than the Committee on Privileges and Elections. It is manifestly impossible to do it simply with the office force that is provided to all Senators whose committee assignments do not involve a great deal of work. In other years I have gone to various members of the committee and have talked about this matter with them. In all good faith I ask for an additional clerk, but at the same salary as that of the first assistant clerk, $2,400. I think that amount would be adequate for the pay of this committee clerk. The committee is one which ought to have a clerk who would remain in the committee room all the while, who could furnish information, who could preserve the records, who could have the records of the committee kept in order.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

My NORRIS. It seems to me that what the Senator says about the Committee on Privileges and Elections is entitled to a great deal of weight. However, it occurs to me that that committee ought not to be a continuing one. Is it not true of that particular committee that its work depends almost entirely upon the number and kind of contests for seats in the Senate which are pending before the committee? Most of those contests necessarily occur after an election. For instance, in the next session of Congress there will probably be no contests whatever.

Mr. GEORGE. For the most part, I will say to the Senator from Nebraska, that is true, but the committee does handle some important legislative matters, and the committee has often been hampered by not having proper assistance in the committee room itself.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think I can point out to the Senator how he may get help in the dilemma in which he finds himself, and, with his permission, I should like to do so. From time to time when a case has been made out that a chairman of a Senate committee has needed additional help in order to do some particular thing which at the time was abnormal, the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate has provided for such Senator, as chairman of the committee, an additional clerk. I am only a humble member of that committee, but if the situation presented by the Senator from Georgia is called to the attention of that committee I feel certain that it will be favorably received and that he will get the help to which he is entitled.

I may point out to the Senator that in four or five other instances called to the attention of the Appropriations Committee Senators made out very good cases as to why they should each have an extra clerk, and we were much impressed by them; but the committee felt that there were a great many of these occurrences which were abnormal, and that there was not need for permanent additional help. However, I am sure that if the Senator will present a resolution and have it referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, he will find that the helphe needs will be provided by that committee on the facts as he presents them.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I thank the Senator for the suggestion. On one other occasion I followed that suggestion. I want to say again that the Committee on Privileges and Elections ought to have a permanent clerk, because to bring in a new clerk in the midst of a contest, one not familiar at all with the work of that committee, is simply adding another stenographer or clerk, that is all, and he cannot be of any real help.

I should like to say to the Senate that not many Senators have any idea of the number of requests we have for the records made in various contests going back practically to the very foundation of the Government.

I myself have carefully and conscientiously gone through the records in that committee room. I wish to say frankly that they are inadequately kept. One can find nothing in them. The records cannot be kept without a regular clerk who is responsible for them. For that reason I think the Committee on Privileges and Elections should have a permanent clerk

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I do not want this opportunity to pass without saying a few words on this subject.

I do not think there is a Senator present who does not believe that the situation described actually exists. I do not believe there is a committee of the Senate which has the volume of correspondence that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry has. We are not only swamped with requests for information, which is not always forthcoming, but we are also flooded with panaceas for the immediate settlement of all questions. The correspondents are in earnest, and we try to answer them as best we may. Seriously, however, the volume of work that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry has to do is amazing not only in keeping up with the correspondence but in answering inquiries as to legislation which is pending. I am glad the Senator in charge of the bill [Mr. Typings] has said that he will sympathetically receive a resolution asking for additional help. I have introduced such a resolution this afternoon and hope it will go to him, and that he will afford relief.

Before I take my seat I wish to endorse what the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Adams] said. We ought to have additions to our offices of personnel to assist us in the matter of legislation. The departments are furnished with men who are acquainted with the processes as well as the subject of legislation. Surely the chairmen and members of important committees should be given such aid. I now wish to state to the Senator from Colorado that if at the proper time he will introduce an appropriate bill. I shall be delighted to support it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I wish to express my full accord with the proposal of the Senator from Colorado. I entirely agree with him.

Mr. SMITH. I think the Senator from Colorado has made a very valuable contribution this afternoon for the thoughtful consideration of this body.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I should like to make a brief observation on this matter. I hope that before the next legislative bill is reported the Committee on Appropriations will give some attention to the subject.

I wish very briefly to give my own experience. I am about as busy as the average Senator. During vacations of the Senate I have more employees than I need. During the sessions of the Senate I do not have a sufficient number. The salaries are maladjusted. Senators should be able to employ and to fix the salaries of their own employees. Briefly I suggest that a certain definite appropriation—not any more than we now have—be allotted to Senators in the same manner in which postage or stationery money is allotted, and that Senators be permitted to arrange their own offices, employ whom they please, pay whatever salaries they please, and make a report thereof to the Treasury.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, if the Senator from Maryland [Mr. Tydings], as a member of the committee which will have jurisdiction of the resolution to provide additional help during this session of Congress and during the vacation, or some part of it, will look kindly upon a resolution to provide additional help to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, I shall let the matter pass without pressing for a vote on it. I will say frankly that, in my judgment, the records of the Committee on Priveleges and Elections ought to be kept in better shape than they are kept, because some very important matters have passed through the committee, and the records are badly confused.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, it is my experience that when any Senator or committee has real need in unusual circumstances for an additional clerk to do a particular job such as the Senator has outlined, the request of the Senator or committee, if brought to the attention of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, is always favorably received. I do not know a case in which real evidence to support the need of a Senator or committee has been presented which has been turned down. On the other hand, some cases have been turned down, but in those cases there was no evidence showing a real need. When Senators resort to that means of acquiring additional help, they usually have a pretty good case.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is the Senator referring to the Committee on Appropriations or the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate?

Mr. TYDINGS. I refer to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, other Senators have revealed their own situations. I should like to mention a situation which refers particularly to myself and to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNary], the minority leader.

My experience has been that my work has been multiplied by four on account of the position I happen to occupy. In spite of that fact, I have no more clerk hire and no more assistants than has any other Senator. In the House an allowance is made to the majority leader because of his position, which allowance is sufficient to enable him to employ additional help. The Senate has never provided such an

I have brought the matter to the attention of the chairman of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. He was sympathetic; but I have not pressed the suggestion. However, I think Senators will agree that someone ought to be available as a legislative clerk, not charged with the duty of trying to run the office, but to be at the beck and call of whoever happened to have charge of the program, for research in connection with such questions as the one which arose today in an unexpected discussion. Information of that sort and of all sorts should be available from day to day and should be placed upon the desk of the majority and minority leaders.

When I was in the House I was amazed at the ability of the Republican leader, the late Mr. Mann, of Illinois, to have at his fingertips complete information about every bill which came up for consideration. He was able to do that because he had a corps of assistants whose duty it was to do nothing but look into the facts relative to all measures, and lay them on his desk every morning before the session began.

The Senator has indicated such a generous disposition that I feel that I should be justified in going before his committee and asking for a little relief along the line I have suggested, not only for myself but also for the minority leader, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY].

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I think the majority and minority leaders have much extra work thrust upon them. Many persons wish to see them. Obviously they do not have the time to spend in their offices that other Senators have. While I should not want to give any "hostages to fortune," so far as my individual position on the committee is concerned. I feel that the Senator has a pretty good prima facie case, without any concrete evidence.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossing of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, ask for a conference with the House thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer (Mr. TRUMAN in the chair) appointed Mr. Tydings, Mr. Byrnes, Mr. Adams, Mr. Overton, Mr. Truman, Mr. Hale, and Mr. BRIDGES conferees on the part of the Senate.

TREASURY AND POST OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the chairman of the Appropriations Committee [Mr. GLASS] is not present in the Chamber. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 4492, the Treasury and Post Office appropriation bill, with the understanding that no action is to be taken with respect to it today. The chairman will be present tomorrow and will personally take charge of the bill. I wish merely to move that the bill be made the unfinished business.

Mr. McNARY. Is it proposed that the Senate then take a recess until tomorrow?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4492) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

RESTORATION OF COINAGE AND CIRCULATION OF GOLD

Mr. KING. Mr. President, on March 3 last I introduced Senate bill 1684 to amend the Gold Reserve Act of 1934. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A bill to amend the Gold Reserve Act of 1934

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 3 and 4 of the Gold Reserve Act of 1934, approved January 30, 1934, are hereby repealed.

SEC. 2. Section 5 of the Gold Reserve Act of 1934, approved January 30, 1934, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 5. Except as hereinafter provided, no gold shall hereafter be coined, and no gold coin shall hereafter be paid out or delivered by the United States: Provided, however, That coinage may continue to be executed by the mints of the United States for foreign countries in accordance with the act of January 29, 1874 continue to be executed by the mints of the United States for foreign countries in accordance with the act of January 29, 1874 (U. S. C., title 31, sec. 367): And provided further, That the Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the President, may provide for the coinage of gold coins of the value of $10 and $20 each for the purpose of paying for gold purchased under the authority of section 3700 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 31, sec. 734), as amended by section 8 of the Gold Reserve Act of 1934, and for the purpose of redeeming gold certificates: And provided further, That the President is authorized by proclamation to provide for the unlimited coinage of gold hereafter tendered for coinage, at the weight per gold dollar in grains nine-tents fine for coinage, at the weight per gold dollar in grains nine-tenths fine fixed from time to time in accordance with paragraph (b) (2) of section 43, title III, of the act approved May 12, 1933 (Public, No. 10, 73d Cong.), as amended, or which may hereafter be fixed by law. The President, in addition to the authority to provide for the unlimited coinage of gold as aforesaid, under such terms and conditions as he may prescribe, is further authorized to cause to be issued and delivered to the tenderer of gold for coinage, gold certificates in lieu of the standard gold coins to which the tenderer would be entitled and in an amount in dollars equal to the value of the standard gold coins that the tenderer of such gold for coinage would receive in such coins?

or the standard gold coins that the tenderer of such gold for coinage would receive in such coins."

SEC. 3. Section 6 of the Gold Reserve Act of 1934 is amended by striking out the words "owned by the Federal Reserve banks". from the first proviso thereof and by striking out the second para-

Mr. KING. The bill was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and I hope to secure favorable action upon the measure within a short time.

I have had a large number of requests for copies of the bill together with a statement of its purposes. In order to meet these requests I desire to submit a few observations.

The purpose of this bill is to restore to the people of the United States, its Territories and possessions, the right to possess gold and gold coin in order that gold may circulate freely within and from our country. By authorizing the Treasury to pay for acquisitions of gold in gold coin or gold certificates the Federal Government may at any time cease further additions to the enormous gold reserve which we are now accumulating.

Since the passage of the Gold Reserve Act of 1934 it has been forbidden to our citizens to possess gold in the form of coin or otherwise. Gold was nationalized, and on February 18 the United States Government had 423,298,963.6 ounces which, at a value of $35 per ounce, represents $14 815 463 727 16.

Now there is no question about our having sufficient gold. There is a serious question as to the wisdom of increasing our now enormous hoard. What reason can possibly be given for denying our citizens the right to possess gold, to have gold coins, and to permit gold to circulate freely both within this country and from this country? It may not be necessary, and in fact may be quite undesirable, to cease the purchase of gold; but there is no valid reason why such purchases cannot be paid for in gold coin or gold certificates.

How can anyone deny that with more than half of the monetary gold of the world in our Federal vaults we have more than the United States needs for its own purposes? This situation, coupled with the small gold holdings of all the other nations of the world, makes the restoration of any general use of gold as money extremely difficult, in fact, well-nigh impossible. There is simply not enough gold in the rest of the world to meet the requirements of the people. The following table compiled from the Federal Reserve Bulletin for December 1938 clearly reflects this situation. I ask that the table be inserted in the RECORD at this point without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. O'MAHONEY in the chair). Without objection, the table will be printed in the RECORD.

The table referred to is as follows:

¹ According to the daily statement of the U. S. Treasury for Dec. 30, 1938, the United States held $14,511,225,000, evidently having bought $446,225,000 since Oct. 31, 1938. All estimates of monetary gold are necessarily approximate, because times of statement do not synchronize. Also, current mine production and constant transfers back and forth enter the picture. For example, the gain in United States gold of $465,225,000 just mentioned must, in part, have been at the expense of other nations. Part was mine production, which runs around $110,000,000 per month.

2 Wall Street Journal, Jan. 3, 1939, p. 16.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, from 1934 to 1938 the United States has bought, at the price of $35 per ounce, the equivalent of the entire world production of gold, which was 168,813,000 ounces, plus over 50,000,000 ounces from gold previously mined. This is particularly interesting when it is remembered that 87 percent of the current new gold production of the world has its source in countries outside the United States, and I may remark that most of the gold comes from Russia, South Africa, Australia, and Canada.

In part gold has come to us in payment of excess balances in the international exchange of goods and merchandise, but the larger part of this excessive flow of gold is due to the flight of the holders of currency of other nations to the United States dollar or United States securities, and, of course, it has been largely influenced by our stabilized price of $35 per ounce for any and all gold offered. I may add, by way of parentheses, that the fear of war in Europe, if not elsewhere, has contributed to the enormous inflow of gold into the United States.

Who can see in the present disturbed situation existing in Europe and the Far East any change in the gold movement? The probability is that gold will continue to flow to the United States. We cannot cease buying at the existing price without lowering the value of what we now have, and, worse still, without precipitating a major disturbance in the already chaotic monetary and economic condition of the world, since the price of gold would at once become variable and probably fluctuate widely in price.

Down through the centuries man has found gold to be the most desirable of the media of exchange and to be the best protection for the individual when war, revolution, insolvencies of governments, and other catastrophes assail the world and make the value of printed money tokens a hollow mockery. We have had examples of these situations even in our own country, and in recent years we know of what has happened in Germany and other countries of the world. In this statement I do not disparage the importance of silver for monetary purposes. Gold and silver have served the world for centuries for monetary purposes.

To the people of the Rocky Mountain West our precious metals, including gold and, of course, silver, are of outstanding importance as it is upon the mining industry of the West that we so greatly depend for our economic and industrial development.

Since the days following the Civil War when the gold of California and of the Rocky Mountain States played so important a part in the rebuilding of our war-weakened country, the search for gold has been one of the chief factors in the development of the West. It has always been and it still is this search which in large part results in the finding and development of the base metal ore bodies, which contribute so heavily to the wealth and well-being of our entire Nation. Hence to us gold has always been important and continues in our esteem today.

Eastward from the Rockies and from the Black Hills of South Dakota, however, there is not the same high regard for the precious metals. The production of gold in this area is negligible and gold has not continued to hold the same high regard with which it is viewed from the Rocky Mountains to the Pacific coast. Securities, drafts, checks, and paper currency serve the need of the people in the area referred to, as of course they do over our entire country, but the people of the more easterly sections have no consciousness of gold comparable to their fellow citizens in the West, and, as year follows upon year under a managed currency, our citizens outside of the mining areas are forgetting gold. In another business generation under existing fiscal policies there would be little realization of the essential part gold plays and of the need for hard money to sustain the confidence of the people in their currency and in the credit of the United States.

The bill (S. 1684) provides in brief the following:

First. Repeal of the law prohibiting the ownership of gold coins or bars in the United States.

Second. Authorizes our Government whenever it wishes to avoid further accumulation of gold to pay therefor only with United States $10 or $20 gold pieces, or for convenience, in gold certificates redeemable in gold coin to the appropriate extent.

Third. Authorizes the unlimited coinage of gold hereafter tendered for coinage at the weight per gold dollar now or hereafter fixed by law.

The enactment of this bill will be a substantial step toward restoring the confidence of our people in the currency and in the credit of the United States which they cherish so dearly. It will make it possible to put an end to further increases in our present excessive gold stocks and will greatly decrease the present growing possibility that gold ultimately may cease to be the foundation of money systems and become a mere commodity. It would still maintain the existing price of gold at not less than $35 per fine ounce and thereby protect the value of the fourteen and one-half billion dollar reserve which the Government now possesses.

I might add, in passing, that Mr. Keynes-regarded, unfortunately, too highly and whose views have, I fear, too much influence upon the administration-stated a few years ago in his book on money that if there were too great an accumulation of gold in the hands of one or two governments the day might come when there might be a movement to regard it as a redundant currency.

There is no valid reason why gold should be kept from the people and there is every good reason that they should be permitted to possess it. There is no scarcity of it and it is being mined in this country, Canada, South Africa, Russia, and other parts of the world in increasing quantities. I appeal to the Members of the Senate to act in what I know to be their desire for the protection of the credit of the United States and their desire to maintain the confidence of the people in their currency by restoring the right of the individual to possess gold coin and gold certificates.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, MARCH 13, 1939

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Lord of all being, throned afar, we pray in overcoming faith and in the love of Jesus Christ our Lord. Thou who art our fathers' God, who made the mother's heart, we pray for that will and fortitude that will enable us to do the truth. Come with us and give us the strength to speak the brave word and live the brave life. Heavenly Father, lead us through the disorders and the halting weaknesses of human nature which fetter the sympathy of the heart. May we be generous toward the ungrateful, gracious to the unthankful, do good to the bad, and teach the cruel the way of kindliness. Bless us each day with breadth of sympathy and broadness of vision. At eventime whisper quietness; may we give ourselves pause to meditate on the deep things of the soul, on time and its meaning, and on life and its mysteries. With godlike power, may our immortal spirits touch the depths and the heights of the unseen world.

Now, Heavenly Father, we pause a moment in memory of him, honorable in public service, true to all the trusts of private life. We are reminded of our mortality. In the midst of life we are in death. We bid this honorable Member an affectionate farewell. In the name of our Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, March 10, 1939, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Hess, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that on the following date the President approved and signed a joint resolution and bill of the House of the following titles:

On March 4, 1939:

H. J. Res. 185. Joint resolution making additional funds available for salaries and expenses, Federal Housing Administration: and

H. R. 4011. An act to continue the functions of the Commodity Credit Corporation and the Export-Import Bank of Washington, and for other purposes.

COMMITTEE ON RIVERS AND HARBORS

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors may be permitted to sit this afternoon during the session of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

DUTIES OF COMPTROLLERS OF CUSTOMS

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by including a statement on the duties of the comptrollers of customs.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, the legislation proposed in the Treasury-Post Office appropriation bill for 1940 to abolish the positions of the seven comptrollers of customs is identically the same as the amendment proposed in 1932, which was rejected by Congress.

At that time the late Honorable Ogden L. Mills was Secretary of the Treasury and previous to that a Member of the House. He wrote to the chairman of the Senate Committee on Appropriations urging the retention of the position of comptroller of customs as essential to the sound administration of the Customs Service.

The action of the Congress in 1932 in eliminating the proposed amendment abolishing comptrollers of customs was in agreement with that of prior Legislatures continuing the position of comptrollers of customs since its inception in 1789.

FUNCTIONS OF COMPTROLLERS OF CUSTOMS

Comptrollers of customs represent an independent branch of the United States Treasury Department established at the seven largest ports of entry for the sake of convenience and economy to make the necessary examination and final accounting of the accounts of collectors of customs.

The position of comptroller of customs, then known as naval officer, was established by the First Congress in 1789. Under the act of March 2, 1799, comptrollers of customs possessed equal rights with collectors of customs in the assessment of duties on all imported merchandise, and no duties were to be received without concurrent action by these two customs officers.

Prior to the Tariff Act of 1922 comptrollers of customs were located at Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, New Orleans, San Francisco, and Chicago. Their verification was limited to customs transactions originating in the particular collection districts in which they were located. Under authority of section 523 of the Tariff Act of 1922, the duties of comptrollers were more specifically set forth, and their administrative examination was extended to all the customs districts as assigned to them by the Secretary of the Treasury.

It is apparent from these provisions of law and the practice in effect for 140 years in the administration of customs that the comptrollers of customs are required to perform important administrative as well as auditing functions, and that their review of assessments of duties and allowances for drawback made by collectors extends to administrative questions of fact as well as to matters of law and accounting. These comptrollers, acting under the Secretary of the Treasury, pass upon matters affecting the liquidation of duties in an administrative capacity and perform for the Secretary administrative functions which are necessary to the proper supervision of the collection of revenue from customs. Their check upon the transactions of the collectors is essentially an administrative audit.

The duties of the comptrollers under the statutes are to establish the accountability of collectors of customs for the proper and complete collection of all duties imposed upon imported merchandise and the disbursement of refunds in connection therewith. They verify the collectors' assessment of duties on all imported merchandise and allowances for draw-back of duties on exportations of manufactured imported merchandise. By comparison with independent records and vouchers, they verify the correctness of the collectors' abstracts and accounts of moneys collected. After certification by the comptroller of customs, the collectors' accounts current are forwarded to the Secretary of the Treasury for transmission to the Comptroller General.

The comptrollers of customs receive copies of all manifests of imported merchandise directly from the masters of the importing vessels and verify the disposition thereof by comparison of the reports of the discharging inspectors with the import entries and the record of merchandise sent to general order.

During the fiscal year 1938, the seven comptrollers of customs verified the collection of $356,888,770 as duties on imported merchandise covering 3,121,176 individual transactions. In this verification errors discovered by the comptrollers totaled $940,890 for the above fiscal year and $1,121,275 in the fiscal year 1937. They also verified disbursements made by collectors of customs of $5,220,303 on account of excessive duties collected and $11,841,390 in draw-back payments.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record and to include therein a radio broadcast by Prof. Irving Fisher, of Yale, and Senator George W. Norris, of Nebraska, on the subject of 100-percent reserves against demand deposits in banks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record by including Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 17, adopted by the Michigan Legislature.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

THE LATE GEORGE SCHNEIDER

Mr. GEHRMANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. GEHRMANN. Mr. Speaker, it is with extreme regret that I announce the death of one of our old colleagues, George Schneider, of Wisconsin.

I have just received a telegram this morning stating that George had died very suddenly on Saturday afternoon. George served here with distinction in the Sixty-eighth, Sixty-ninth, Seventieth, Seventy-first, Seventy-second, Seventy-fourth, and Seventy-fifth Congresses. I do not know the cause of his death. He was here about a week ago apparently in good health. He went to Toledo to attend a national convention, and I received a wire from him from Toledo asking for some information on a bill only a few days ago. It was certainly a shock to me to learn of his untimely demise.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, there is just one reason that there is fear of war in western Europe and in the Mediterranean area. That reason is that both England and France have weefully and, in a sense, criminally neglected their air defense and permitted their potential enemies, Germany and Italy, to outstrip them about 3 or 4 to 1 in air power. For the first time since the Spanish Armada 350 years ago threatened the mistress of the seas, the British Empire is in danger of defeat and disintegration. It all happened because England neglected her air defense.

France no doubt still has one of the best armies in the world. Ten years ago France was the most powerful nation in continental Europe. Today she trembles before the threat of Hitler's air power. France also has the double threat of Germany and Italy because she forgot her "wings," her air defense. Her Army, invincible on land, might just as well be so many Boy Scouts. She put enough treasure into cement in the Maginot line to build seven or eight thousand planes. The Maginot line will not stop bombing war planes. France really needed was a Maginot line in the sky.

What a tragedy that all the prodigious sacrifices of France and England go for nothing unless they can maintain their power against the dictator states which now threaten their existence. Four years of heroic struggle for liberty and democracy may be lost because these two democracies forgot their defenses in the sky.

The United States, too, has been neglecting her air defenses. Though she stands at the head of all other nations in commercial aviation, she is another democracy which has neglected her air defense.

The people of the United States do not want war, and they demand that we keep them out of foreign wars and our nose out of international affairs that do not directly concern us. I think they believe we should arm for defense and not for aggression; that we should have no entangling alliances with any other nation—the opposite course will inevitably lead to war; that as long as the so-called aggressor nations leave us alone it is not our responsibility to make decisions or to interfere; our country has no business to impose either economic or military penalties on foreign nations merely because we disapprove of their forms of government; that only Congress has the right to declare war; and that the executive department transcends its authority when it commits us to a policy leading to war. But the people know, too, that weakness invites attack and believe with Washington that "to be prepared for war is the best assurance of peace" and for these reasons favor a reasonable program of defense such as has been almost unanimously adopted by this Congress. Many of them believe that if we had been reasonably prepared in 1917 we would never have been in the World War. We were so miserably unprepared that the Central Powers had only contempt for us and therefore offered insults and committed depredations which forced us into war in spite of ourselves. Several hundred millions spent in defense before that war would have saved us billions in the end, for when the last pension of the last widow of our last World War soldier is paid, that war will have cost us $100,000,000,000, which was the estimated worth of all the property of the world at the time of the adoption of our Constitution.

I do not believe the people whom we directly represent want our country to again invite attack by our obvious or apparent weakness and be caught like England under Mr. Chamberlain's old umbrella as her protection. It is true that England is feverishly attempting to repair her air defense, and, as usual, her haste will entail prodigious waste, just as we experienced in 1917 and 1918 in our hurry to prepare.

I do not believe the people whose representatives we are want to be caught, like France, trembling alternately between Hitler and Mussolini. I believe the people want that reasonable defense program which will demand respect and, if necessary, inspire fear of the might of this great representative democracy.

Recognizing these things, the Legislature of the State of Kansas has passed a concurrent resolution relative to the air-defense program of the Congress, and I ask unanimous consent to include this resolution in the extension of my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

The resolution referred to is as follows:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 22 A concurrent resolution in relation to aviation

REPORT OF RAILROAD RETIREMENT BOARD

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce:

To the Congress of the United States:

In compliance with the provisions of section 10 (b) (4) of the Railroad Retirement Act, approved June 24, 1937, and of section 12 (1) of the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act, approved June 25, 1938, I transmit herewith for the information of the Congress the report of the Railroad Retirement Board for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1938, together with supplementary information covering the period July 1 to October 31, 1938.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand a copy of a New York newspaper of this morning. From that it appears that $250,000 of relief money has been wasted in put-ting up a building for the World's Fair at New York. At least $1,000,000 of relief money will be expended to provide the exhibits. They are going to have a show there, and they are planning to have W. P. A. workers there to show it off. The open court is 126 feet long and 86 feet wide. There will be folk dancing, puppet shows, recitations, concerts. It is seen now what they are using the money for. Is it not about time that we had a house cleaning in the W. P. A. and use the money only for relief? [Applause.]

BONNEVILLE POWER LINES AND RATES

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, on tomorrow we will have under consideration the Interior Department appropriation bill, which carries an item for power lines for the Bonneville project.

This appropriation is very necessary to take the vast amount of electric energy generated at Bonneville to the people of that great northwestern country, as well as to supply the needs of the Federal Government in that area, and to raise revenues with which to repay the Government's investment.

LXXXIV-168

In order to do that Mr. J. D. Ross, the administrator at Bonneville, has worked out a schedule of retail rates to be charged the residential consumers which I am submitting for

I hope you will all read it carefully, for these are the rates we hope to see put into effect in every home in America within the next few years.

Let me say now that electricity can be furnished at these rates without loss in every State in the Union, whether it is generated with coal, oil, gas, or water power.

Read these rates carefully and compare them with the rates paid in your own districts, and you will see how much your people are overcharged.

These Bonneville rates to residential consumers are as follows:

First 50 kilowatt-hours a month, 21/2 cents a kilowatt-

Next 150 kilowatt-hours a month, 2 cents a kilowatt-hour. Next 100 kilowatt-hours a month, 1 cent a kilowatt-hour. Next 1,700 kilowatt-hours a month, 5 mills a kilowatthour.

Excess above 2,000 kilowatt-hours a month, 71/2 mills a kilowatt-hour.

Minimum monthly bill, 50 cents.

When we get electricity to every home in America at these rates, including every farm home, and get the commercial and industrial rates reduced accordingly, our people will then begin to enjoy this new civilization into which we are now moving and which will be known as the electric age.

But, Mr. Speaker, the enemy never sleeps: the Power Trust, as usual, is resorting to its customary tactics. Mr. Philip Gadsden, head of the local utility lobby, supported by rate payers overcharges, has sent out a memorandum to the members of the House Appropriations Committee and then turned over this document to the New York Times.

This memorandum is an attempt to kill or limit the pending appropriation item for the Bonneville project.

The Gadsden communication is a complete mass of misrepresentations. It just shows to what extent these selfish interests will go to prevent the full benefits of one of these Federal projects from reaching the people. Can we ever believe the spokesmen of the private power interests who flood us with such propaganda?

Last year these same interests sent out memoranda stating that no market existed for Bonneville power. That charge has been so thoroughly refuted on the floor of this House that these same interests now admit in their latest memorandum that a market does exist. The Gadsden memorandum attacks this program from the standpoints of duplication, taxes, and power policy. It leaves out nothing that could be attacked.

It even contains a photostatic copy of the article appearing in the New York Times, February 18, 1939, which contained the following statement:

The President recalled that C. E. Grosbeck, chairman of the Electric Bond & Share Co., had called on him at the White House several months ago to pledge the cooperation of the industry in the administration's purpose to increase its electrical generating and transmission capacity with a view to national defense.

But this latest Gadsden memorandum is far from being a token of cooperation. The national power survey of the Federal Power Commission was based on questionnaires sent to the private operating companies. This survey established beyond any question that a definite power shortage exists in the Pacific Northwest. The shortage is so acute that any national-defense program in that region is likely to break down. The alleged patriotism of these private utility interests is mockery. They now come before Congress and ask that the appropriations for the Bonneville project be curtailed or limited in order to gratify their own cupidity. These interests are trying to repeat what they did at Muscle Shoals, when the Alabama Power Co. purchased bus-bar current for less than two-tenths of a cent per kilowatt-hour and sold it to the people immediately adjacent to the dam for a profit of over 6,000 percent.

This memorandum is a deliberate attempt to misrepresent the facts so that abundant low-priced power can be kept from the home owners in the cities and towns and on the farm, as well as from business establishments in that area.

These utility interests, with their advertising fund of $25,000,000 annually, are contributing misleading statements to the press in order to build up a psychology of doubt. Their statements are so warped and twisted as to lend suspicion to every movement they make. The American people, when they know the facts, will never accept the false gifts of such industrial leaders. If the real investors in the industry want to be heard, they will have to select different leaders. Their present leaders are discredited. The psychology created by such unholy tactics is making the problem of recovery more difficult for those of us who have a sincere desire to improve conditions.

GADSDEN POINTERS

The Gadsden memorandum states that these pending appropriations, if approved, will result in:

First. The duplication of existing facilities.

Second. Will result in a tax loss to Federal and State Government.

Third. Are not in harmony with the recent declarations of the President and Secretary Hopkins on the Government's utility policy.

I wish to deny with all the emphasis possible the charge that the pending appropriation will duplicate existing transmission lines or result in tax losses or is contrary to the recent declarations of the President and the Secretary.

NORTHWEST EXISTING ELECTRIC SERVICE

The Gadsden memorandum avers that the low rates and the large consumption in the Northwest have produced social benefits through the efforts of the private companies, when, as a matter of fact, the low rates are the result of public opinion and this public opinion was created by the low rates of the three outstanding public plants in this area, Tacoma, Seattle, and Eugene, Oreg. Public opinion has forced the private companies to reduce rates. The average rates in these two States will vary from 2½ to 2%0 cents per kilowatt-hour for residential service. This low regional average results from including in the State figures the enormous quantities of low-priced energy sold in Seattle, Tacoma, and Eugene, together with the requirement that adjacent private companies have to approach the public rates to meet this competition and to satisfy public opinion.

As I have repeatedly pointed out, consumption increases with reduction of rates and at the same time the gross revenue per consumer increases. I repeat—and I can never repeat too often—the slogan "that it is good business to reduce rates." Even with the low-rate levels existing in the Northewest, compared to the country as a whole, the people of Oregon and Washington are still overcharged about $20,000,000 a year.

DUPLICATION OF EXISTING FACILITIES

The Gadsden memorandum is built upon two maps, numbered charts 3 and 4. These maps set out existing lines and superimpose the projected lines of the Bonneville project. Such a presentation is misleading. With the exception of the lines running from the Skagit and the Baker plant to Seattle and from Cushman to Tacoma, and the lines immediately west of Spokane, all of the existing lines are of low capacity and cannot handle a small fraction of the Bonneville output. Anyone who is interested can find the facts by consulting the normal circuit capacity map prepared by the Federal Power Commission and Bulletin No. 99 of the Engineering Experiment Station of the University of Washington. These two neutral sources present the facts which discredit the Gadsden allegations.

TAX LOSSES

When crowded into a corner these selfish interests raise the bogy of tax losses. If Mr. Gadsden and his committee would look into the matter, they would find that the administrator of the Bonneville project has publicly announced that contracts for the sale of Bonneville energy will contain such stipulations as to avoid any tax losses to the States or the communities.

On February 22 I presented to the House my study of the tax and rate situation in the District of Columbia. In that study I pointed out that the Potomac Electric Power Co. was only paying 4.68 percent of their gross earnings as local taxes, while the public plant at Tacoma, Wash., contributes 12 percent. The public plant at Seattle contributes the same taxes as the private companies do. It is pure hypocrisy to raise this issue when the local company here in Washington is paying less than half of what it should and is earning 75 percent annually on its common stock. The local taxes of the Potomac Electric Power Co. amount to $686,000 per year. This company, in turn, collects from the Federal Government and the District of Columbia $1,469,000 annually in service bills. These collections carry overcharges of about $460,000 a year. It is incompatible for private interests to raise the tax question when in most communities they are collecting from the tax-disbursing agencies a great deal more than they are contributing.

POLICY CONFLICTS

The Gadsden memorandum sets out that the passage of the Bonneville appropriation items will create a conflict with the recent policy statements of the President. Such an allegation is certainly untrue. Mr. Gadsden and his cohorts should know that the pending appropriation carries out the policies established by Congress 2 years ago when the Bonneville legislation passed both Houses. Again these interests are raising false issues to defeat the yardstick program. They want to gobble up this power and then rob the people in that area with exorbitant overcharges.

FINANCIAL FIGURES

The financial figures set out in the Gadsden memorandum are incorrect. Anyone interested in securing the correct figures can find them in the Bonneville annual report. Mr. Gadsden includes in his cost figures funds appropriated for navigation purposes and funds included in the Rivers and Harbors Act—none of which are a part of any power cost. He makes a misleading statement when he tries to create the impression that the Bonneville project is subsidized by the taxpayers. If he will read section 7 of the Bonneville Act, he will find that it is mandatory that rate schedules be prepared to recover for the Federal Treasury the capital investment in power facilities, with interest thereon, within a reasonable time.

This is the same old fight of the Power Trust against the American people. I hope every Member of the House will inform himself on this proposition and give his full support to this great project that will mean so much to the people of the Northwest in the years to come.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, we have had before the Interior appropriations subcommittee a request for money for the transmission lines at the Bonneville project. I say to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Rankin] that the bill carries now a whole lot more money than is necessary for the transmission lines for the current that will be generated at Bonneville Dam, and we are going years ahead of what they will need so far as transmission lines are concerned. We are duplicating practically all of the lines in that vicinity, and it is just wasting money now and putting private enterprise out of business in order to appease the desire of the ones who are back of the Bonneville project. I say to my colleague from Mississippi, whose heart and soul is in power, that when he puts the Government in power he puts individuals out.

Mr. RANKIN. And I also put some more heart and soul into the Government.

DISTRICT BUSINESS

The SPEAKER. This is District of Columbia day, and the Chair recognizes the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH].

MEMBERS OF FIRE DEPARTMENT, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the District of Columbia, I call up the bill (H. R. 1982), to amend the act entitled "An act to classify officers and members of the Fire Department of the District of Columbia," and for other purposes, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I wish to be heard briefly. I have taken the time of the House at this point that I might present to you the reason why the Committee on the District of Columbia brings in this proposal at the present time.

Under the act of 1906, later amended in 1920, the law specifically prohibited any member of the Fire Department of the District of Columbia from joining an organization or an affiliate of an organization which allowed a strike by its members. I want it clearly understood that in bringing in this legislation we are continuing the policy which is carried out in the prior acts of 1906 and 1920. I read the language in the amended act of 1920, as it refers to this subject:

No member of the Fire Department of the District of Columbia shall be or become a member of any organization, or of an organization affiliated with another organization, which itself or any subordinated, component, or affiliated organization of which holds, claims, or uses the strike to enforce its demands.

The legislation which the Committee on the District of Columbia brings before you today is to amend the act so as to delete the language I have just read and insert in lieu thereof the following:

No member of the Fire Department of the District of Columbia shall, directly or indirectly, engage in any strike of such depart-

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with further proceedings under the call of the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to address a question to the gentleman from California. Would it then be in order to ask unanimous consent to return to a bill that has already been called?

The SPEAKER. The Chair would be inclined to think it would be in order to submit that request at the conclusion of the call, if the remainder of the call is dispensed with.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

K. E. PARKER CO.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Private Calendar, No. 36, H. R. 2055, for the relief of K. E. Parker Co., and to withdraw my objection to the consideration of that bill.

INVESTIGATION OF THE MILK INDUSTRY IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 113.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 113

House Resolution 113

Resolved, That the House Committee on the District of Columbia, or a duly authorized subcommittee thereof, be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to make a full and complete investigation of (1) the sources and purity of the milk and cream supply of the District of Columbia; (2) of any violation of the law of the District of Columbia or regulations of the District Commissioners made pursuant thereto with respect to the importation of milk or cream into the District of Columbia or importation of unlicensed milk or cream into the District of Columbia and the method by which such violations are perpetrated; (3) the possible effect upon the health of the community by reason of the unlawful importation of unlicensed milk or cream into the District of Columbia; (4) whether and to what extent cream for ice-cream purposes, under section 4 of the 1925 Milk Act of the District of Columbia, is being diverted unlawfully to milk or cream for fluid consumption; (5) whether any conspiracy exists on the part of any distributor of any dairy products to violate the provisions of the 1925 District Milk Act or the regulations made pursuant thereto.

The said committee or any subcommittee thereof is hereby explorited for the purpose of the test of the precedure to subspace and tions made pursuant thereto.

The said committee or any subcommittee thereof is hereby authorized for the purpose of this resolution to subpena and require the production of the books and records of any person, firm, or corporation licensed to import milk or cream into the District of Columbia or of any person, firm, or corporation which it has reason to believe is unlawfully importing milk or cream into the District of Columbia or unlawfully selling the same.

Every person who, having been summoned as a witness by authority of said special committee or any subcommittee thereof, or having been required to produce necessary books or papers or documents or vouchers by authority of said special committee or any subcommittee thereof, willfully makes default, or who, having appeared, refuses to answer any question pertinent to the study and investigation heretofore authorized, or who fails to produce such books or papers or documents or vouchers as required by subpenas, shall be held to the penalties provided in section 102 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (U. S. C., title 2, sec. 192), as amended.

That the said committee shall report to the House of Representatives at the earliest practicable date the result of its investication.

That the said committee shall report to the House of Representatives at the earliest practicable date the result of its investigation together with its recommendations for the enactment of desirable or necessary legislation or regulations.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Mapes] for the purpose of debate.

Does the gentleman desire to use some time at this time? Mr. MAPES. I would be glad to yield, but Members on this side would like to have the gentleman make an affirmative statement in behalf of the resolution before they speak.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I can state briefly the purposes of the resolution and will discuss it later, reserving the balance of my time.

The purpose of the resolution is set forth clearly in the first subdivision, beginning on page 1. The object of this investigation is to determine the source and purity of the milk supply of the District of Columbia, to determine what, if any, violations of the law governing the supply of milk to the District of Columbia are being perpetrated, and, if so, what effect it might have upon the health of the residents of the District of Columbia, and whether cream that can be lawfully brought into the District of Columbia for ice cream purposes is being unlawfully diverted into fluid or drinking milk channels. Also whether any conspiracy exists on the part of distributors of milk in Washington to violate the law.

Now, briefly, that is what the resolution is all about, that and nothing more. It is a mere investigation into the question of whether there is any criminal violation of the law and, if so, to what extent and what causes.

I feel sure, that being the sole and only purpose of this resolution, you gentlemen should promptly join in asking for its adoption. I am glad to give any further explanation that the gentleman may desire, if I can.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Will the gentleman explain to the House what is meant by "licensed cream or milk or unlicensed cream or milk"?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Licensed cream or milk means just what it says. A person producing fluid milk for the market in Washington, D. C., does so under a license issued by the health officer of the District of Columbia. If he does not have such a license, then he is prohibited, by law enacted by the Congress, from shipping milk into the District of Columbia.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. As I understand it, then, before any dairy farmer or producer in the United States may ship cream or milk into the District of Columbia he must first secure a license from the District Commissioners?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. That is true, and I think that is true in every city in the United States.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I beg the gentleman's pardon. It may be in some States.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. If it is not, it ought to be.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. They have certain regulations and requirements for quality of both milk and cream in most communities.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I am not able to yield further at this time

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. DOWELL. Is the Health Department back of this bill and asking the passage of this bill?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I have never discussed it with the Health Department. I do not know about that.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. HEALEY. The source of supply for the District of Columbia is limited to the milkshed in contiguous territory, is it not?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Yes. It is not so very contiguous. I would say it runs in an area perhaps 100 miles or more surrounding Washington.

Mr. HEALEY. What territory does that take in?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. It goes into West Virginia, Virginia, and Maryland, and I think into Pennsylvania and perhaps other nearby States.

Mr. HEALEY. And it is in violation of the present law to ship milk from any other milkshed in this country other than that contained in that particular territory?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. That is true, unless they have a license.

Mr. HEALEY. Does the gentleman mean that with a license they may ship it from some other milkshed?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Oh, yes; if they have a license and get their barns inspected and comply with all the other requirements that the other fellows do.

Mr. HEALEY. Who issues the license?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. The Health Officer of the District of Columbia.

I now yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Mapes].

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. HULL].

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Hull].

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I am not in opposition to the purpose of the gentleman from Virginia in desiring to obtain an investigation as to the milk supply of the District of Columbia. I am not, however, in full accord with the scope of his resolution. I believe it is not possible for any committee of the District of Columbia, or of the House, to make any thorough investigation of the milk situation in the District of Columbia without having added to it further powers. I would like to offer to this amendment, were it possible, an amendment which would provide after the word "thereof," in line 8, of page 2, to add the following:

6. Whether any conspiracy exists on the part of the distributors of any dairy products to monopolize or control the supply of such products and the process thereof to the detriment of both producers or consumers, or either of them.

With this amendment added it might be possible for this committee to go into the subject and determine what is happening to the District of Columbia and the milk consumers of this city.

This is not a new subject. Out in Wisconsin we have surplus dairy products. Seventy-four percent of our dairy products in Wisconsin are shipped to market in processed form, in the way of butter, cheese, condensed milk, dried milk, or some other form.

We have also, however, a surplus of both milk and cream, for which we desire to find a market. Because of the fact that the markets of the larger cities of this country are under the monopolistic control of a few large dairy companies, we find ourselves utterly forbidden to ship the health-producing milk and cream into the city of Washington, for instance, and into many other cities of the country.

The restrictions which have been put upon the marketing of milk have come about very largely through the organization of large corporations for the purpose of controlling the milk supply of the large cities. According to statistics obtained recently by the Federal Trade Commission, in some cities as much as 75 percent of the milk supply is under the direct control of possibly a half dozen of these large corporations.

This movement was started in 1923 when these corporations commenced to float their stocks and bonds and used the proceeds to buy up the pasteurization and other dairy plants in the large centers and organize them under monopolistic control. One corporation, for instance, organized in 1923, then had an authorized capital and bonded debt of $11,000,000. In the course of 9 years through the power of their organization and the monopolies which they acquired in the various centers of this country, they increased their assets to $211,000,000. In these same 9 years they have paid their stockholders 63 percent in dividends.

This is only one of many instances of how the Wall Street and the other monopolistic interests have invaded the barnyards and the dairy yards of this country to the detriment of the dairy farmers and at the same time commenced to levy tribute upon the consumers of milk products in the large cities.

The situation which principally is responsible for this investigation resolution at this time has arisen because of the demand of the milk producers of nearby sections to provide the city of Washington with all the cream that is used in the manufacture of ice cream. About a year ago the city health officer appointed a commission, which was organized to ascertain what could be done to add to the regulations of this city, to the end that the competition which these nearby producers suffered might be reduced. A recent statement by the president of the Milk Producers' Association is to the effect that the cooperation of the health department would give them a better opportunity and better prices for their product in this market.

There are many facts available for an investigation of this nature. In my brief time I cannot go much into detail on this question of the milk monopoly. I would, however, like to quote just briefly from a statement made by Mr. Frederick C. Howe, special representative of the Federal Trade Commission, before a committee of the Senate which is also investigating the question of monopoly. In the course of his testimony he said that the Washington area charges the highest price per quart to consumers in 12 urban areas. The Washington price was quoted at 14 cents against an average of 12½ cents. He goes on to relate the number of cities which permit milk to be sold over the counter at greatly reduced prices from those charged by these various monopolies. He stated further:

More ancient than the price survey, but of interest to Washington, was a chart showing that National Dairy controlled 56 percent of this city's milk distribution in 1930.

He goes on to say that about 15 years ago big business entered the dairy industry.

They want to permit only their own milk to reach the city. They try to keep all other milk out. They throw obstacles in the way of anyone else selling milk except on their terms and at their price.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL. I yield.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Does the gentleman know whether the Commissioners in charge of enforcing the milk regulations here can arbitrarily refuse to grant a permit to some nonresident to ship milk in here provided the milk furnished meets the specifications laid down by the Commissioners?

Mr. HULL. That is not only the case here, but it is the case all over the country.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. In Minnesota it is just an arbitrary action?

Mr. HULL. They can refuse, and in some cities have declined unless the farmer himself will pay the cost of a city inspector going out to inspect his dairy and pay him $8 a day, and expenses in addition.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL. I yield.

Mr. HEALEY. Is the gentleman familiar with the milk situation in Washington, D. C.?

Mr. HULL. To a limited degree.

Mr. HEALEY. And does the gentleman charge that there is a monopoly in charge of the distribution of milk in Washington, controlling the distribution and price of milk and cream?

Mr. HULL. It is my charge, according to the statement of Mr. Howe, that at least 56 percent is dominated by one company alone.

Mr. HEALEY. I may say to the gentleman that in my opinion the amendment he desires to add to this resolution is very proper and I intend to support it.

Mr. HULL. I thank the gentleman. Dr. Howe further on said:

They want to permit only their own milk to reach the city. They throw obstacles in the way of anyone else selling milk except on their terms and at their price. In other words, they have succeeded in denying 3,000,000 farmers the right to their own business on the farm.

Mr. Speaker, I have not the time to go into this more deeply at the moment. I have read enough to indicate that there is a monopolistic control of the milk supply of this country, and there should be an investigation by the District of Columbia Committee. That investigation cannot be complete and satisfactory without broadening the power under this resolution, and it is that added power which is the purpose of my amendment

Mr. WALTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALTER. Does the gentleman feel that because of the situation he has described the prices of milk and cream are too high in the District of Columbia?

Mr. HULL. I think they are too high; and, furthermore, I believe if they would let the Wisconsin farmers ship here that good, healthy, well-regulated, and well-inspected product, of which we have a surplus in our State, we could not only get a higher price for the farmers who are ready to ship this milk and cream, but we could supply it to the consumers at a much less price than is reported at this time.

If I had the time, I would go further into the subject of what is happening in the city of Chicago, where they have 92 people, including the large dairy companies and their officials, together with the health officers of the city, under indictment for a similar monopolistic control of the milk supply.

The health regulations governing the conditions under which the milk and cream supplies of our cities and States are produced, processed, and distributed should have one simple purpose—that of protecting the health of consumers of these products. If the regulations accomplish more than that purpose, then they do too much. Occasionally, by accident, and quite often by design, such regulations are drawn and enforced so as to discriminate against the product of other States in the interest of either local producers or distributors. Regulations like that, in place of bringing a needed healthful quantity of milk and cream to the residents of such places, prevent consumption. They should be called antihealth regulations. If it is the purpose of any city or State to debar the healthful product of other States, then that purpose should not be accomplished under the guise of health regulations, but should be stated for what it is.

The health regulations of the District of Columbia serve to keep out of the District of Columbia the clean, healthful cream produced by farmers in the Western States.

The resolution before the House calls for an investigation into, first, the sources and purity of the milk and cream supply of the District of Columbia; second, of any violation of the law of the District of Columbia or regulations of the District Commissioners made pursuant thereto with respect to the importation of milk or cream into the District of Columbia or importation of unlicensed milk or cream into the District of Columbia and the method by which such violations are perpetrated; third, the possible effect upon the health of the community by reason of the unlawful importation of unlicensed milk or cream into the District of Columbia; fourth, whether and to what extent cream for icecream purposes, under section 4 of the 1925 Milk Act of the District of Columbia, is being diverted unlawfully to milk or cream for fluid consumption; and fifth, whether any conspiracy exists on the part of any distributor of any dairy products to violate the provisions of the 1925 District Milk Act or the regulations made pursuant thereto. Such an investigation is not broad enough in its scope. It can go into only one side of the question of public interest involved and not at all into the other. The question which will be answered will go to the sufficiency of enforcement of the law and the regulations. Perhaps violations will be shown, and perhaps not. I submit that another question should be asked and answered. I want to know whether the law and the regulations are being used to protect the health of the inhabitants of the District of Columbia or whether advantage is being taken of the law and the regulations thereunder to foment monoply and to provide a barrier to the interstate trade in which farmers in the Western States might engage to their advantage and to the advantage of local consumers.

There is evidence to support the belief that this may be the case. I have had complaints to this effect laid before me. I have made some investigation of the matter.

I read in a report issued by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics of the Department of Agriculture this statement:

Some areas have constantly raised their standards for the production of fluid milk. In any given case it would probably be impossible to tell in what degree this resulted from attempts to exclude outside milk or from a sincere desire to improve the quality of the product.

In this connection it is stated that regulations have caused milk prices in the District of Columbia to be 1 or 2 cents above prices in other nearby well-regulated cities.

No investigation will be worth while which does not go into the question of monopolistic control of the market.

There is evidence to indicate that it would be possible to tell how far advantage of the District of Columbia rules has been taken to rule out competition from outside producers and to control the competition of distributors within the District.

In the Washington Daily News on Thursday, March 9, I observed an article dealing with this situation, in which the local association head was quoted as saying that they have gone to the Health Department for assistance, so that "we might get a better price for our cream for ice-cream purposes." What does the Health Department in the District have to do with economic matters? I looked further into the question and found that the remarks came from the 1937 report of the association, in which the gentleman also said that "he hoped that it will not be necessary for the Health Department to give any permits outside of the present production area." Possibly pressure has been brought to bear on the Health Department in this matter, so as to keep out western cream.

In the hearings held in 1933 by the Senate District Committee pertaining to the sale and distribution of dairy products in the District of Columbia I find considerable material on the subject of activities of the Health Department and local interests to restrict this market. They are too numerous to quote in full, and are all much of the same character. On page 56 I read a question by the chairman:

Do you think from your observations that there was a sort of a plan—I will not use the word conspiracy—between the part of the association that Mr. McGill is connected with and the Health Department here to increase these improvements, difficulties, for the purpose of affecting disadvantageously some of the milk producers?

The witness, who was a milk producer, answered:

Absolutely. They stated so at the meetings.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK].

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] is always diligent in the interest of the people of his district, and I commend him for it. Being diligent himself, I take it he will not seriously object to some of the rest of us presenting those viewpoints and interests of our people which seem to us to be pertinent in this inquiry. Might I also suggest that the gentleman from Virginia is particularly solicitous about the health and the safety of the people of the District of Columbia. He is to be commended for that attitude, and I share with him that solicitude. I live here with my family, which includes a couple of youngsters, when the Congress is in session. They drink a lot of milk. I wish they would drink more. So I am sure he will agree with me that I have no desire in this controversy or in any controversy to do anything that might in any way adversely affect the health and safety of the people of the District of Columbia by reason of their consumption of dairy products-milk, cream, and ice cream-that may not be fit and proper for human consumption.

My original interest in this matter arose out of the fact that some days ago a capture or seizure of some alleged bootleg cream from my district that was brought into the city of Washington was made by the Health Department, or the Police Department, or both. Following this there was much contention pro and con about the whole milk and cream situation, and suggestions and intimations that the product which had been so seized was not just what it should be for the health of the people. I recognize there was in that seizure, too, the matter of the law involved, and as to that I am not quarreling. Being interested in my district and having received telephone calls from farmers, from dairy interests, and from other people in the State of Indiana asking me to look into this matter and protect their interest to the end that any market which is properly available to them in the District of Columbia should not be taken from them. I became interested in this matter.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALLECK. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. The gentleman does not understand this resolution to be aimed at the proposition of taking away from his farmers the part of the market to which they may be entitled under the law; that is, the ice-cream market? May I set the gentleman at rest on that subject? This resolution has nothing whatsoever to do with any effort to take away from his people the right to sell cream here for ice-cream purposes, which is permitted under the law.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I think it is obvious, when we consider the circumstances under which this whole controversy has arisen and when we read the terms of the resolution here offered today, that it is indicated that one of the purposes at least is to build higher around the District of Columbia the barrier which already exists against the amount of outside cream that may be brought into this area.

Mr. Speaker, I have here a clipping taken from the Washington Daily News of March 9, in which a statement made by Manager B. B. Derrick, of the Maryland-Virginia Milk Producers' Association, in 1937 is quoted. Here is what they quote him as saying, and I have not seen this denied:

Your association has been very active in attempting to have a set of cream regulations adopted that will improve the quality of outside cream being shipped into Washington for manufacturing purposes, which will, of course, enable us to sell more of our own cream in the local market at better prices. These regulations have a good chance of being adopted in 1939.

Mr. Speaker, it is significant that along with this controversy just at this time there is an emphasis being placed all over this country upon the matter of interstate trade barriers. A report under date of March 1939, entitled "Barriers to Internal Trade in Farm Products" has just been issued by the Department of Agriculture. This report is entitled "A Special Report to the Secretary of Agriculture by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics, United States Department of Agriculture."

Mr. Speaker, there is not any question but what this country was originally founded and started on its great economic development and our Constitution adopted, in the belief and in the firm knowledge that trade between the States would have to be carried on without unreasonable or undue restraint. The whole country has been founded upon this premise; yet in the last few years we have seen health regulations and other regulations and laws used to set up internal trade barriers. For instance, we observed a statute of the Legislature of the State of Indiana adopted some years ago which undertook to bring about in large measure an embargo against the importation of beer from other States into the State of Indiana. That provision has just been repealed by our legislature. The trend toward interstate trade barriers will inevitably divide this country into 48 separate countries if something is not done to stop it.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALLECK. I do not care to yield just now.

Mr. Wallace, in a foreword to the report to which I have just referred, says this:

We cannot easily reverse this trend toward interstate trade barriers, but it is encouraging to record that many of the States are now concerned about the situation and are apparently in the mood for remedial action. It is significant that this special report has been sponsored by the marketing committee of the National Association of Commissioners, Secretaries, and Directors of Agriculture.

What I am getting at is this: I have drafted some amendments to this resolution which I believe should be adopted. I have never had much confidence in investigations. This whole business of the milk and cream situation in Washington and the monopoly said to exist was investigated by the Senate District Committee in 1933 and the committee made its report in 1934. I should like to go into some of the things the committee said, but I will not take the time now. In any event, no legislation followed the report. If we are to have an investigation, then I say the investigating committee should not be interested alone in doing what it can or seeing what can be done to raise the barriers higher, but rather should develop a dual investigation to find out whether or not, having due regard to the safety and health of the people of the District of Columbia, certain rules and regulations and licensing provisions may be adopted to the end that cream and milk and dairy products from sources other than the restricted area around the District of Columbia may be brought into the District.

As I understand, the only way an amendment can be made to this resolution is to vote down the previous question, and then the resolution will be open for amendment.

Mr. Speaker, there are five directions in this resolution. I should like to add these two additional ones as No. 6 and No. 7, and I crave the indulgence of the gentleman from Virginia in order that he may tell me at the conclusion of my statement what his attitude is with regard to the inclusion of this amendment in the resolution:

Page 2, line 7, after "thereto", strike out the period and insert:

"(6) The propriety and feasibility of licensing or otherwise permitting under proper regulation in such manner as to fairly protect the safety and health of consumers in the District of Columbia the entry into the District of Columbia of so-called western cream and milk, and cream and milk from any available sources in the United States for fluid, manufacturing, or other use in the District of Columbia and on the Washington market.

"(7) And whether the 1925 Milk Act and all other acts relating to

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 additional minutes to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I fail to see any valid reason for objecting to such amendments as these going into this resolution. If we are to have an investigation, let us have one. The city of Washington, D. C., is the city of the whole Nation. I recognize that the producers of milk and cream located close to the city of Washington have thereby certain natural advantages, certain monopolistic advantages, to which they are adequately and justly entitled. However, I am informed you do not get enough milk and cream from this area to supply the needs of the District. If this be true, Mr. Speaker, then why, under proper supervision, under proper regulation, under proper licensing, should not the milk and cream and dairy products of Indiana, of Wisconsin, or of any other State move into this area?

I wish now to quote just a little further from this report because I think this is significant. I believe the report holds up the District of Columbia as a horrible example of the erection of interstate trade barriers. This is what the committee said in its report, after having considered the matter carefully:

Some areas have constantly raised their standards for the production of fluid milk. In any given case it would probably be impossible to tell in what degree this resulted from attempts to exclude outside milk or from a sincere desire to improve the quality of the product. But, supposing the latter motive to be dominant, there is serious question from the social point of view as to how high these standards should be permitted to go. It is at least arguable that health protection beyond a certain degree may cost more than it is worth. Sanitary experts are loath to concede that there can be too much regulation in the interest of protecting health. Yet a common-sense view may hold otherwise on occasions. When it is found, for example, that refinements of regulatory procedure cause milk to sell regularly at 1 and 2 cents a quart more than in other nearby well-regulated cities (as is the case in the District of Columbia) the ordinary consumer may wonder if this additional item of protection is fully justified in terms of public health. Low-income families who can afford little and frequently no milk for their children might bear witness to the adverse public-health effects of an inspection program that helps to hold milk out of their reach.

Mr. Speaker, the persons who have written this report have called a meeting to be held in the city of Chicago to discuss the entire problem of interstate trade barriers. I hold in my hand a press release from the Department of Agriculture, under the date of March 9, in which this is stated:

The Bureau of Agricultural Economics was informed today that a national conference on interstate trade barriers has been called by the Council of State Governments to be held at Chicago April 5, 6, and 7, in an effort to halt the erection of tariff barriers among the several States. The council is composed of State Governors, commissioners, and legislators, who resolved in a general assembly at Washington in January that interstate trade barriers under whatever guise are detrimental to the economic welfare of the country. Forty-six of the forty-eight States were represented at the assembly here.

Now, getting back to the amendments that I offer to this investigation, Washington is a city of the whole country and if there is anything in the law or the regulations that sets up unreasonable interstate trade barriers that are not justified, we are the government of the District of Columbia and we ought to be finding out about it. We should set an example to all the States of the Union and the country itself. I do not know whether there are any trade barriers here or not. I do not know whether milk costs too much or not. I am intensely interested in seeing to it that the production of dairy products should be stabilized. That is essential. I am interested in seeing to it that the safety and health, not only of the people of the District, but of all States and all communities, are amply protected by the law and by the regulations.

I am also intensely interested in the preservation of free trade between the States and between the States and the District of Columbia, because I believe this is absolutely necessary, if this great country of ours is to continue its economic development in the future.

I think these amendments should be adopted. I trust the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Smith] will not object to them. I do not believe they ask for anything that is not proper, and in this light I ask you Members of the House, when the vote comes on the previous question, that that motion be voted down in order that these amendments may be offered and adopted. [Applause.]

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman from Michigan desire to yield some time?

Mr. MAPES. I have only one further speaker on this side.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH].

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, in the event the resolution which is presented today by our colleague the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Smith] passes and then funds are provided for the investigation, it will be the duty of the Committee on the District of Columbia of the House to conduct the investigation. Whether the resolution passes as presented or whether it is enacted the way that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Halleck] would desire, or whether amendments offered by other Members of this body prevail, I am not arguing as to that; but in the event the District of Columbia Committee is charged with conducting an investigation, as chairman of that committee, and speaking for its membership, with men upon that committee coming from all parts of the country, I can assure the Members of the House that the investigation will be thorough and will be conducted fairly.

In the event the District of Columbia Committee is charged with this responsibility, in the regular order and with appropriateness, I would perhaps designate the Subcommittee on Public Health, Hospitals, and Charities to make the investigation. Of course, I would discuss the matter with the committee as a whole on such an important matter.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield.

Mr. HEALEY. And does not the gentleman think that the investigation should also cover the question as to whether or not a conspiracy exists to control the distribution and the price of milk and cream in the District of Columbia? Does not the gentleman believe that should be within the purview of the resolution?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I am very pleased to answer the gentleman, and to say that, personally, I believe if an investigation is ordered it should be one which would go to the roots of this problem and view it from all angles. I can say that, as an individual who has the responsibility of representing a congressional district in West Virginia that embraces a part of this so-called milkshed from which the supply is distributed and sold to District of Columbia residents and to those who purchase milk in this city, that I trust the resolution will be brought to the attention of this House for final vote in a way that it can be supported by the gentleman from Wisconsin, the gentleman from Indiana, and others. It is not an easy task for the District of Columbia Committee to undertake; but if the resolution does pass, I assure the House that the investigation will be thorough and will be conducted in a fair manner. [Applause.]

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, since I stated there was only one other speaker on this side I have had a request from another Member for time, and I would like to inquire how much time there is remaining.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Williams of Missouri).

The gentleman from Michigan has 8 minutes remaining.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I yield one-half of that time or 4 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Craw-FORD].

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I do not at all blame the gentleman from Virginia for introducing a resolution in behalf of the producers of milk and cream in this area, but I think one of the most vicious attacks on small business that can be made at any time, insofar as the nature of the attack is concerned, is covered in lines 8 to 15 on page 2 of this resolution.

Now, consider yourself a small dealer setting up a business in the District of Columbia under a license and attempting to buck a strongly entrenched and large operator, and knowing full well you have got to bring all your records, which means primarily all of your time, to this committee while your little affairs are under investigation.

I grew up on a farm and I know what it is to have milk and butter on the table, and I had 20 years of experience in the food industry in this country, dealing with those who are engaged in acquiring dominating control over the distribution of food commodities.

The evidence submitted to a Senate committee last week by Dr. Howe, of the Triple A, was not wild testimony, nor was it a dream. I could support it with some other facts, and I say this in spite of the fact that we see published in some big metropolitan dailies since he gave his testimony, that it is the old, old story, which can again be answered. I agree with the presentation of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Halleck]. The consumption of milk and butter is being decreased and is held down by reason of the rules and regulations which have no effect insofar as protecting the health of the country is concerned, but which are designed specifically to further bring within the hands of the two great milk concerns of the country a greater control over the distribution of milk and milk products.

I have been up against their machine; I know how they operate, and I can give you the names of scores of people who have been pushed out of the picture by their squeezing tactics. While I do not charge the gentleman whose name appears on this resolution with being a party to a movement of that kind, I do contend that the resolution is vicious, against the producers of milk and cream throughout the country as a whole, the Western States in particular, and against those operating in this district who would make it more possible for the poor people of this district to have milk and cream and butter on their tables, for their children to drink, to say nothing of adults. I shall vote against the resolution unless it is materially amended.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Is it not a fact that the milk monopoly has a stronger hold in the District of Columbia than in most of the States throughout the Union?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I have lived in some 11 cities in the United States, and this is the toughest proposition here that I have ever been up against. I think the facts will support that statement.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. SASSCER].

Mr. SASSCER. Mr. Speaker, in this my initial appearance on the floor of the House I think it is possibly appropriate that the topic under discussion should be milk, as milk is the initial food with which we start out. I promise today to take only a few moments, and not to rise on the floor of the House in the future unless the subject matter is of a nature that I think is important.

In order that we may clearly get the background of the discussion here today, we should look back just a day or two, and there we find that a truckload of unlicensed cream. was seized en route to the District of Columbia for not having the necessary permit as required in the health regulations, as set up, under the milk regulations governing the milk shipped into the District of Columbia from the milk shed of the surrounding sections. I shall not go into any discussion of the merits of the milk supply in the District of Columbia other than to say that figures show that as to purity and quality it ranks among the very best in the country. In order to comply with the regulations now governing the shipment of milk into the District of Columbia, the producers of the District of Columbia milkshed, some 1,300 in number, spent approximately $7,000,000 meeting the requirements of the present act relating to governing the shipment of milk here, so as to insure an adequate supply of pure milk of high quality.

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SASSCER. Yes; with pleasure.

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. It is not true that the milk shippers of Michigan, Wisconsin, Indiana, and other Midwestern States have done the same thing in meeting the requirements of the District of Columbia Health Board? They have spent thousands and thousands of dollars out there to meet those requirements.

Mr. SASSCER. In answer to the gentleman from Michigan, I say that no doubt the producers of those States have spent the money necessary to meet the requirements of the areas into which they ship, but we here in the District of Columbia have no way of checking what is going on, and what is being done in those particular sections. We do know that inspection of milk coming from the milkshed in the environments of the District of Columbia insures a product of high quality, and that it is pure and passes the necessary restrictions. We also know that within the past week a truckload of bootleg cream from somewhere in the United States was seized coming into Washington, with no permit, with no inspection, to be used in the District of Columbia. We do not know for what purpose it was to be used, possibly to go into the making of ice cream, or unlawfully to be thinned out with skim milk and used for liquid consumption. All this the resolution offered by my colleague from neighboring Virginia does is to ask an investigation as to the sources and purity of the milk and cream supply of the District of Columbia, as to the importation of unlicensed milk and cream and to determine whether the regulations of the Milk Act of the District of Columbia of 1925 are being complied with, and to protect the people of the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Maryland has expired.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GRISWOLD].

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, our Constitution provides there shall be no duties, imposts, or excises between States, except what is necessary for inspection laws. Under that little clause different sections and different States have chosen to build a fence around themselves and segregate themselves from the rest of the country. That has been done for one purpose, and one purpose only-to benefit the particular people that have been so segregated. In the District of Columbia, which is supposed to be a part of the United States, and in which we are all supposed to trade on a fairly equal basis, a fence has been built up, and it does not make any difference what kind of inspection we have, we cannot get into the District of Columbia.

There is another and more important thing in connection with this and that is the children of the District of Columbia. Should we make the price of milk so high that they cannot afford to drink milk? How much does milk mean to the average child, the average family? Are you, at their expense, going to build up this wall to benefit some particular class of producers, when out in my State you can buy inspected milk at 3 cents a quart? If you will open the door, I do not care how high the health requirements are, we can put some milk in here that will feed the children of the District of Columbia, and they can have what milk they want to drink, because the price will not be quite so high.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRISWOLD. I yield. Mr. CRAWFORD. Is it not also true that Mayor LaGuardia, of New York, has taken the bull by the horns and set up milk stations, where people can buy milk at 6 cents a quart, and the same thing should be done in the District of Columbia? [Applause.]

Mr. GRISWOLD. Absolutely. I have been in the milk business myself, and I know something about it. Every time you raise the price of milk you decrease the consumption.

Mr. HAWKS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRISWOLD. I yield.

Mr. HAWKS. Is this not the same situation they faced in Chicago in breaking down the milk racket which they had there, where every producer outside of a limited area was barred from shipping milk into the city?

Mr. GRISWOLD. Absolutely.

Mr. HAWKS. And what did they find out when they investigated it? It was full of graft and rotten to the core, was it not?

Mr. GRISWOLD. Yes. This, instead of being a health measure, is building up at the expense of the health of the District of Columbia a certain group.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRISWOLD. I yield.

Mr. HEALEY. The only way we can include in this resolution the power to determine whether a monopoly exists in the District of Columbia is by voting down the previous question now in order to permit the resolution to be amended for that purpose.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Absolutely.

Mr. HEALEY. And does the gentleman not think the investigation ought to take into consideration that angle, too, as well as the others that are mentioned in the resolution?

Mr. GRISWOLD. Absolutely. I would like to have the investigation wide open, so that we can really include the health of the people of the District of Columbia as well as the milk market.

Mr. McKEOUGH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. GRISWOLD. I yield.

Mr. McKEOUGH. Is it not true there are shipments of milk from Wisconsin into the Chicago area?

Mr. GRISWOLD. I will answer the gentleman's question in this way: Yes; we can ship into Chicago from a certain section from the State of Wisconsin, provided it is inspected by their own inspectors.

Mr. McKEOUGH. Is the gentleman familiar with the fact that the regulations that prevail in that area are higher than the standard maintained in the District of Columbia?

Mr. GRISWOLD. Of course, when you talk about one city or another, each one claims it has a particular way of doing that is better than in any other city. So they are protecting their own people, and they would not trust any other board of health or any other doctor or any other body to pass on the requirements. They must pass on them themselves.

Mr. McKEOUGH. Does not the gentleman think that in Chicago we have good milk coming from Wisconsin?

Mr. GRISWOLD. You do have, certainly. [Applause.] [Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Healey].

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, I have asked for this time in order that the House may be familiar with the parliamentary situation that exists with relation to amending this resolution; in order that it may also include a provision for an investigation to determine whether or not a monopoly exists in the distribution and sale of milk in this city; and further, whether the alleged monopoly exercises control of the price of milk and cream in the city.

I understand the price of milk is 14 cents a quart here, which I am informed, from reliable sources, is much higher than it is in most other cities in this country. From the same source I am informed that cream is also sold at a much higher price than it is in any other large city in this country. If it is a fact that these conditions do exist, certainly when this committee is considering the other questions, in my judgment it also ought to be empowered by this resolution to investigate the matter of monopoly and price control.

I am informed that this shipment of cream which was seized came here from the State of Indiana. Whether or not it was shipped in violation of law I do not know, but I am also informed that after it was seized and an analysis was made by the District health authorities, and the test that was made showed a higher grade than that required by the present regulations of the District of Columbia.

I agree with the gentleman from Indiana that this market ought to be open to other milksheds than the narrow, restricted area which is now supplying all of the milk for this large city of over 600,000 people. Certainly we are building up trade barriers when such a condition exists.

So I hope the committee will vote down the previous question in order to permit an amendment to be made providing that the scope of the investigation may be broadened to include the question of whether or not a monopoly does in fact exist in the distribution and sale of milk in the District of Columbia. [Applause.]

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I am rather surprised at some of the gentlemen here on my left who certainly should be interested in the proper conduct of the dairy business. I am surprised that they should arise on this floor today for the purpose of opposing an investigation and an elimination of the known violation of the law with respect to the importation of milk into this district. I have listened to all this talk about a monopoly investigation. We all know that a special joint committee for the investigation of monopolies is already functioning, a committee which has had a large amount of money appropriated to it by the Government. This committee is now working on the subject. If you have followed its hearings you will remember that only last week they began a comprehensive investigation of milk monopolies. Perhaps that was what put these gentlemen onto the idea.

Now, all this idea about voting down the previous question and amending this bill to take care of monopolies is just drawing a red herring across this trail. I have no objection to the investigation of monopolies, and I will not voice any objection if these gentlemen bring it about in the proper way and at the proper time but I do not want this House to be diverted this morning, as the attempt is being made, from the sole question of whether or not these people are violating the law, and if they are violating the law, ought they not be stopped? But that is all there is to this question; it is not a question of anything else at all, it is not a question about investigating a monopoly. That is just drawing a red herring across the trail.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? LXXXIV—169 Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I must decline to yield, because I have already yielded most of my time to others and I have many questions to answer.

This resolution has nothing to do with the investigation of monopoly. It is merely an investigation here in the District of Columbia about violations of the law. These violations have been going on for some time, if the gentleman wants to know, but I am not going to name any names and I do not want to name any States, and I do not want to draw any invidious comparisons here this morning, but you may draw some conclusions from the gentlemen who have risen in defense of this illegal business here today.

There is a well-known milkshed surrounding every city in the United States. There has to be if the city is to have a pure milk supply. Anybody who is within the area where the inspectors from this district can conveniently visit their places—and I know they go as much as 100 miles from Washington—any establishment that those inspectors can conveniently inspect, their dairy barns, and so forth, to know that they can give a pure supply of milk; any such person can get a license to ship milk into the District of Columbia. It is not confined to any little area; it is limited only by the practical question of how far an inspector can go from the city of Washington and give proper supervision to the barns.

Mr. HAWKS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Briefly.

Mr. HAWKS. Then why cannot the District accept the regulations and the inspection of Wisconsin, Michigan, Illinois, Indiana, States whose regulations and inspections are just as good as, if not better than, what you have here in Washington?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. As I say, I do not want to draw any invidious comparisons here today. The facts are that the people of Washington are getting the very highest quality of milk that can be gotten in the United States, and the reason for this is because the inspectors can go personally to these barns every day and see that conditions are right, or if they are wrong to point out what is wrong, to say to the farmer whose cows are so infected that they have mastitis, or that they have Bang's disease and must be eliminated. We get good milk here not only because of the regulations but because we have the inspection service.

The sole question here this morning is whether or not you are going to stand for violations of the law. If the law is wrong and these gentlemen from these Western States think that they ought to ship milk into Washington let them come in here and amend the law. This is not a matter of legislation, I am not offering a bill; I am offering a resolution to investigate criminal violation of the law with respect to the shipment of milk into the District of Columbia.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Briefly.

Mr. HEALEY. Why should the gentleman object to the investigation's taking in the question of whether or not there does exist a monopoly in the distribution of milk here by arrangement, by interpretation of the law, or otherwise?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Because the gentleman knows perfectly well that if we should go into the investigation of the great big subject of monopoly which is already being investigated by a committee of the Senate and House that we would be diverted from this investigation and its purpose.

The sole purpose of this investigation is to stop violations of the law. Now if you want to ignore these violations of the law, if you want them to bring this unlicensed milk here in open violation of the law, in open violation of the law which you have made, in open violation of the regulations which you have required be placed upon the shipment of milk into this area in order that you may have a safe milk supply, that is all right; that is your privilege; but the only thing this resolution is for is the one purpose I have outlined. I hope the House will not permit itself to be diverted from the real purpose of the resolution.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Briefly.

Mr. HALLECK. Of course the directions of the resolution would seem to indicate-

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I did not yield for a speech. I decline to yield further.

Mr. Speaker, I am not talking about the quality of the milk produced in the districts represented by the gentlemen who oppose this resolution. They talk about the terrifically high price of milk in the District of Columbia. Let me come directly to the point and quote some figures, comparative figures as to quality and price; but before I do that I want to call your attention to an incident that happened to me just a couple of days ago.

A couple of days ago I ordered a glass of milk down here in the restaurant, which they brought me. I am not going to mention any names, but when I poured it out a skim of clotted, clabber-like substance rose to the top of the glass. If you know anything about milk you will realize what was the matter. If you want heavy cream brought in here from some distant point, if you want this cream mixed with a lot of skimmed milk that has been discarded by other dairies in Washington, if you want to drink it yourself, if you want the people of Washington to drink it, if you want your wives and children to drink it, that is all right and that is your privilege. However, if this is what is going on in Washington, and I believe it is, then I want the committee to investigate the matter and I do not want any red herring drawn across the trail in the form of talk about monopoly. I want to investigate the subject and find out what there is to it.

Mr. HOOK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOOK. What is the matter with the corporation counsel and the law-enforcement agencies of the District? Why do we have to make an investigation of the law?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I think that is a very proper question. I may say to the gentleman-I have not time to go into the matter fully at this time—but I will say that detectives from the police department were on this one case for a month to my certain knowledge, in order to get sufficient evidence to make one arrest. How many other violations occurred in the meantime we have no way of knowing.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Smith of Virginia) there were-ayes 33, noes 83.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Obviously there is not a quorum present.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were-yeas 113, nays 188, not voting 131, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The doors were opened.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules of procedure, the recognition passes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Mapes], if he desires to claim it.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has 1 hour under the rule. Mr. MAPES. May I yield to the gentleman from Indiana for the purpose of offering an amendment, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman may do so, but he loses control of the floor.

Mr. MAPES. That would give the time to the gentleman from Indiana?

The SPEAKER. It would.

Mr. MAPES. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana for that purpose, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Hal-LECK1 is recognized.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Under those circumstances, what time, if any, is allotted to the opposition to the amendment? The SPEAKER. Such time as the gentleman from Indiana may see fit to yield. Mr. SMITH of Virginia. A further parliamentary inquiry,

Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. If it were left to the gentleman from Indiana, we would not get much time. Does not the other side of the proposition have an equal amount of time?

The SPEAKER. Under the rules and precedents, the gentleman from Indiana is entitled to the full hour, to yield as he may see fit.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. And no debate is permissible by Members on this side of the aisle?

The SPEAKER. Not under the rules, as a matter of right. Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McCORMACK. If the gentleman from Indiana desires to yield a portion of his time to the gentleman from Virginia, can that be done by unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. It would not require unanimous consent. The gentleman from Indiana can yield to Members on the majority side if he sees fit to do so.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. HALLECK. I shall, of course, yield to the gentleman from Virginia whatever time he wishes, but may I then also yield to another gentleman who may wish to offer an amendment to this resolution?

The SPEAKER. Only one amendment to the resolution can be pending at a time.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the resolution, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Halleck: Page 2, line 7, after "thereto", strike out the period and insert:

"(6) the propriety and feasibility of licensing or otherwise permitting under proper regulation in such manner as to fairly protect the safety and health of consumers in the District of Columbia the entry into the District of Columbia of so-called western cream and milk, and cream and milk from any available sources in the United States for fluid, manufacturing, or other use in the District of Columbia and on the Washington market;

"(7) and whether the 1925 Milk Act, and all other acts relating to the importation, distribution, and inspection of milk and dairy products require modification, alteration, or improvement in order to insure an adequate supply of milk and dairy products for the residents of the District of Columbia at reasonable and fair prices."

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order against the amendment that it is not germane to the resolution before the House.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Virginia desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Briefly, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, the resolution before the House has for its sole purpose the investigation of violations of the law with respect to the importation of milk into the District of Columbia. As I understand from listening to the reading of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana, the gentleman desires to go into the question of a change in the basic existing law on the subject of importation of milk into the District, which is an entirely different subject. As the Chair will notice, the resolution of investigation is confined to a narrow scope, namely, its sole purpose is investiga-tion of law violations. The gentleman from Indiana desires to enter upon an investigation of whether the law as now existing is a good law or a bad law, or whether Congress ought to do something about it. It seems to me the amendment is clearly not germane to the resolution.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. DOWELL. What if it should be found as a result of this investigation that a conspiracy exists with regard to the price of milk in the District? Does not the gentleman believe that would constitute a violation of law and therefore should be a part of this investigation?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Perhaps the gentleman has not read the resolution, which does provide for investigation of whether or not a conspiracy to violate the law does exist.

Mr. DOWELL. Yes; and that question would come in on the price of milk.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I do not see that it has anything to do with it. Certainly the resolution has nothing to do with changing existing law.

Mr. MAPES rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Michigan desire to be heard?

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, the whole purpose of the resolution is to investigate whether or not there is any violation of the law in the importation and distribution of milk in the District of Columbia, and whether or not impure milk and cream or milk and cream that are detrimental to health are being imported into and distributed within the District

The amendment of the gentleman from Indiana simply goes one step further than the original resolution. It proposes to authorize the committee to inquire into the "propriety and feasibility of licensing or otherwise permitting under proper regulation in such manner as to fairly protect the safety and health of consumers in the District of Columbia" the distribution of milk. It seems to me that it is clearly germane to the general purpose of the resolution.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts. Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I may also call attention to the fact that it is set forth in the resolution that the committee is to be authorized and directed to make a full and complete investigation of the sources and purity of the milk and cream supply of the District of Columbia. That phrase is all-embracing and naturally would cover the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. MAPES. It seems to me the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana is clearly in line with the general purposes of the resolution and germane to it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is prepared to rule.

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK] offers an amendment to the pending bill, which has been read by the Clerk and to which the Chair has given consideration.

It seems that the general purpose of the resolution now pending before the House is to authorize the House Committee on the District of Columbia, or a duly authorized subcommittee thereof, to make a complete investigation of, first, the sources and purity of the milk and cream supply of the District of Columbia, and then under five different subdivisions the resolution authorizes the committee or subcommittee to make investigations of other matters affecting the supply of milk and cream within the District of Columbia.

On page 3 of the resolution, beginning at line 21, is the following language:

That the said committee shall report to the House of Representatives at the earliest practicable date the result of its investigation, together with its recommendations for the enactment of desirable or necessary legislation or regulations.

So that as the matter is presented to the Chair, the committee is authorized to make investigations into a number of matters relating to the supply of milk and cream in the District of Columbia, involving possibly all phases of that subject. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment extending, as the Chair reads the amendment, the jurisdiction and the authority of the committee or subcommittee to investigate another phase of the importation of milk and cream.

There is a very well considered line of opinions and precedents holding that where a number of subjects are embraced in a bill, it is germane to add another subject of the same class thereto, and inasmuch as the committee is authorized to make recommendations affecting legislation to cure or change the situation with reference to the supply of milk or cream, the Chair is of the opinion that the amendment is in order and is germane to the resolution and overrules the point of order.

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Halleck] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, first of all, I want to yield 30 minutes, or such time as he may want, to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Smith].

I do not care now to say anything at any great length about these amendments. They are simply the amendments that were read by me during the course of the debate leading up to the vote on the previous motion. They were discussed at that time. They are the amendments that were in contemplation at the time the previous vote was taken.

I would like to say just this one thing further: All of the original purposes of this investigation, included in the resolution as originally presented, are still included in the resolution, and whatever good may come of the investigation by the committee in compliance with those directions, will still be obtained. My amendments are offered solely for the purpose of broadening the extent of the inquiry. If the inquiry or investigation is to be had, then let us look at the problem as it affects the District of Columbia from both sides.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALLECK. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Is it the purpose of the gentleman again to review briefly what he told us a while ago? The reason I make this suggestion is because there are many Members here now who were not present when the gentleman made his very elucidating speech a while ago. If the gentleman will permit the suggestion, I think he would be doing a good service if he would outline now just what his amendment does.

Mr. HALLECK. In answer to the gentleman I may suggest that I believe the membership is thoroughly apprised of the issue that is involved and I do not see anything which would lead me to believe that any extensive discussion at this time is necessary. The House has indicated its intention with respect to this amendment. I believe the House has indicated it wants this investigation to be handled from both sides, and although I appreciate the suggestion and, maybe, it is well taken, I do not believe at this time I care to say anything further except that I shall reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I rise to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Halleck] has control of the time on his side.

Does the gentleman from Indiana yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. HALLECK. Yes; I yield to the gentleman for a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask, if it is in order, with the consent of the gentleman from Indiana, to offer an amendment to his amendment.

The SPEAKER. It would be in order if the gentleman from Indiana desires to yield the floor.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, may I ask then if an amendment can be offered after his amendment is voted on?

The SPEAKER. If the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana should be defeated, then the gentleman, if recognized, would have a parliamentary right to propose another amendment to the resolution, provided in the meantime the previous question has not been ordered.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HALLECK. I do not want to be in the position of defeating or shutting out an amendment sought to be offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Hull], but if I were to yield to him to offer an amendment to the amendment, would that supersede or eliminate the amendment that I have offered?

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot anticipate the subject matter of the proposed amendment.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Indiana yield to me for a further parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. HALLECK. Yes.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Indiana should yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin to offer an amendment, the gentleman from Indiana yields control of the floor under the rule.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already stated that.

Mr. TABER. And the right to move the previous question would vest in the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The SPEAKER. That is a correct interpretation of the rule.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana has the floor.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Michigan for a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, as I understand the situation, it is this: So far as the gentleman from Indiana is concerned in dealing with this resolution he stands exactly in the same position that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] stood before the previous question was voted down.

The SPEAKER. In a similar position.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Indiana yield to me for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. HALLECK. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. May I inquire, Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Indiana has the right to accept the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman cannot accept the amendment until it is offered from the Clerk's desk; and when the gentleman yields for the purpose of having the amendment offered, he loses control of the floor.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HALLECK. Am I in such position at this time, without yielding the floor, that I could yield 10 minutes to a Member to speak on the amendment now pending?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can yield time for debate.
Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. HALLECK. Yes.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, if the proposed amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Hull] does not conflict with the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Halleck], but merely adds to the scope of the investigation, is it the opinion of the Chair that that would supplant the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana if it is adopted?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not in position to answer that inquiry because the Chair is absolutely ignorant of the contents of the proposed amendment to the amendment.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Dirksen] for debate.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, before everybody has the parliamentary jitters I think the issue can be resolved and this tremendous matter disposed of in short order. By way of background, let me say that some weeks ago a shipment of cream and milk came from the State of Indiana to the District of Columbia, ostensibly under the 1925 Milk Act, which is a very involved act, dealing with health and distribution, sources of supply, and so forth. That milk was seized. There was a great hue and cry as to whether it contained the proper amount of butterfat and whether it was good for the people of the District of Columbia. The odd part of it is that after it had been examined by the health officer in the District of Columbia I am informed that the cream and butterfat content was higher than that of some of the products which are offered for sale and distribution in the District at the present time. Whether that incident is the inspiration for the resolution before us today I do not know, but the fact is that there is pending now a resolution offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] to authorize the Committee on the District of Columbia of the House of Representatives to investigate into alleged violations of the law. If Members will examine the resolution carefully, they will find that it covers the source of supply from the outside, it covers the purity of the content that comes in, it covers the question of importation of milk and cream, it covers the question of the method of importation, it covers the question of whether it might be injurious to the health of the District of Columbia citizens if certain products are imported from without.

Finally, it deals with the question of diverting milk that comes in under the 1925 Milk Act, ostensibly for ice-cream purposes, to the use of fluid milk and cream, and, finally, whether or not a conspiracy exists to violate certain sections of the 1925 Milk Act. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK] has offered two additional provisions to this resolution simply enlarging the authority of the Committee on the District of Columbia. The purport of the amendment on the desk at the present time is nothing more than to go into an examination of whether or not there is an adequate supply of milk coming in, whether prices are fair and reasonable, and whether there are any monopolistic practices in the milkshed surrounding the District of Columbia. There is nothing partisan about that, and it occurs to me that everybody who pays 14 cents a quart for milk here, when it can be purchased back home for 10, 11, and 12 cents a quart, would be interested in enlarging the authority of the Committee on the District of Columbia to find out whether too much money is being paid for milk in the District of Columbia.

My personal belief is that it has become something of a racket in Washington, if you please, and you are not going to get at it within the terms of the resolution as introduced by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH]. The gentleman stated frankly, in his closing argument, that that was not the purpose of his resolution. The general objective was only to investigate violations under the Milk Act of 1925, apparently as inspired by the instance of cream and milk coming in from the State of Indiana. I do not care where you live, whether it is in the District of Columbia or Pennsylvania or Illinois or Indiana or any other place, you have an interest in the welfare of the people here, whether they are suffering from a monopoly and whether milk is costing too much. If it is, that kind of a racket ought to be broken up. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] seeks to answer that by saying that the so-called temporary monopoly committee is going to investigate that matter. That is a committee that is addressing its attention to great, important monopolistic practices everywhere in the United States. It is too much to expect that they will take cognizance of a situation that exists in the United States Capital. If it is to be done at all it must be done by someone who is familiar with it. It must be done by those who are on the ground, and the Committee on the District of Columbia can do that job very well.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman from Illinois 2 additional minutes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Here is the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, Mr. JENNINGS RANDOLPH, of West Virginia, who has an abiding interest in the matter. Here is the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Nichols] who has an abiding interest in the matter. I happen to be one of the humble members on the District of Columbia Committee, and I have often thought that this matter ought to be explored to the full, and if there is a monopoly existing here, then let us tear the cover off the ball; let us name names and find out who they are and expose them to the pitiless sunlight of publicity. That is all that is involved here. So you can dispel all jitters about the parliamentary situation. You can vote for the amendment that is pending on the desk. It is perfectly safe to do so. It simply enlarges the authority of the Committee on the District of Columbia, and I assure you that if I serve on that subcommittee and I find out there is something rotten in the District of Columbia with respect to a milk monopoly, the report that will come to this floor is not going to be couched in such elegancies of the English language as to obscure its meaning. We will go to the bottom of the matter and bring those people before the committee.

Mr. GORE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. GORE. The gentleman does not oppose any phase of the resolution?

Mr. DIRKSEN. No, indeed. I simply say it is a very innocuous resolution. It has about as much teeth as a 2-dayold baby. You cannot do anything under that resolution. Extend the authority so that we will not have to waste the time of another subcommittee in the District of Columbia in order to get something done about this milk racket. That is the whole situation in a nutshell. [Applause.]

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire, for purposes of debate, to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to prolong this debate to any great extent. I first want to express my deep appreciation to the distinguished gentleman from Indiana for his generosity in yielding to the majority side of the House a little time for debate, when he, for the first time, gets control of the floor.

I have been interested, however, particularly in what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Dirksen] has had to say on this subject. I spoke on the subject when the resolution was before the House in general debate. I am afraid many of you were not present. I am sorry that time does not permit me to go over those things again. However, the gentleman from Illinois has made some statements on the floor which do not conform entirely to the facts as they exist and as they have been shown. I do not want my Democratic col-leagues on this side of the aisle to be voting with the Republicans on the other side of the aisle under any misapprehension about the facts. Of course, I do not expect to impress anybody over there with anything that I may say on the subject, but I do want my colleagues on this side to know what they are voting about.

The sole and only purpose of this resolution is to investigate a criminal racket that is going on in the District of Columbia by reason of the importation into this city of cream, in violation of the law and in violation of the regulations. It has been well established and proved, and all the words and all the hullabaloo and all the boasts about what he is going to do on the District Committee by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] cannot change those

It so happens that this particular load of cream came from the State of Indiana. I do not know whether any of it came from the State of Illinois or not. It may be that is the reason the gentleman from Illinois is so perturbed about this subject. But the fact is it was brought here in violation of the law. If you do not want that kind of law, it is your privilege to change it at any time, but as long as you have the law, it ought to be enforced so that you know when you go down to the House restaurant and buy a glass of milk you are going to get a glass of real, pure milk, and not the kind of a glass of milk I got down there last Friday and had to send back to the kitchen. The gentleman from Illinois undertook to say there was a racket here in Washington in the milk business. The gentleman from Illinois has just got the thing exactly backward. The racket is not here. The racket is out there where the gentleman comes from [laughter], and that racket is being carried on in such an extensive manner that it took the police department of the city of Washington 1 month to get enough evidence to make just one arrest.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. SMITH of Virginia. In just a few minutes, if you will excuse me.

Now, the gentleman from Illinois says this racket he talks about in Washington is causing you to pay a great price for milk. I have some facts. All the gentleman from Illinois had was some words. I have some facts, and I want to read you something about comparative prices that you are paying for milk in Washington and the prices paid in some other cities.

In Boston the price of grade A milk is 16 cents. In New York it is 16% cents; in Philadelphia, 15 cents; Richmond, Va., in my own State, 15 cents; in San Francisco it is 15 cents; in St. Louis it is 16 cents; in Miami it is 17 cents; and in Washington it is 14 cents—less than it is in any of those other great cities. Now, that is for grade A milk. Grade A milk is the best quality. No milk is sold on the Washington market except grade A milk.

The gentleman from Illinois said a lot of things about grade B milk. I expect they sell a lot of grade B milk and grade B cream in his district. Grade B is distinct from grade A. Grade B just means that it is not as good a product; and I say I think the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from Indiana ought not to be permitted to bring that grade B product into the city of Washington to be served to you in the House restaurant or in the other restaurants of this city at a high price—to sell you an inferior product when you are paying your money for a grade A product and when the law which you enacted requires that you shall be served with a grade A product.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Not at this time. Now, this talk about monopoly. The gentleman from Illinois, I imagine, missed some of my remarks when I spoke a while back; and I am sorry that he did, because I could have told him some things that perhaps he is not aware of.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois says that I said the monopoly investigation was going to conduct an investi-gation into the monopoly of milk. I did not say any such thing. I said that the monopoly investigating committee is now-is now-conducting an investigation and that they had a hearing on this very subject last week. Instead of waiting until the House does something about it, they are already proceeding to do it.

The question of a milk monopoly is not a local question in Washington; it is a national question and a question that needs investigation. I feel that there are great aggregations of milk distributors who are getting too much profit out of the farmer and who are getting too much profit out of the consumer. They ought to be investigated. I am sure they will be investigated. This condition ought to be corrected, but this Committee on the District of Columbia, dealing with a purely local proposition, ought not to be diverted from that proposition to go into a Nation-wide investigation of something that Congress has already set up a separate joint committee to investigate.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. NICHOLS. Will the gentleman point out in what respect, if he can, he objects to the amendment? I do not want to take any part in this debate, but if the gentleman is against the amendment will he tell us why?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I am against the gentleman's amendment because this resolution is drawn for the one purpose of investigating racketeering in the unlawful importation of milk into the District of Columbia and also to determine the standard of the milk coming into Washington. There is no other question involved.

Now, there is one other question. The gentleman from Illinois spoke-I am afraid his attention is again diverted from my remarks, but I do not want to bother him-spoke about this cream which came from another section and stated that its quality and butterfat content were just as high as that which is sold in the District of Columbia legally. I want to make just this statement and then I shall have completed what I have to say: That an analysis of that cream by an impartial laboratory disclosed that it contained something like 40,000 bacteria per cubic centimeter. The fact is that the average bacteria count in cream which you are served anywhere in Washington is around 3,000 per cubic centimeter—this as against 40,000 per cubic centimeter on the cream the gentleman from Illinois has just been boasting about.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. LEAVY. I am curious to know the outcome in reference to that shipment of milk. It did create considerable excitement here. I understand it was investigated in Washington. Was it or was it not found to be pure milk?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. It was analyzed, but I cannot say it was pure milk, for the issue has not yet been determined, the case has not been heard.

Mr. LEAVY. I thought a finding had been made on it.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I do not think so. Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. HOOK. As I understand the gentleman, then, it is his contention that it is all right to have class B milk distributed in the District of Columbia provided it is not imported here; is that right?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. The gentleman has very certainly misunderstood me. I said no class B milk is lawfully distributed in the city of Washington. There is only one class of milk advertised for sale here, which is class A, and that carries a butterfat content of something over 4 percent.

Mr. HOOK. Can class B milk be sold here under the law?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I am saying it is not. I do not know whether it can or not.

Mr. HOOK. Why not have the resolution extended to such point that the distribution of milk within the District of Columbia can be investigated as well as importations into the District?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. That seems to be the purpose of the amendment.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I wish to ask two or three questions for information.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I do not want to take up too much of the gentleman's time. He has been very generous in yielding to me.

Mr. CRAWFORD. First, I want to ask how many tests were made, to which the gentleman just referred in speaking of the 40,000 bacteria per cc.? How many tests were made? In the second place, what was the report on each test, or let us take three, four, or five tests. Could the gentleman give us those figures?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. No. There was only one load of cream taken, and I assume there was only one test made. I do not know whether they make more than one test on one shipment or not.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Does the gentleman mean to say, so that we can accept it as a statement of fact, that there was only one test made on one load and that that test was something in the range of 40,000?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. That is all the information I have on the subject. I have given what information I have.

Mr. CRAWFORD. May I ask another question with reference to the sale of milk in New York City. What did I understand the gentleman to say was the price in New York City on grades A, B, and C milk? Does the gentleman have those figures?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I have got it as 16% cents.

Mr. CRAWFORD. On grade A?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. On grade A.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Does that apply to the bottled milk delivered to the consumer, or does it also apply to the special milk stations which have been created by Mayor LaGuardia so the poor people of New York City can get their milk cheaper?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. It is the regular market for milk. Mr. CRAWFORD. The gentleman did not mean to say, then, that grade A milk can be bought in New York City for only 16% cents per quart?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. That is the price I have. I do not know what Mayor LaGuardia gives them. I understand he is very generous.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Is that the prevailing price in New York City for grade A milk?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I understand that to be the prevailing price.

Mr. CRAWFORD. And it is the only price?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I did not say that was the only price; but I stated I do not know what Mayor LaGuardia does about that.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Does the gentleman know whether or not New York City now has milk stations which are selling grade A milk for as low as 8 or 9 cents per quart?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I do not.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DIRKSEN. In order to keep the record straight, just recently the District bacteriologist stated that there were 5 tests made on the cream and that the count ranged from 4,000 to 30,000. According to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Gillie], who used to be a milk inspector in Fort Wayne, that is really high-grade cream.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. My information is 40,000. I do not know who made the test.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I enter the debate at this point only to make an observation because I do not want to go into the merits of the pending amendment at this time except to say what I stated previously, that the District of Columbia Committee, I know, can be counted on to thoroughly investigate whatever work is brought to them in the form of a resolution passed by this House. May I make the further observation in connection with the so-called "bootleg" milk which was brought into the District of Columbia from some State in the Midwest, that I understand the Health Department officials have found that that milk met the requirements of the District of Columbia.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I am going to yield the floor in a minute.

Mr. DIRKSEN. May I make this further observation and call attention to the fact this letter was signed by J. E. Noble, District bacteriologist, and shows that in all five counts the bacillus coli was zero.

Mr. PATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. PATRICK. I have not gone into the detailed things that have been asked here; however, I think the majority of the Members listening to the debate would like to find out about one point before voting, and that is: What is it the gentleman from Virginia is objecting to so far as the amendment is concerned, unless it would curtail what is provided for and intended by the resolution as drawn by the gentleman? In other words, what is the gentleman from Virginia losing by the additional amendment being brought in here when it leaves intact everything in the original resolution?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I do not know that it does anything other than divert the resolution from its original purpose. I am frank to say to the gentleman I do not think it is a matter of very great importance. We can probably get along all right with the amendment added.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes for the purpose of debate to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Hull].

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I will take the time only for the purpose of explaining the amendment which I have endeavored to get before the House, but have been prevented from so doing by the parliamentary situation. I read the amendment previously, but I will read it again. It is to add after the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana:

(6) Whether any conspiracy exists on the part of distributors of any dairy products to monopolize or control the supply of such products and the prices thereon to the detriment of both producers and consumers or either of them.

I call attention to the language on page 2, line 5, of the resolution, reading as follows:

Whether any conspiracy exists on the part of any distributor of any dairy products to violate the provisions of the 1925 District Milk Act or the regulations made pursuant thereto.

That language would restrict the monopoly feature or the conspiracy feature merely to the 1925 District Milk Act. It is my purpose and it is the object of my amendment to open up this subject here, just as it was opened up in Chicago by the Trade Commission, to find what the facts are, and, if there is a monopoly existing here, if this racket is not a onesided matter but a two-sided matter in which the principal racket is perpetrated by the larger dairy companies, then the Department of Justice can move in and we shall have a grand-jury investigation supplementary to anything we do in the House.

Mr. Speaker, I am not familiar enough with the rules to know whether or not my request is in order; but if it is in order, I ask unanimous consent that my amendment may at this time be added to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Halleck]. I submit the request in this form in order that the gentleman from Indiana may not lose control of the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to offer the amendment he has read as an amendment to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, may I correct the statement of the Chair in just one particular? I desire to have the amendment added to the original amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana and not have it come as an amendment offered by me.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I should like to have a further explanation of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The SPEAKER. As the Chair understood the unanimousconsent request of the gentleman from Wisconsin it is that his proposed amendment be added to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana, and not offered as an independent amendment to the amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Further reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman if his amendment is not similar in purport to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana? In other words, is it not a mere repetition of what the gentleman wishes to say?

Mr. HULL. No. In my opinion, the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana is confined very largely to the one subject of the 1925 milk law and the regulations thereunder. I am endeavoring to have the investigation made broad enough so the whole subject of monopoly can be entered into and, as far as that is concerned, so the features of the antitrust law may be invoked under this same investigation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I shall have to object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes for the purpose of debate to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Healey]

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, I take issue with my friend the gentleman from Virginia, who in a rather subtle manner has tried to convert this issue into a party question. Certainly, whether or not the investigation should be broadened so as to give the investigating committee power to inquire into the questions of whether or not there exists an arrangement whereby the supplying of milk to the city of Washington is restricted to one area, and whether a monopoly exists in its sale and distribution, are not partisan questions. I can very well conceive that the gentleman from Virginia may have a very special interest in this resolution, in that his constituents are perhaps affected more than others, but certainly that reasoning does not apply to other Members on the Democratic side. We have nothing but a broad interest and are anxious to know if there exists in the District a monopoly which restricts the supply and distribution of milk to the residents of the District; and, if so, whether that monopoly is actually controlling the price of milk and eliminating free competition. It has been alleged that the price of milk and cream in the District is higher than in any other populous center of the country. The gentleman from Virginia disputes this allegation, but certainly he should not have any objection to an investigating committee's inquiring into and determining the facts and bringing them to the House so we may take further action if we deem the facts as adduced by the committee warrant such further action.

The question comes down simply to whether or not we wish to broaden the scope and extent of this investigation to make this further inquiry. I hope some parliamentary arrangement can be arrived at whereby the gentleman from Wisconsin may have his amendment considered in addition to the amendments offered by the gentleman from Indiana, because the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin is clear and unequivocal. Under the language of his amendment the committee will be expressly instructed to determine the question of whether or not a monopoly does in fact exist governing and controlling the supply and distribution of milk in the District. [Applause.]

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes for the purpose of debate to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Nichols].

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I am frank to say I did not know we have a milk racket in the District of Columbia, and I am frank to say I have been considerably enlightened this afternoon through this debate by gentlemen on both sides of the aisle as to a condition which seems to exist here. This situation has certainly reached sufficient importance that it has taken up the time of the great Committee on Rules in the consideration of this resolution, and is of enough importance that it is now taking up the time of this House in debate. I presume there is some cause for all this agitation. I agree with my friend the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HEALEY] and am frank to say that I can see nothing partisan in this matter. If an inferior milk is being sold in the District of Columbia, it is as unhealthy for Democrats as it is for Republicans, and if a monopoly or a milk racket is being carried on in the District of Columbia, the ill effects from such monopoly affect us all alike and our politics do not enter into it at all.

I am a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia. If this resolution is passed that committee, of course, will have to carry out the mandate of the House. I am not interested in whether or not the resolution submitted by the gentleman from Virginia is right or whether the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana makes it better.

I am interested in this as a member of that committee. If you are going to give us a job to do in investigating this subject, then do not limit us. If you want us to do a good job, turn us loose and let us go into every phase of this racket, if it is a racket. If there is a monopoly, turn us loose so that we can, on the basis of this investigation, find it out if possible. I do not know whether there is one or not.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. I yield to the gentleman from Massa-chusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. Of course, you will need some money. Mr. NICHOLS. I do not know; it is not my resolution.

Mr. McCORMACK. In order for the District of Columbia Committee to do the job assigned to it, with the power to summon witnesses, the committee ought to be given money to do the work.

Mr. NICHOLS. Of course my friend is exactly right, and I presume the House will be generous in that respect. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, just one word and then I shall move the previous question.

I believe the resolution as originally drafted, and as it will be amended if these amendments are adopted, will adequately meet the idea that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Hull] has in mind in his amendment. Beyond that, if I understand the procedure correctly, this committee will get into its job and I think from what has been said here this afternoon they will do a good job. If, after they get into their work of investigation, they see that they need further or wider authority, I am convinced the House will give it to them.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALLECK. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I think it only fair to follow up the observation made a moment ago by the gentleman from Massachusetts by saying that certainly the District of Columbia Committee would not and could not proceed without supporting funds, because it would be a task which could not be handled without proper clerical help as well as counsel and investigators.

Mr. KITCHENS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. HALLECK. I yield for a question. Mr. KITCHENS. I take it the gentleman is familiar with this milk law. I am not familiar with it. Has the gentleman found anything in that law or anything in the rules or regulations issued under it that will prevent competition here in the District from any point outside of the District?

Mr. HALLECK. I think that is in the law and in the regulations, by reason of the fact that there are requirements that the sources of supply be investigated by the agents of the District of Columbia.

Mr. KITCHENS. But the law itself is all right, and there is no discrimination against certain sections by virtue of the law itself.

Mr. HALLECK. Personally I do not think the law at the present moment is all right, but I do not care at this late hour to go into a discussion of that, because we have been back and forth over a number of those things during the

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. HALLECK. Yes; I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. Personally I am going to vote for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana, but I am sure the gentleman from Indiana has given this matter serious thought; and, of course, if we vote for this, we are passing it over to the District of Columbia Committee. Can the gentleman enlighten the House as to how much he thinks the House ought to appropriate so the District of Columbia Committee can do a proper job?

Mr. HALLECK. Of course, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts knows I would not have a very definite idea about that. I did not introduce this resolution at the outset. I am not the author of the resolution. I simply have offered some amendments in the hope that if the investigation is made, some good will come from it.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman does not want to leave the District of Columbia Committee holding the bag with a resolution and no money.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALLECK. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I may say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that the Committee on Accounts must give consideration to the question of money.

Mr. McCORMACK. That is true, but usually the House is advised beforehand as to what will be asked of the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution and the amendment thereto.

The previous question was ordered.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution, as amended, was agreed to, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, during the afternoon the House conferees on the national defense bill have been in session and therefore were not able to be present at the roll call previously had. The Members are Messrs. May, Thoma-SON, HARTER of Ohio, Andrews, and Short.

Mr. Jenkins of Ohio asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask permission to address the House for 1 minute and permission to revise and extend my remarks at this point and to include therein a letter received by me from the Chairman of the Ontonagan County Road Commission and copy of his letter to Colonel Harrington, W. P. A. Administrator.

Mr. Speaker, one of the first acts of this session of Congress was the granting to the President of an appropriation of $725,000,000 for the continuation of the W. P. A. During the course of the debate on that bill accusations were made of waste and inefficiency in the administration of this vital relief program. Charges were made that politics had been permitted to interfere with the administration of W. P. A. When this money was granted amendments were added to the measure which demanded that waste and inefficiency and political interference in the administration of W. P. A. must cease immediately.

Mr. Speaker, in this morning's mail I received communications from my home State of Michigan which indicate that there has been no improvement in the general situation, and I feel that the charges contained therein are serious enough to be called to the attention of this entire body, and consequently I include these letters in full in my remarks.

ONTONAGON, MICH., March 11, 1939.

Hon. Fred Bradley,

Congressman, Eleventh District of Michigan,

Washington, D. C.

My Dear Mr. Bradley: We are enclosing herewith copy of a letter which we have this day mailed to F. C. Harrington, Works Progress Administrator, which is self-explanatory.

We have had so much trouble and interference from the local Democratic committee that it has been virtually impossible for us to carry out our duties as sponsors of the various W. P. A. road projects in this county.

We have been forced to accept supervisory employees without regard to their experience or ability. The chairman of the Democratic committee has dictated the policy of carrying through our projects purely upon a political basis.

Our road commission is a nonpartisan board. We have made an almost superhuman effort to carry out our duties of sponsoring the spending of Federal money here in an efficient and businesslike way. We find it impossible to do this, however, because every supervisory officer of the W. P. A. in this district takes his orders from the local chairman, and we are powerless to do anything about it.

We believe that we are entitled to have politics divorced from the administration of the W. P. A. here, and we believe that our only remedy is to have an impartial investigation of the political maneuvering which is causing us so much interference.

will you please do what you can to help us correct this situation?
Respectfully,
BOARD OF ROAD COMMISSIONERS OF ONTONAGON COUNTY,
By CHAUNCEY L. MARLEY, Chairman.

ONTONAGON, MICH., March 10, 1939.

Ontonagon, Mich., March 10, 1939.

Mr. F. C. Harrington,

Administrator, Works Progress Administration,

1734 New York Avenue NW., Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: We have been informed, through the press, of your desire to separate politics from the administration of the W. P. A. The purpose of this letter is to inform you that in this particular county (Ontonagon) a situation exists in this regard which should have your immediate attention. The board of county road commissioners of this county has sponsored projects wherein Federal funds have been spent of nearly $1,000,000. The present project sponsored by this commission involves Government money to the extent of $241,014. Our commission, which is nonpartisan, would like to see this money spent for the purpose for which it was like to see this money spent for the purpose for which it was intended. We have been considerably hampered in doing this by the interference and manipulation of the local Democratic committee. In this regard we give you a general survey of the situation and earnestly request that you send an impartial investigator to inquire into the correctness of our statement.

The local chairman of the Democratic Party, cooperating with the area engineer and project supervisors, is making it virtually impossible for us to carry out this project according to governmental regulations.

mental regulations.

We charge that area engineers, timekeepers, and project supervisors here have been forced, through political manipulation, to demote project foremen for no reason whatever except political affiliations. For example, they have forced the replacement of competent foremen who have been in service for 2 years or more by young, inexperienced men who have been in service 6 months or less on the basis only of political considerations. Carpenters not satisfactory to the county chairman have been reclassified and replaced by common laborers without any experience in the carpenter trade. At least seven of these carpenters in one particular township have been carried on the pay roll at carpenter rates for at least 2 months after all carpenter work was completed. We have particular reference on this to the home township of the chairman of the Democratic Party. Timekeepers also have been reclassified under a similar situation. The project timekeeper was chosen against the wishes of the area timekeeper. This particular timekeeper reported to work drunk and was on the job particular timekeeper reported to work drunk and was on the job drunk, to the knowledge of both the area timekeeper and the Democratic chairman. Notwithstanding this condition, it was impossible to have him removed until after several weeks of strenuous complaint on our part.

We have positive proof that the project supervisor and time-keeper were requested by the area engineer to make collections for Congressman Hook's campaign fund last fall and we have sworn affidavits and signed receipts to prove this assertion. The project supervisor who refused to make the collection later lost his job.

Other items which we think should have your consideration are

Other items which we think should have your consideration are as follows:

Various project foremen have been forced by the county chairman to do additional work not included or approved in the project and against the wishes of the superior foremen on the same job. Clement Proulx, the project supervisor for this county, and selected by the Democratic committee, was and is entirely incompetent to do the work either by training or experience. This man is not an engineer and never had any previous experience in the construction of highways or the handling of men. He does not even deem it necessary to visit the various jobs oftener than once every 6 weeks. In conclusion we wish to advise that as sponsors of this project the Ontonagon County Road Commission has been completely divested of all its right and authority to supervise the operations as set up by the rules and regulations of the W. P. A. We have been superseded and are without any remedy except at your hands. We would not lament the interference on the part of the Democratic chairman or the members of his committee were it not for the fact that they have openly disregarded every concept of economy or efficiency in running this project. The county is suffering, the Federal Government is suffering, and the people who reside here and who are unfortunate enough to be upon W. P. A. are being victimized by the political racket that involves the whole set-up in this county.

We appreciate that we are but a small unit of an operation that extends throughout our Nation but, nevertheless, we feel that our particular situation demands your immediate attention and we hope that you will act with all possible promptness.

Respectfully yours,
BOARD OF COUNTY ROAD COMMISSIONERS OF ONTONAGON COUNTY,

By CHAUNCEY L. MARLEY, Chairman.

Copies to Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg and Congressman Fred

Mr. Speaker, the daily newspapers inform us that the President is going to immediately renew his demand on this body for an additional $150,000,000 in order to continue this program to July 1, and I contend that if the instructions of this body had been carried out, this additional request would not have been necessary.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. O'Toole, from March 13 to April 1, on account of illness necessitating an operation.

To Mr. Anderson of California, for an indefinite period, on account of illness.

To Mr. Lanham, for today, on account of illness.

To Mr. LELAND M. FORD, indefinitely, on account of illness.

THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE J. BURRWOOD DALY

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Speaker, 2 years ago, in this Chamber, I listened to one of our colleagues from Massachusetts [Mr. McCormack] state, on a similar occasion to this, that it was the saddest moment in his 9 years of service in this body in announcing to the Congress the death of his beloved colleague the late William P. Connery, whom we all admired very deeply.

Today I can, in all sincerity, offer this same expression of sadness in announcing the death of my colleague from Pennsylvania, the Honorable J. Burrwood Daly. It would be presumptious on my part to adequately extol the virtues or to eulogize the character of Mr. Daly. He was a very lovable gentleman and a credit to his State. A devoted husband and the loving father of five children, his family will miss him very much, but will have the consolation of the many fond memories that he has lived as a legacy to them.

He was born and reared in the city of Philadelphia, graduated from La Salle College, and received his law degree from the University of Pennsylvania. He was a member of the Philadelphia Bar Association and was assistant city solicitor of Philadelphia for 12 years. He was elected to the Seventyfourth Congress; reelected to the Seventy-fifth and Seventysixth Congresses. I am personally grieved at his departure and can express the same feeling on behalf of our Pennsylvania delegation. His death is a loss to the Nation, the State, and the community in which he lived; a great loss to his family and relatives and an irreparable loss to his friends and colleagues in this body.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, as chairman of the Subcommittee on the Treasury and Post Office Appropriations, of which Burrwood Daly was a highly valued and much be-loved member, I wish to give expression to our feelings of loss and sorrow over the sad news of his death. He was a kind, considerate, sympathetic, understanding friend, learned and scholarly, a delightful companion and a sincere representative of the people. He was keenly alive to his responsibility, conscientious to the last degree, and was actuated by exalted ideals of public service.

We of the subcommittee have just passed through a grueling experience of drafting the appropriation measure committed to our charge. Mr. Daly was with us when we began our hearings on December 12, and he devoted all of his splendid talents far beyond his strength to the work at hand, until a few weeks ago, when it was apparent to us that the feeble flame of life was flickering and that the final parting could not be long delayed.

His intense application to the public interests, which flagged only when his physician ordered him to desist, may have hastened the untimely end.

He was a lovable character, and we shall miss him very much as we join his legion of friends in mourning the loss of a good man.

The pain of parting is great, but in our simple Christian faith may we not indulge the hope that somewhere beyond the stars we may meet our friend and coworker again? May we not say of Burrwood, as our Hoosier poet, James Whitcomb Riley, said of another:

> I cannot say and I will not say that he is dead-He is just away. With a cheery smile and a wave of the hand He has wandered into an unknown land.

Mr. SACKS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOLAND. I yield.

Mr. SACKS. Mr. Speaker, it is with deep regret that I rise today. I cannot find words ample to describe the feelings of his colleagues from Philadelphia. We have known BURRWOOD DALY a long while. We in Philadelphia always believed him to be one of God's noblemen. He has fought hard for his fellow citizens while serving them in the city, and I know he did the same in this House. I just want to say that many times his colleagues from the city tried to get Burrwood to relax a little, and his only answer was that it was his duty to his people and to his Nation to continue on in the work.

I wish to express the feeling of his colleagues, and I am sure the feeling of the people, that Burrwood's loss is a great loss to the citizenry of Philadelphia, and we all pray in this hour that the good work he has started will be carried on by others and his friends in the House and his delegation both in the State and in the city.

May his family take solace and feel that Burrwood in his departure has left a great mark upon the history books of his Nation, of his city, and his State.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOLAND. I yield.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, this is indeed a sad occasion for the Members of Congress. It is particularly sad for those Members who have had the privilege of being very closely associated with our dear departed friend, our colleague from Philadelphia.

Mr. Daly was possessed of all those qualifications which go to make up a true gentleman. He will be remembered by us as one who had wide, human sympathy; as one who was always willing to lend a helping hand to those who came to him for advice and help; and as being one of those men who also had a peculiar and remarkable faculty for getting to the depth of the problems that are confronting this Nation today.

He represented his native city of Philadelphia and the State of Pennsylvania in an exceedingly capable manner. He endeared himself to every Member of the House with whom he became personally acquainted. The Congress and the whole Nation suffers a great loss in the death of our colleague from Pennsylvania, Mr. Daly.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution, which I send to the Speaker's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 121

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. J. Burrwood Daly, a Representative from the State of Pennsylvania

Resolved, That a committee of four Members of the House with such Members of the Senate as may be joined be appointed to

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

The Clerk will continue the reading of the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect the House do now adjourn.

SENATE

TUESDAY, MARCH 14, 1939

(Legislative day of Monday, March 13, 1939)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. Z@Barney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Blessed Christ, who on a cross of love didst turn the counsels of sin and hate into the healing of the world: Proclaim, we beseech Thee, to the people of every nation the things that belong to their peace. Reveal to them the truth that in this our day it may be expedient that one should even suffer death to save the people from their faithless faith and crowns too lightly won. Remove from all international relations every root of bitterness, that, with singleness of purpose, we may forgive past wrong, and so usher in that perfect kingdom wherein no sword is ever drawn save the sword of righteousness and no strength prevails save only that of love. In Thy holy name we ask it. Amen.

DIVISION OF JUDICIAL DISTRICT OF IDAHO

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, there is on the calendar Senate bill 752, which pertains alone to the State I have the honor in part to represent. The bill proposes to divide the judicial district of Idaho into four divisions. Its passage will not involve any additional judgeship. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill, the title of which the clerk will report.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 752) to amend section 78 of chapter 231, Thirty-sixth United States Statutes at Large (36 Stat. L., sec. 1109), relating to one judicial district to be known as the district of Idaho, and dividing it into four divisions, to be known as the northern, central, southern, and eastern divisions, defining the territory embraced in said divisions, fixing the terms of district court for said divisions, requiring the clerk of the court to maintain an office in charge of himself or deputy at Coeur d'Alene City, Idaho; Moscow, Idaho; Boise City, Idaho; and Pocatello, Idaho; and to authorize the United States District Court for the District of Idaho, by rule or order, to make such changes in the description or names to conform to such changes of description or names of counties in said divisions as the Legislature of Idaho may hereafter make.

LXXXIV-170

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I wonder if we might have an explanation of the bill? I was not present when the Judiciary Committee considered the measure.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the effect of the bill, if passed, will be to redistribute some of the counties in the judicial district now existing in Idaho; that is to say, it will subdivide the district upon a different basis than that which now exists. The bill will not create any additional district nor will it necessitate an additional judgeship. It will simply redistribute the territory within the district.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was read, considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 78 of chapter 231 of the United States Statutes at Large be amended so as to read as follows: "That the State of Idaho shall constitute one judicial district to be known as the district of Idaho. It is divided into four divito be known as the district of Idaho. It is divided into four divisions, to be known as the northern, central, southern, and eastern divisions. Terms of the district court for the northern division of said district shall be held at Coeur d'Alene City on the fourth Monday in May and the third Monday in November; for the central division, at Moscow on the second Monday in May and the first Monday in November; for the southern division, at Boise City on the first Monday in February and the first Tuesday in September; and for the eastern division at Pocatello on the second Mondays in March and October. The clerk of the court shall maintain an office in charge of himself or a deputy at Coeur d'Alene City, at Moscow, at Boise City, and at Pocatello, which shall be open at all times for the transaction of the business of the court."

Sec. 2. That in the event the Legislature of the State of Idaho should hereafter at any time change the description or name of any of the counties embraced in the divisions hereinbefore referred to, then the District Court of the United States for the District of Idaho may by rule or order make such changes in the description or names of the counties in the said divisions to conform with any act of the Legislature of the State of Idaho.

Board of Supervisors, protesting against the passage of House bill 7, providing for the withdrawal of water from the Chicago Drainage Canal in excess of the amount established by decree of the United States Supreme Court, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a resolution of Minnesota Chapter of the American Institute of Architects, Minneapolis, Minn., favoring an appropriation of $800,000,000 to assure funds for housing and slum clearance for States that have not as yet participated in the housing program, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a resolution of the Italian-American Civic Association of the Tarrytowns, Tarrytown, N. Y., protesting against the selling of war materials to foreign countries on a commercial basis, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a resolution of the taxation and legislation committee of the Business and Civic Association of the Tonawandas, North Tonawanda, N. Y., protesting against the enactment of Senate bill 158 and House bill 188, relative to freight-rate making, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a joint memorial of the Legislature of Montana, favoring the enactment of legislation to amend the Social Security Act so as to include sufferers from occupational diseases and to match State appropriations by Federal aid, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

APPORTIONMENT OF SHARES OF SUGAR CROP, 1939 AND 1940-ADDITIONAL REPORT (REPT. 161, PT. 2)

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I submit and send to the desk a report in the form of a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture on the bill (S. 69) relating to the apportionment of shares of the sugar crop for 1939 and 1940, which is pending on the calendar. The bill was reported by the committee before this letter from the Secretary was received, and I think it is important to call it to the attention of the Senate. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The additional report submitted by the Senator from South Carolina, to accompany Senate bill 69, heretofore reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, without amendment, will be received and printed and, without objection, printed in the RECORD.

The additional report is as follows:

MARCH 10, 1939.

Hon. E. D. SMITH,
Chairman, Committee on Agriculture and Forestry,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR SMITH: Reference is made to your request for the views of this Department on S. R. 10 and S. 69, which were introduced in the Senate by Senator Ellenber, of Louisiana, on January duced in the Senate by Senator Ellender, of Louisiana, on January 4, 1939. The proposed legislation, if enacted, would mean that producers of sugar beets and sugarcane in the continental United States would not be required to adjust their acreages from the 1938 level as a condition for payments under the Sugar Act of 1937.

Title III of the Sugar Act of 1937, to which the proposed legislation relates, was enacted by the Congress with the intent of effectuating, crop by crop, an approximate adjustment of the amount to be produced in the various sugar-producing areas supplying the United States market, to the marketing quotas established in title II of that act. With respect to the quotas in title II of the act, the Committee on Agriculture in its report with respect to the Sugar Act of 1937 stated in part as follows:

"The sugar-quota system is based upon the power of Congress to the Sugar Act of 1937 stated in part as follows:

"The sugar-quota system is based upon the power of Congress to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in sugar. The quantities which respective areas may market have been arrived at after careful consideration of the history of the production in each area and its present and future capacity to market."

The proposed legislation, if carried into effect, would make it impossible to adjust supplies to quota requirements in the mainland sugarcane area and in the sugar-beet area, as contemplated by the

Pursuant to title III of the act determinations of proportionate Pursuant to title III of the act determinations of proportionate shares for the 1939 and 1940 crops for farms in the mainland canesugar area have been issued and due notice thereof has been given to all interested parties. Copies of these determinations are attached. It will be noted from these determinations that no reduction in acreage is required for the family-size farms as a condition for payments under the act.

The proposed legislation does not make it clear that the establishment of proportionate shares for growers under the Sugar Act of 1937 is an obligation of this Department under the payment provisions of the act and is not an exercise of a regulatory power of the Department. The Secretary merely establishes the proportionate shares of growers as the amount upon which the Federal payments provided for in the act will be calculated, and section 301 (c) of the act makes compliance by growers with such proportionate shares a condition of payment. It should be understood, of course, that there is no restriction on the production of sugarcane by any grower who does not desire to apply for such Government payments. ment payments.

According to data recently obtained by this Department, by far the largest proportion of the sugarcane growers of Louisiana have sugarcane acreages averaging less than 10 acres. For such growers the proposed resolution would be of no benefit since, as already noted above, the proportionate share determination for the mainland cane area requires no reduction in most cases from the 1938 acreage for farms on which the sugarcane acreage is 10 acres or less. The resolution, however, would eliminate the obligation to adjust production, as a condition for receiving Federal payments for growers having more than 10 acres, including the large plantation companies in Louisiana, some of whom now receive relatively large payments. One large Louisiana plantation-producing corporation received as much as $195,698 in the 1937 program. The proposed legislation, if implemented, would make it possible for such corporations to receive relatively large Federal funds without obligation to adjust production.

The clause in the resolution "proportionate share (expressed in

The clause in the resolution "proportionate share (expressed in terms of planted acreage)" for any farm would discriminate against the domestic areas of Hawaii and Puerto Rico, chiefly the latter area, where the proportionate shares are established in terms of ton-nages of sugar. Growers in these areas would be obliged to reduce nages of sugar. Growers in these areas would be obliged to reduce their acreage and production of sugarcane in accordance with the proportionate share limitations already announced and applicable to them, while in the case of the beet and cane areas of the mainland there would be no limitation on production below the 1938

Finally, the proposed legislation, if enacted, would involve an indefinite obligation on the part of the United States Treasury in excess of the amount provided for the sugar program in the 1940 Budget.

Budget.

For the reasons indicated in the foregoing, the Department of Agriculture is unable to recommend the passage of this legislation.

Upon reference of this matter to the Bureau of the Budget, as required by Budget Circular 344, the Acting Director thereof advised the Department of Agriculture under date of March 4, 1939, that there would be no objection on the part of that office to the submission to Congress of this proposed report.

Sincerely,

H. A. WALLACE, Secretary,

TREASURY AND POST OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4492) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS who is in charge of the Treasury and Post Office appropriation bill, is on his feet. The Chair thinks he should recognize that Senator. Does the Senator from Virginia desire to have the committee amendments first considered?

Mr. GLASS. I do. I now ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with; that it be read for amendment; and that the committee amendments be first considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I now desire to make a brief explanation of the bill. As the report indicates, the amount of the bill as passed by the House was $1,700,591,354. The Senate committee reduced the amount by $1,662,240. The bill as reported to the Senate carries $1,698,929,114. amount of the regular estimates for 1940 was $1,728,397,492. The amount of the appropriations for 1939 was $1,503,442,-074. The bill as reported to the Senate exceeds the appropriations for 1939 by $195,487,040, but is under the estimates for 1940 by $29,468,378.

Mr. President, there are a few controversial questions in the Treasury portion of the bill, and none, I think, in the Post Office portion of the bill. The chief controversial question in the Treasury portion of the bill is the appropriation for the control of venereal diseases. I invite the attention of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. La Follette] to what I am saying. I said that the chief controversial question in the Treasury portion of the bill seems to be the appropriation for the control of venereal diseases. The House appropriated $5,000,000 for the purpose. The Senate committee reduced that amount very materially; but it is fair to say that it did so by a closely divided vote, by a majority

In this connection I desire to put in the RECORD the following telegram from Dr. Hugh H. Young, of Johns Hopkins Hospital, addressed to me:

BALTIMORE, MD., March 12, 1939.

Senator Carter Glass,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:
Vitally important to restore appropriation for fight against venereal diseases to $5,000,000 as provided by Congress last year.
The States have made appropriations based on five million Federal fund and a cut to three million would be a severe blow to this most important work of the Public Health Service. I will personally appreciate greatly if you will be on outlook for the proposed restoration to five million and actively assist in passing it.
Many thanks.

HUGH H. YOUNG, Johns Hopkins Hospital.

I have a similar letter from D. C. Smith, of the health department of the University of Virginia, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD without reading.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

> University of Virginia Hospital, University, Va., March 13, 1939.

Hon. CARTER GLASS,

Hon. Carter Glass,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Dear Senator Glass: It has just come to my attention that the Senate Appropriations Committee has recommended a decrease in the appropriation to the United States Public Health Service for the control of venereal diseases from $5,000,000, passed by the House of Representatives, to $3,000,000. I am writing to urge you to use your influence in restoring the larger amount in the appropriation.

You will recall that I wrote you on this subject on February 4, giving a number of details which I believe are sound reasons for this appropriation. I am saying this in spite of the fact that I am personally in favor of governmental economy, but I believe economy should be in the field of nonessentials rather than in a smaller appropriation in such an important field of public health as this embodies.

In addition to the general desirability for promoting the cam-paign against venereal diseases, we have under way in connection with this university, supported by funds from the Public Health Service, a special field study in syphilis, which will probably have to be discontinued unless the appropriation is restored to the larger amount mentioned above. Discontinuation of this study will not only interrupt an important public-health project but also discontinue a phase of teaching medical students here which is very important.

Any effort which you can make to restore this appropriation will be appreciated, not only by me personally but by the administration of this medical school and university.

Respectfully yours,

Mr. GLASS. I understand that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. La Follette] desires to discuss that particular item, and I yield to him for that purpose.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I wish to accommodate myself to the pleasure of the Senator from Virginia. I suggest, however, that it might be better to wait until the amendment is pending.

Mr. GLASS. Yes; I think perhaps it would. Very well, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Has the Senator from Virginia concluded his general explanation?

Mr. GLASS. Yes; I have no further general explanation

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair asked the Senator that question for the reason that there is on the desk a message from the President which the Chair feels he should lay before the Senate at this time if the Senator has concluded his general explanation.

ADDITIONAL APPROPRIATION FOR RELIEF-MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

To the Congress of the United States:

At the opening of this session I advised the Congress of the number of needy unemployed persons who were able to perform useful work. The estimates, based on actual and estimated figures, showed that in the judgment of the executive branch of the Government 3,000,000 persons should continue to be employed during the winter months, followed by a reduction to 2,700,000 persons during the latter part of the 5 months' period ending on June 30, 1939. The amount of money required to supply these needs was estimated at $875,000,000.

Early in February the Congress appropriated $725,000,000, with directions that the number of persons on the relief rolls should not be decreased in number more than 5 percent during February and March, and, in effect, requesting me to recheck the new situation thus created and advise the Congress of the results.

On February 7 I reported to the Congress that the reduction in the appropriation in itself created an emergency; that the number of persons on the relief rolls and on the "waiting list" had not decreased in number since early January; that as a result the need of these people was as great as before; that by continuing their employment during February and March half of the entire appropriation would be expended, leaving only the other half of the appropriation for the maintenance of relief during April, May, and June; that the amount of money remaining after April 1 would make it necessary to discharge, between that date and June 30, nearly half of the numbers on relief; that this, in my judgment, would constitute a definite hardship; and that I was advising the Congress of this fact in order to give sufficient time to study the conditions which would result from the curtailment of funds.

April 1 is approaching; and in pursuance of the spirit of the request for further information, I feel impelled again to call the attention of the Congress to the very serious situation which exists. Within about 3 weeks the reduction of Works Progress Administration employment must begin, in order that the remainder of the appropriation may be apportioned over the months of April, May, and June, unless more money is appropriated quickly.

Since my messages of January and February, a careful check-up shows that there has been no substantial change in the conditions of unemployment. On the contrary, recent data have become available substantiating the real need for an additional appropriation of $150,000,000.

Partly because of seasonal conditions, the volume of employment has decreased since the end of December. This includes industrial and agricultural employment. Therefore, the need for unemployment relief has increased.

Due to the seasonal factors, Works Progress Administration employment was maintained in February at an average of 2,996,000 persons, and the average for March is being held at approximately the same figure.

Despite this fact, the number of persons now certified as being in need and eligible for employment is actually higher than it was a month ago. This so-called "waiting list" actually does not reflect the total needs, because in certain States certifications of eligibility are not given to the Federal authorities by the local public relief agencies until actual vacancies exist to which needy persons can be assigned.

It is my belief that improvement in business conditions between now and June will result in substantial increase in employment. However, based on the experience of the past, it cannot be expected that this increase will absorb more than 300,000 of those who are now on the Works Progress Administration rolls or who have been certified as in need and awaiting assignment.

That means that the present total of these two categories, 3,850,000 persons, would be reduced to 3,550,000.

In accordance with the requirements of the recent appropriation law, approximately 30,000 aliens have been removed from the rolls. The current investigation of the actual need of relief employees will shortly be completed in the field, but it is already clear from preliminary reports that the number who will be eliminated will not exceed 5 percent of the total and may be considerably less.

All possible economies in administration and operation are being sought and will be constantly checked, but here again the cold facts, which have been given insufficient emphasis, require restatement.

Out of every $100 of Federal funds expended by the Works Progress Administration, only $3.50 is for administrative overhead; $10.50 is spent for materials, equipment, and supplies; $86 is paid out directly in the form of wages. As a business proposition it occurs to me that some modicum of commendation is in order.

If no additional appropriation is made, the Works Progress Administration must of necessity issue instructions, within the next week, to reduce the number employed. The plan proposed by the Administrator is to effect a reduction of approximately 400,000 in the first week in April, and a further reduction of 600,000 in the first week in May. This will reduce the total employment to 2,000,000 persons.

However, even these drastic cuts will not be sufficient to make the available fund last through to June 30, and still comply with the requirements of the statutes. Therefore, a still further reduction of more than 200,000 will have to be made early in June.

This plan has been recommended as being preferable to a program of week to week reductions because, under the latter, more persons would eventually lose their jobs.

Under the proposed plan, the number of persons who will be thrown out of employment in the near future is 1,000,000, growing to over 1,200,000 before June 30. The number of persons, including dependents, affected by this reduction will be 4,000,000 within the next few weeks and nearly a million more later on.

To these must be added the "waiting list" category—because it is obvious that while people now on the rolls are being discharged no people can be employed from the "waiting list."

I am of the opinion that States, counties, and municipalities are doing, in the overwhelming majority of cases, all that their finances will permit to meet the situation.

I further believe that, with few exceptions, those who are employed are actually in need and are not receiving more than they should in the form of Federal assistance.

It is the obvious duty of the Chief Executive to point out the need which exists and to give all possible factual information. This I have attempted to do in order that the legislative branch of the Government, in which the final decision and full responsibility necessarily rests, may act.

Because it has been alleged that I would be satisfied if no further appropriation were made for the coming 3 months, I feel that in justice to myself I must make it clear that I am not sending this message to the Congress merely for the purpose of going through motions.

For more than 6 years it has been the definite policy of the President and the Congress that needy persons, out of work, should not be allowed to starve; that it was an obligation of the Federal Government to give work to those able to work and an obligation of State and local government and of private charities to take care of those needy persons who are unable to work.

That policy, I am more than ever confident, is right. It should not be abandoned now.

It is wholly within the right of any and all of us to study and work for the greater efficiency of government. For several years infinite study has been given to the problems of relief in all its forms; additional studies are proper.

But the Government of the United States is faced today with a condition and not a theory. The insufficiency of the money appropriated will compel the Administrator to discharge about a million and a quarter actual workers in the immediate future.

I cannot bring myself to believe that these discharged men and women will contribute to the prosperity of the United States, nor do I believe that the merchants and landlords they are now dealing with will become more prosperous when their trade ceases.

Therefore, the responsibility for the situation in which all of these people will find themselves during the coming 3 months rests of necessity within the decision of the Congress of the United States.

Franklin D. Roosevelt.

THE WHITE HOUSE, March 14, 1939.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Customs," on page 15, line 12, before the word "of", to strike out "$21,153,000" and insert "$21,402,600", so as to read:

Salaries and expenses: For collecting the revenue from customs. for the detection and prevention of frauds upon the customs revenue, and not to exceed $100,000 for the securing of evidence of violations of the customs laws; for expenses of transportation and nue, and not to exceed $100,000 for the securing of evidence of violations of the customs laws; for expenses of transportation and transfer of customs receipts from points where there are no Government depositories; not to exceed $84,500 for allowances for living quarters, including heat, fuel, and light, as authorized by the act approved June 26, 1930 (5 U. S. C. 118a), but not to exceed $1,700 for any one person; not to exceed $500 for subscriptions to newspapers; not to exceed $2,000 for improving, repairing, maintaining, or preserving buildings, inspection stations, office quarters, including living quarters for officers, sheds, and sites along the Canadian and Mexican borders acquired under authority of the act of June 26, 1930 (19 U. S. C. 68); and including the purchase (not to exceed $87,500), exchange, maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles when necessary for official use in field work; $21,204,600, of which such amount as may be necessary shall be available for the payment of extra compensation earned by customs officers or employees for overtime services, at the expense of the parties in interest, in accordance with the provisions of section 5 of the act approved February 13, 1911, as amended by the act approved February 7, 1920, and section 451 of the Tariff Act, 1930 (19 U. S. C. 261, 267, and 1451).

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 14, after the word "countries", to strike out the colon and the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That the offices of the surveyor of customs at the port of New York and seven comptrollers of customs, with annual salaries aggregating $51,600, are hereby abolished. The duties imposed by law and regulations upon the surveyor of customs at the port of New York and comptrollers of customs, their assistants and deputies, are hereby transferred to, imposed upon, and continued in positions now established in the Customs Service by or pursuant to law, as the Secretary of the Treasury by appropriate regulations shall specify; and he is further authorized to designate the titles by which such positions shall be officially known hereafter. The Secretary of the Treasury, in performing the duties imposed upon him by this paragraph, shall administer the same in such a manner that the transfer of duties provided hereby will not result in the establishment of any new positions in the Customs Service.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Office of Treasurer of the United States", on page 18, line 9, after the name "District of Columbia", to strike out "$1,199,000" and insert "$1,209,000", so as to read:

Salaries: For Treasurer of the United States, Assistant Treasurer, and for other personal services in the District of Columbia,

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I wish to inquire of the Senator from Virginia, with reference to the amendment on page -and I apologize for not having kept up with the clerk in his rapid reading of the amendments—the bill calls for the appropriation of $21,204,600. I am not objecting to the amendment, but I rise seeking information. What recognition is made in this bill of the two or three hundred million dollars collected from tariffs on imports, and automatically consigned to the customs division, or to the Treasury Department? I was wondering whether, in determining the amount which should be appropriated for the Treasury Department, this very large gratuity, or gift, was taken into consideration.

Mr. GLASS. No: the committee had no information on the subject.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Tennessee says in an aside that the Treasury has nothing to do with it.

Mr. McKELLAR. No, that the committee has nothing to do with this particular thing. That is a policy which Congress has already adopted.

Mr. KING. I am familiar with that, but I was wondering whether the committee, in taking into account the absolute needs of the Government, remembered the fact or ignored the fact that either the Treasury Department or the Customs Division obtains two or three hundred million dollars annually; in fact, all of the funds which are derived from import duties.

Mr. GLASS. We did not take note of that fact. The bill as it passed the House did not touch the matter, and we would not.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, of course I am not complaining because the committee did not take cognizance of it, but it does seem to me that the appropriations ought to be much less than they are, in view of the fact that the Treasury is receiving two or three hundred million dollars annually from the tariff duties which are collected and which go to this Department for expenditure.

Mr. GLASS. If the Senator from Utah can indicate to the Committee on Appropriations how to reduce any appropriation or prevent the increase of any appropriation, as chairman of the committee I shall be greatly indebted to him.

Mr. KING. If the able members of that committee find no avenues for reductions of expenditures. I am sure I would be a poor adviser. I do feel, however, that the expenditures of the Federal Government are greatly in excess of any legitimate needs. Only a few years ago we ran the entire Gov-ernment—the War Department, the Navy Department, and every other department-for a billion dollars. We have a bill now before us calling for the appropriation of a billion six or seven hundred million dollars for two departments only, and before Congress adjourns we will have appropriated perhaps nine or ten billion dollars, and authorized the appropriation of several billion in addition. I protest against the enormous expenditures of the Federal Government, and point to the fact that if we continue these expenditures we are bound to have inflation. We have almost reached the limit of taxation, and I understand an effort was contemplated a short time ago to have us increase the bonded indebtedness up to $50,000,000,000; indeed, it was suggested, as I was advised, that we might have a bonded indebtedness of $75,000,000,000. With this attitude, obviously inflation will follow and with inflation we will have destruction of our industrial and economic system.

I am not complaining because of the action of the committee with respect to the appropriation for the Treasury Department, but I was wondering whether or not, in making this appropriation, it was recognized that that Department has some two or three hundred million dollars in addition to that carried in the bill.

Mr. GLASS. As I have stated, we did not regard that, because it was not in the bill as it passed the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee on page 18, line 9.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was, under the subhead "Bureau of Internal Revenue", on page 20, line 24, after the word "violation", to strike out the colon and the following additional proviso:

S. C. 943); not to exceed $7,500 for cost of special instruction, including maintenance of students; rations or commutation thereof for cadets, petty officers, and other enlisted men, mileage and expenses allowed by law for officers; and traveling expenses for other persons traveling on duty under orders from the Treasury Department, including transportation of cadets, enlisted men, and applicants for enlistment, with subsistence and transfers en route, or cash in lieu thereof; expenses of recruiting for the Coast Guard, rent of rendezvous, and expenses of maintaining the same; advertising for and obtaining men and apprentice seamen and applicants for appointment as cadets; transportation and packing allowances for baggage or household effects of commissioned officers, warrant officers, and enlisted men; and including not to exceed $40,000 for the recreation, amusement, comfort, contentment, and health of the enlisted men of the Coast Guard, to be expended in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, $18,445,500.

The next amendment was, on page 29, line 19, after the word "service", to strike out "$130,000" and insert "$142,000", so as to read:

Additional airplanes: For additional airplanes and their equipment, including radio equipment, spare parts, and accessories, to be constructed or purchased in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, $654,000, to remain available until June 30, 1941.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I wish to inquire as to the necessity for such a large appropriation for airplanes for this particular organization. The appropriation carried by the House was $300,000. The bill before us now increases this amount to $654,000.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator that it is to cover two very expensive airplanes at two new stations, one on the Atlantic and one on the Pacific, which were provided for by law.

Mr. McKELLAR. They are rescue planes.

Mr. KING. Personally, I do not think there is any necessity for these large appropriations; but in view of the fact that Congress passed a law providing for the construction of the planes, obviously, the appropriation must be made, and the duty rests upon the Committee on Appropriations to carry out the provisions of the law.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator will yield, let me say the committee considered the matter very carefully. One of the planes is to be used on the Atlantic Ocean at Elizabeth City, I believe, for rescue work and the other on the Pacific Ocean for rescue work. The Department made out a very excellent case. Besides that, there was the law, and we had to appropriate.

Mr. KING. Let me inquire of the Senator from Tennessee whether an airplane such as is provided for by this item will cost more than $100,000?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; it will cost $177,000, and the reason for the high cost is that the plane must be made large so as to accommodate as many people as possible in case of rescue

Mr. KING. I cannot make any further comment, in view of the fact that the committee was merely carrying out the

The next amendment was, on page 40, line 19, after the ord "station", to strike out "$5,000,000" and insert '$3,000,000", so as to read:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment which has just been stated.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, at the outset I wish to express my appreciation of the statement made by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], in charge of the bill, concerning this item.

It is only within a relatively short period of time that it has become possible publicly to discuss venereal diseases. I think the chief credit for having broken down the taboo against the discussion of these menaces to the health of men, women, and children in the United States must be accorded to the distinguished Surgeon General of the Public Health Service, Dr. Parran.

I wish, first of all, and very briefly, to discuss the menace of syphilis in the United States. It has been all through the centuries a scourge of mankind. It is today one of the greatest killers in the United States. Syphilis is twice as prevalent as tuberculosis, it is 4 times as prevalent as diphtheria, and 60 times as prevalent as typhoid fever.

Thirty years ago medical science had inadequate weapons to deal with syphilis, but, because of the heroic efforts which have been made in research and in medical science, the medical profession is prepared today with weapons against syphilis which are equally as effective as those against any other serious disease.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. It might be of interest to the Senator from Wisconsin to know that on yesterday I talked with the director of the Public Health Bureau of the State of Indiana, and he advised me that it is costing the State of Indiana at the present time $500,000 a year to take care of the syphilitics in the institutions in Indiana.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I very much appreciate the Senator's suggestion and contribution to the discussion and consideration of this subject. I intended to refer in a few moments to the terrific costs of caring for what might be termed the end results of this terrible disease.

During the war Congress for the first time recognized the menace of venereal diseases, and created under the Chamberlain-Kahn Act a Division of Venereal Diseases in the Public Health Service. Senators who served in the Army, and those who are familiar with the situation, know that for the first time in history it had happened that the United States accepted into its armed forces men who were afflicted with venereal disease, and utilized the modern techniques for its treatment and cure, and thus enabled those who were victims of venereal disease to serve their country during the war.

As a result of the Kahn-Chamberlain Act there sprang up all over the United States activities on the part of the States and local governments in dealing with this problem; but, unfortunately, after the war was over the interest in this question died out, and the whole problem was shielded and shrouded in secrecy. It was not discussed. We did not carry on an effective campaign against venereal diseases, gonorrhea and syphilis, in the 1920's. The programs then inaugurated met the inevitable result of an economy drive and failed. But I contend, Mr. President, that it is clearly subject of proof that it was false economy, for today various institutions of the States and municipalities and counties of the United States are forced to care for those who contracted these diseases during the 1920's.

Syphilis runs a long course. It shows up in later years, 10, 15, or 20 years, after the initial infection, in insanity, heart disease, and locomotor ataxia.

I do not know whether or not Senators are aware of the fact that syphilis alone is responsible for 15 percent of the blindness in the United States today. It is responsible for one-eighth of the deaths resulting from heart disease in the United States. It is responsible for 10 percent of the insanity in the United States. It is estimated that there are 8,000 persons each year admitted to the private and public institutions for the care of insane, whose insanity can be traced to the disease of syphilis. Forty-three thousand beds in public and private institutions are occupied by patients who owe their insanity to syphilis. If we make only a very conservative estimate of the cost of this care as being $2 per bed, it runs to the staggering sum of $31,400,000 annually.

The blind in these institutions and on relief are a drain on the taxpayer. As the result of its studies it is estimated by the Social Security Board that the cost of the care of those who have become blind as the result of venereal disease is $10,000,000 a year to the various units of government in the United States.

Every year in the United States 60,000 babies are born with syphilis. Yet medical science is prepared today to prevent this shocking result if we will but encourage this unified program of attack and control upon the disease. From the day they are born with this terrible scourge and infection these 60,000 babies are candidates for institutions of a penal, a corrective, or of a hospital character.

Forty thousand people in the United States every year die from heart disease caused by syphilis. There are 160,000 persons in the United States with heart disease due to syphilis who are partially incapacitated.

Mr. President, I would not be appealing for the rejection of the committee amendment if the effort on the part of our country to deal with venereal disease were merely a theoretical experiment, but other countries have undertaken such programs of control and eradication. For a long period of time such a program has been going forward in the Scandinavian countries. In Sweden, for example, the campaign has been so effective that it is now becoming a rare disease, and last year only 273 cases of syphilis were reported in Sweden.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. As the Senator may know, my State of Kentucky has for years had one of the best public health services in the United States.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I have the pleasure of knowing the head of the Kentucky Public Health Service, and I share the Senator's admiration for him.

Mr. LOGAN. The head of the Kentucky Public Health Service told me that it was found, after a most exhaustive examination, that year before last there was an increase of 10,000 cases of syphilis in Kentucky, but if this program were continued with sufficient money, he could eradicate the disease from the State of Kentucky in the next few years. So I join with the Senator from Wisconsin in hoping that the amendment may be rejected.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I appreciate the contribution of the Senator from Kentucky.

I wish to say further, Mr. President, that in Great Britain, where a similar program has been inaugurated and carried forward, they have reduced the incidence of syphilis in their population by 60 percent.

There are 1,000,000 cases of gonorrhea each year in this country. Encouraging results are being obtained in new treatment for this disease which hold out hope that a more effective method may be soon available for the treatment of this serious disease.

At the last session of Congress a bill was passed—I had the honor of being the coauthor of the measure—which set up a comprehensive program for carrying on this activity against syphilis and gonorrhea in the United States. The bill then passed provided an authorization of $3,000,000 for the first year and $5,000,000 for the second year. The Bureau of the Budget recommended $3,000,000 for this year; but the House Subcommittee on Appropriations held very long and exhaustive hearings on the subject, and, after careful consideration, decided to recommend to the full committee and to the House of Representatives the entire authorization of $5,000,000.

I should like to quote briefly from the remarks of the chairman of the House Subcommittee on Appropriations, a man known to many Senators, a distinguished Member of the House, Representative Ludlow. On page 1856 of the RECORD of February 24, 1939, he had this to say in part:

We devoted an entire forenoon to a hearing on this subject when the room was filled with eminent medical authorities and social workers from all over the country. The viewpoint of women was expressed with clarity and fine vision by Mrs. Saidle Orr Dunbar, of Oregon, president of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, who represented 14,453 clubs, with a combined membership of 2,000,000 women. One of the most impressive aspects of the whole situation, as it was made clear in the testimony of the numerous speakers, was the disappearance of prudery in dealing with these social diseases and a recognition that they must be grappled with in a realistic way.

Mr. President, great credit for the support of this movement to combat venereal disease is also due to the American Social Hygiene Association, the conference of State and Territorial health officers, the American Legion, the Junior Chamber of Commerce, and many other organizations and public-spirited individuals all over the United States.

I quote further from Representative Luplow:

Are the States doing their part in combating venereal diseases? This is a proper and pertinent question, for a State that is not conscious of the problem within its gates and willing and anxious to do its part should not expect too large a share of the Federal Government's beneficence. The testimony shows that the States are alive to their responsibilities. On page 1307 of the printed hearings is a table showing what the States are doing in the fiscal year 1939 and what they promise to do during the fiscal year 1940. As against a total of $2,937,878 of Federal funds expected to be expended in the fiscal year 1939 under the La Follette-Bulwinkle Act, the States and local governmental units are providing $4,342,-329, and this does not include expenditures of nonofficial agencies. As against a Federal appropriation of $5,000,000 for the fiscal year 1940, the States and local units are committed to raise $5,000,000, matching the Federal money dollar for dollar. matching the Federal money dollar for dollar

The plans that have been set up by the States for a campaign on all fronts against venereal diseases furnished one of the impelling reasons that prompted our subcommittee in allowing the full amount of the authorization.

I will read one paragraph more from his speech, to be found on page 1856 of the RECORD:

Our subcommittee, always scrupulously careful in spending the Our subcommittee, always scrupulously careful in spending the people's money, believes that the States are far enough advanced in their preparations to be able to use $5,000,000 of Federal funds advantageously in a cooperative onslaught on this plague. With the States' own contribution of $5,000,000, a war chest of $10,000,000 will thus be made available to attack this insidious enemy, and very definite progress should be made in this important work during the next fiscal year.

Mr. President, I do not wish to burden the Senate with a long discussion of this matter, but I should like to say that there appear in the House hearings statements by publichealth officers of 40 or 42 of the 48 States. A perusal of them will demonstrate that each one of the health officers reporting for their various States felt there was urgent necessity that Congress should appropriate the full amount authorized for the second year of this campaign. They urge this action in order that the States may receive the help from the Federal Government which they are counting on, namely, $5.000.000.

I read briefly from General Pershing's speech to the American Social Hygiene Association. He said:

The ravages of syphilis in this country are so alarming that we can no longer shy at it, but must speak plainly and bring that we into the open so that all may understand, if we ever expect to stamp it out. It is appalling to think that nearly 7,000,000 of our people have syphilis—many of them innocent victims.

I interpolate at this point, Mr. President, that it is estimated that one-half of the syphilitic infections in this country are innocent infections.

Over 500,000 new cases come under treatement by physicians each year, besides the hundreds of thousands that never receive medical care.

Mark this:

If the entire population of the city of New York had this disease, the whole country would rise up as one man and demand that something be done about it. Why not rise up as one man and demand treatment for that number scattered throughout the

Mr. President, I wish also to point out briefly that some of the States have done excellent work, proceeding on their own initiative and by themselves. I may be pardoned, I think, if I say with a certain amount of pride that the State which I have the honor in part to represent in this body has carried on a program against these diseases since 1920. In 1920, when the program was authorized, 13 percent of the admissions to one of the hospitals for the insane in the State of Wisconsin were due to syphilitic infections. The State program has reduced those infections to 4 percent at the present time. The State has gone about as far as a single State can go. Because of the mobile character of our population, and because people are moving to and fro across this slice of a continent which is the United States of America, we cannot hope effectively to curb and control venereal diseases unless we fight the battle on 48 fronts. It can be fought on 48 fronts only under the leadership of the Federal Government.

Mr. President, in the name of the 60,000 babies who will be born with syphilis in the United States during the coming year; in the name of the youth of America, its young men and young women in the age group in which the highest incidence of venereal disease infection occurs; in the name, if you please, of national defense, I appeal for the rejection of the committee amendment, and urge that the program go forward until the battle shall have been won.

Mr. REYNOLDS and Mr. LOGAN addressed the Chair. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I beg to state initially that I shall unhesitatingly and with much pleasure support the contentions of the able Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]. I was deeply interested in what he had to say. I wish to remark in the beginning that I, for one, am happy that we are no longer the hypocrites and people without courage that we once were.

Today upon the floor of the United States Senate I listened to an unsually able Member of this body unhesitatingly, unafraid, and unblushingly employ the words "gonorrhea," "syphilis," and "the venereal scourge." Speaking of false modesty and hypocrisy, the probabilities are that if 30 years ago a Senator had employed those words upon the floor of the Senate in the presence of the public, he would have been ostracised from society. I am glad that at last the American people have had the courage to lift from their faces the veil of hypocrisy and bring into the open this subject, which is deserving of discussion and which long ago should have been discussed openly and aboveboard with the public of the United States of America. If 30 years ago the able Senator's father, with the same courage, had made the same speech upon the floor of this Chamber, we should not have at this hour, in this day, millions upon millions of persons who unfortunately are afflicted with this deadly disease.

I am reminded-and I am sure the Members of this body will be interested in this observation—that 30 years ago there lived in the city of New York a young man of fine physical proportions. He set out in life with the avowed objective of warning the boys and girls of America against the deadliness of venereal diseases. That man's name is Bernarr Macfadden. I may add, if I may be pardoned a personal reflection, that I shall always be indebted to Bernarr Macfadden, because through his publications I derived some very beneficial inspirations.

Thirty years ago Bernarr Macfadden, being desirous of warning the boys and girls of America against the deadliness of the venereal scourge, employed a writer to prepare a magazine article bringing to the attention of his readers, particularly the boys and girls of America, the danger they were facing on every hand. In that article he had to say virtually the same things, in a sense, that the Senator today had brought to the attention of the American public. As a result of his courage and his desire to protect the youth of America, he was rewarded by this, your Government and my Government, with a fine of $2,000 and a sentence to prison for a period of 2 years. I may add that a bill is now pending in this body which would erase the disgrace which was shoved upon his shoulders 30 years ago, when he was endeavoring to warn the youth of America against the scourge of venereal disease.

Mr. President, I shall support the efforts of the Senator to restore the House figures, and to make an appropriation of $5,000,000 instead of $3,000,000.

A late report informs us that the assets of the Navy of the United States of America are now $3,500,000,000, and that within a short time, with the completion of our present naval program, the Navy will have assets to the extent of $4,000,000,000. Those who lend me their ears at this time will recall that we have appropriated millions upon millions of dollars at this session of Congress for the purpose of providing armament to be utilized in the preparation of an adequate national defense, for defense purposes only, as I interpret the action. I ask the Members of this body, of what avail are the assets of the Navy of $3,500,000,000 unless we have strong, healthy, wholesome, muscular bodies to bring about the operation of the instruments of defense? By the appropriation of millions of dollars we are preparing all sorts of armaments; but I ask, of what avail are the millions upon millions of dollars' worth of armaments, totaling more than $7,000,-000,000, unless we have healthy, fine, muscular specimens of manhood to operate the instruments of national defense? For that reason, Mr. President, and being interested, as are all the Members of this body, in the preservation of the youth of our land, both boys and girls, it is with pleasure that I support the position of the Senator from Wisconsin.

In conclusion, Mr. President, I desire to bring to the attention of this body a statement in a sense parallel to the statement made by the able Senator a moment ago in his interesting remarks. I refer to an article which was published on the editorial page of the Stillwater (Minn.) Gazette. This article is from the pen of Bernarr Macfadden:

AN UNPARALLELED TRAGEDY-FAILURE TO PROTECT OUR YOUTH

For generations the English-speaking countries suffered beyond the power of tongue or pen to fittingly describe, because of the the power of tongue or pen to fittingly describe, because of the then prevailing prudery.

The prurient conception of our bodily functions gave us an obscene outlook upon life generally.

The body was vile and unholy, and we were introduced to the mysteries of life with an unclean attitude toward everything associated with our physiological functions.

Yet the Good Book tells us to "glorify God in your body"; that "unto the pure all things are pure; but unto them that are defiled and unbelieving is nothing pure."

It is plain, therefore, that we are out of harmony with theological teachings in assuming such an attitude toward our bodily structure.

And what has been the disastrous result of this mystery with which we have allowed our youth to grow up to adult life? They learn little or nothing of the physiological laws of sex * the information they acquire is usually of a filthy nature, from companions who have an unclean idea of what should be the most divine relations of human life.

The very source of life itself is made contemptible and abominable.

Until recently even our literature could never speak of pregnancy, and a newborn babe in a family was brought by the stork or found under a raspberry bush. Think of the vile results of such an attitude.

And it is only recently that our youth has had the faintest opportunity to learn anything about the most deadly of all diseases * * the venereal scourge. He had to acquire the devastating disease before he could learn anything about it.

And until very recent years the treatment for this disease was worse than the disease itself. The treatment of the disease brought on paresis, locomotor ataxia, and many other complaints that made life but little more than a satanic inferno. * * *

life but little more than a satanic inferno.

And when I look back—

Says this eminent publisher, who 30 years ago began to warn the boys and girls, the youth of America. He continues:

And when I look back at my publishing career during the period when I was solely a propagandist with one idea only—and that to help the youth of the land build up a fine physique—and recall the experience that I had in trying to warn them against syphilis and other allied complaints * * * I remember poignsyphilis and other allied complaints * * *. I remember antly the thousands of letters that came to metragedies—hundreds of them. I remember poign-

A number came as a last sacrament, damning the environments in which they grew to manhood, with the statement to the effect that they expected to get out of it all through suicide.

And with all this evidence before me a story was written by a well-known author for the one purpose of warning youth against these degenerating diseases. I was 35 years ahead of my time—but my efforts at that time were rewarded with a 2-year sentence in the penitentiary and a $2,000 fine.

Says Mr. Macfadden

President Taft canceled the sentence, and I am still hoping that the Congress of these United States will apologize to me and return the $2,000 fine I had to pay on that occasion.

Merely because he undertook to warn and to save the youth of America, as today eminent Senators in this Chamber are endeavoring to do.

I bow in reverent thankfulness to President Roosevelt for taking the lid off this sewer that has descrated human life to such a tragic extent.

Although throughout the entire country there is publicity which is accomplishing untold good, there is entirely too much commercialism about it. Many people are being driven into unnecessary medical examinations; they are made unnecessarily fearful; and there is by no means the educational procedure necessary to protect our young people against this disease through antiseptic measures. Let us hope, now that this subject has opened up, that an educational procedure will be carried on which will give every youth the information essential to guarantee protection against this fearful scourge.—Bernarr Macfadden.

I conclude, Mr. President, by stating again that I shall with pleasure support the recommendations and desires of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE].

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I have only a few remarks to make. I share the views of those who believe that the United States Government should reduce its expenditures, but I believe that if we should look through all the expenditures which are made we could not find a single one that should not be reduced in preference to the appropriation for this particular purpose.

The reason for appropriation has been made plain by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. La Follette] and the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], but there is one other thought I desire to express. Last year when the Senator from Wisconsin secured the legislation to which he has referred there was an authorization for an appropriation of $3,000,000 the first year and $5,000,000 the second year.

I speak now of my own State, assuming that many of the other States followed the same policy.

We have a very able man at the head of our public health service in Kentucky. He mapped out a program and at once commenced his work with one object in view, and that was to make Kentucky, if possible, the first State to eradicate this terrible plague which has been referred to. He made his pattern; he is ready to go forward; but now the Congress of the United States that told him to go forward and to do this very thing says, "No; we are going to stop you; we are not going to make the appropriation which we advised you we would make next year."

So I very sincerely hope that the amendment reported by the Senate committee will be rejected for the reasons which have been given.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I wish to speak in opposition to the amendment recommended and reported by the Committee on Appropriations. The State department of health in Connecticut, following the program which has been so well explained by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Logan], extended a program throughout all the Connecticut cities, relying as they then did upon the authorization contained in the existing Federal legislation. The success of that program, Mr. President, can be appreciated when it is stated that in a State of nearly 1,700,000 people last year there were only 24 new cases of syphilis and only 1,300 new cases of gonorrhea. These diseases have been practically eradicated. Enormous forward-looking steps have been taken. A reduction of 40 percent in this particular allotment at this particular time will work very great hardship upon the furtherance and development of the plan.

I do not share with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] any sense of obligation to Mr. Macfadden. I do recognize that we here are undertaking to eradicate grasshoppers, chinch bugs, pink boll weevil worms, Dutch elm disease, and I even find an amendment on our desks which seeks to eradicate some unnamed new disease attacking elms in the State of Ohio alone, apparently.

Mr. President, if there is any one worth-while sanitation move to which the Congress can properly be committed it is the eradication of the scourge which has been so well described in the Senate this morning. I speak, therefore, in support of the position of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], who has so ably presented the situation, and I ask that the committee amendment be rejected.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, at the outset of my statement on this bill I told the Senate that there was a pretty even division of opinion in the committee, since which time there have been so many representations by high medical authority that I am not disposed especially to insist upon the pending amendment. In justice to the committee, however, I wish to say that the committee conformed to the Budget estimate. The House, in a surprising way, exceeded the Budget estimate by $2,000,000. We accepted the Budget estimate in order that the matter might go to conference and be considered deliberately and not in a whirl of oratory. But the Senate can do as it pleases about the matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee on page 40, line 19.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of the Mint-Office of Director of the Mint," on page 44, after line 20, to insert:

Medals to Mrs. Richard Aldrich and posthumously to Anna Bouligny: For carrying out the provisions of the act entitled "An act authorizing the President to present gold medals to Mrs. Richard Aldrich and posthumously to Anna Bouligny," approved June 20, 1938 (Private, No. 644, 75th Cong., 3d sess.), $1,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Title II-Post Office Department-Salaries in Bureaus and Offices," on page 57, line 14, to increase the appropriation under the office of the First Assistant Postmaster General from $387,000 to $390,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 57, line 16, to increase the appropriation under the office of the Second Assistant Postmaster General from $578,000 to $580,520.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 57, line 18, to increase the appropriation under the office of the Third Assistant Postmaster General from $792,000 to $798,560.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 57, line 22, to increase the appropriation under the office of the Solicitor for the Post Office Department from $90,000 to $95,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 57, at the end of line 24, to increase the appropriation under the office of the purchasing agent from $46,500 to $47,240.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, while I was absent from the Chamber a Senate committee amendment, on page 4, relating to the Alley Dwelling Authority was adopted, I believe without discussion. I should like to make some inquiries of the Senator from Virginia in reference to that item. I wish to say first of all that the Alley Dwelling Authority expending money for housing is the only governmental activity of which I know that is doing away with slums and at the same time is not providing subsidies for the tenants who occupy the houses constructed by the Authority.

Personally, I have felt that in view of our large expenditures for housing, in connection with which subsidies are to be paid for 60 years, it was a very healthy situation to have carried on here in the District of Columbia this experiment. which appears to have made good progress, of buying dilapidated and broken-down and unsanitary houses and converting them into modern homes for slum dwellers and renting them or selling them to private owners without a subsidy.

Personally, I have felt that carrying on the Government's two housing activities has been most wholesome. I refer to this one, which, so far as I have been able to learn up to date, has been most successful in providing low rentals without subsidies, and the other plan, under the United States Housing Authority, in connection with which we are committed to subsidies on all our housing activities.

I should like to inquire from the Senator from Virginia the reason for the elimination of this appropriation.

Mr. GLASS. The reason was that the committee regarded the activities of this agency as purely speculative. They have not built any houses.

Mr. WALSH. Have they not remodeled houses?

Mr. GLASS. No; and, besides that, they had $8,000,000 from other sources, and we did not think they ought to have this additional sum.

Mr. WALSH. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], who is a member of the District Committee, if the Alley Dwelling Authority has not been remodeling and building houses for some time. When the housing bill was before us I displayed on the walls of the Senate Chamber a large number of photographs of houses that the Alley Dwelling Authority had remodeled. Mind you, I do not care whether or not we go into this housing project in the District, so far as my argument is concerned; but it seems to me a housing activity which does not ask for a subsidy or require a subsidy, by which the money is borrowed and returned to the Public Treasury, ought to be encouraged as against one for which subsidies are provided.

Mr. GLASS. As a matter of fact, the Alley Dwelling Authority clears out slums and improves adjoining properties; and they are now proposing to build hotels and garages, and not dwellings at all.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, besides that, the Alley Dwelling Authority has already secured a loan of $6,600,000 from the United States Housing Authority and are negotiating for a loan of $8,400,000 more. They are going ahead.

Mr. WALSH. Does the Senator from Tennessee state on this floor that I have been entirely misinformed by the Director of this organization? I want him driven out of office if he has lied and falsified. I want to know if they have failed to do anything with the money they have borrowed.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think the Senator has been misinformed; and if he will read the hearings as they appear on pages 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, and 23, I think he will come to the same conclusion.

Mr. WALSH. They have already had $6,000,000?

Mr. McKELLAR. Six million six hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. WALSH. Have they remodeled any houses?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; they have remodeled houses and built some houses with the $6,600,000, and they expect to do more remodeling and more building with the loan of $8,400,-000 when they get it from the United States Housing Authority.

Mr. WALSH. Do they claim that their assets in property held today are in excess of their loans?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not think they do. I will read briefly from the hearings:

Senator TAFT. What, specifically, would you use this $1,000,000 for?
Mr. IHLDER. We have here a schedule. Before we get to that, to answer the question asked previously, here is one of the areas where we are putting these people of small incomes [indicating].
Senator McKellar. Before you get to that, when was your last report?

Mr. IHLDER. It is for the year ending June 30, 1938.

Then Mr. Ihlder says he will send the report to the committee, but I do not think it is in this hearing.

Senator McKellar. What do you do with the money when you sell a piece of property?

Mr. IHLDER. It is added to our capital and used again; but each year whatever balance we have is reappropriated by Congress. That goes into our balance and is reappropriated each year.

Senator TAFT. Reappropriated here or somewhere else?

Mr. IHLDER. Reappropriated by Congress.
Senator TAFT. Is it reappropriated here or somewhere else?
Mr. IHLDER. In the independent offices bill.

Senator TAFT. How much of an appropriation have you in that bill?

Mr. IHLDER What does that amount to this year, Mr. Ring?

Mr. Ring. I think it is about $60,000. Of this $11,000 is unexpended balance as of June 30, 1939, after payment of all expenses; $50,000 is anticipated receipts from present properties during 1940.

Mr. WALSH. I desire to go on record as in favor of encouraging doing away with slums through loaning public funds that are repaid. I should like to see the experiment carried on, in contrast with the policy we have adopted of spending large sums of money in the way of grants and gifts, and giving subsidies for 60 years.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am inclined to think-and I am sure the Senator from Tennessee will forgive me if I make an inaccurate statement—that the Senator from Tennessee was in error in stating that the Alley Dwelling Authority has received or expended $5,000,000, or any sum in excess of substantially $800,000.

My recollection is that a number of years ago Congress appropriated substantially $800,000 for the purpose of slum clearance and getting rid of some of the alleys in which crime was regnant, and which are provocative of disease. My understanding is that that entire amount has been expended in the purchase of a number of properties containing alley dwellings that were infested, and in places that were very offensive to the residents of surrounding parts of the city. My understanding is that the Alley Dwelling Authority obtained an authorization for a loan from the Housing Authority, but they have not yet secured the loan, so that the only money expended to date was $800,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. No; if the Senator will permit me, the Alley Dwelling Authority have already secured one loan of $6,600,000 and have applied for a second loan of $8,000,000.

If the Senator will look at the hearings on pages 23 and 24, he will see what progress they are making:

In our two lowest-rent housing projects, containing in all 41 dwellings, 13 families are now receiving assistance from public or private agencies. Two families formerly receiving relief are now self-supporting. All but one of these families were receiving assistance when we accepted them as tenants, for in these lowest-rent projects the Alley Dwelling Authority has no bottom income limit, only an upper limit. The exception is the tenant who is receiving an old-age pension, which she was not receiving when accepted as

On page 24 the Senator will find a list of the houses that have been rented out to relief tenants. So I take it that when the statement is made that certain families are selfsupporting, it merely means that the Government pays this money to the tenants, and the tenants repay it to the Government in the form of rent.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, my information confirms what the Senator from Utah says, that the capital of the Alley Dwelling Authority is $865,000; and they report to me that-

The Authority has reclaimed 14 squares, taking only as much as is necessary in each case. In the course of this reclamation, it demolished 220 substandard houses in alleys and on adjacent lots. On 5 sites it has built 112 good dwellings in place of hovels—

That, in the face of what has been said here, is astounding to mein 4 squares storage garages and workshops, in keeping with neighborhood character and needs. Two sites have been sold at a profit of $11,555 after slum dwellings were removed. The Authority has developed another site as a parking lot, leased to a private operator, pending final action by Congress as to the location of a Federal department building. This site could have been sold at a profit of 45 percent after slum buildings were razed and the lots assembled into a usable parcel, but in that case the site would have been developed by buildings whose purchase and demolition would have been costly to the Government. Two small vacant alley sites are on the market. alley sites are on the market.

The Authority has done this work on a cost basis, its operation paying all expenses.

I ask that this memorandum from the Director of the Alley Dwelling Authority be printed in the RECORD in connection with what I have said.

There being no objection, the memorandum was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MEMORANDUM ON LOAN TO THE ALLEY DWELLING AUTHORITY

1. Authorization for loans of $1,000,000 a year for 5 years is contained in the amendments to the Alley Dwelling Act, approved

June 25, 1938, less than 1 year ago.

These loans are to bear interest at the going Federal rate. There is no subsidy.

2. Budget Bureau approved a $1,000,000 item for the first loan. It was included in estimates for the Treasury Department, fiscal year 1940.

3. The House approved half of the requested amount—that is, $500,000.

4. The Senate Appropriations Committee cut out the whole amount, saying:

"It is the feeling of the committee that ample funds will be available to the Authority to enable them to demonstrate what they can accomplish without an additional loan of $500,000."

This reference to a source of funds relates to a loan secured from the United States Housing Authority for $6,600,000 to build low-rent houses. An additional $8,400,000 is earmarked. These amounts, however, can be used only on low-cost sites and for the construction of low-rent houses on those sites. They are not available for reclamation of the worst slums in congested areas.

5. Congress has provided two methods of financing the Alley Dwelling Authority's work in order that it may be done effectively. One provides for carrying out the instructions that Congress gave to the Alley Dwelling Authority specifically—that is, to rid Washington of its inhabited alley slums. The other enables the Alley Dwelling Authority to borrow from the United States Housing Authority for low-rent housing on cheap sites. These two methods supplement each other. The second does not take the place of the first. the first.

The first is the more difficult. It is for this that the present an is asked. The two methods are:

(a) Self-liquidating slum reclamation projects financed by interest-bearing loans.

(b) Housing for low-income families financed by loans and subsidies from the United States Housing Authority.

It must be emphasized that the self-liquidating projects cannot be undertaken except by the means provided by Congress; namely, the interest-bearing loans. Only these loans can be used to reclaim the worst slum areas, many of which moreover are unsuitable for housing development. housing development.

housing development.

Until these slums are cleared away no real progress has been made.
6. Consequently it will not be possible, to quote the committee's report, for the Alley Dwelling Authority to show what it can accomplish in one phase of its work by use of money that is restricted to another phase. Both phases must be carried on if Washington is to be cleared of its slums.
7. Activities of the Alley Dwelling Authority: With its capital of $865.000 the Authority has reclaimed 14 squares, taking only as much as is necessary in each case. In the course of this reclamation it demolished 220 substandard houses in alleys and on adjacent lots.

On 5 sites it has built 112 good dwellings in place of howels: in 4 on 5 sites it has built 112 good dwellings in place of hovels; in 4 squares storage garages and workshops in keeping with neighborhood character and needs. Two sites have been sold at a profit of $11,555 after slum dwellings were removed. The Authority has developed another site as a parking lot, leased to a private operator pending final action by Congress as to the location of a Federal department building. This site could have been sold at a profit of 45 percent after slum buildings were razed and the lots assembled into a usable parcel, but, in that case the site would have been into a usable parcel, but in that case the site would have been developed by buildings whose purchase and demolition would have been costly to the Government. Two small vacant alley sites are on the market.

8. The Authority has done this work on a cost basis, its operation paying all expenses. It has received:

Initial appropriation (1934) __ Later allocations (from Emergency Relief Act of 1935) ____ 365, 000

It has had no additional capital since 1937.

9. Dwellings built by the Authority fit their neighborhoods. Its lowest-rent dwellings cost for construction $3,400; lowest rents in two groups are $24.50 and $25 for a two-story brick house with four two groups are $24.50 and $25 for a two-story brick house with four rooms and bath. Other dwellings, with more rooms or with apartment services, have higher rents. All rents cover total costs, the rent basis including interest on total capital investment at 3 percent, amortization of buildings, replacements, maintenance, operation, general administration, and full city taxes.

10. Families of the lowest income are among the tenants of the lowest-rent dwellings. In two projects, containing 41 houses, are 13 families who receive assistance from public or private agencies—public relief, aid to the blind, old-age pension, W. P. A., Family Service Society, American Red Cross, private social settlement, and a church.

The Alley Dwelling Authority therefore reaches the lowest-income groups. The tenants who pay their rents from public or private relief funds occupy these houses because no other decent dwellings are available at lower rents.

11. From the beginning the Alley Dwelling Authority has maintained that rent should be based upon cost. This means automatic pressure to keep costs down so rents may be kept down. In accordance with this policy, it agreed with the United States Housing Authority that rents in dwellings constructed with U. S. H. A. loans should be on a cost basis, and that the subsidies should be used to reduce rents in terms of individual family needs as these needs are demonstrated. In this, as in the other phase of its work, the Alley Dwelling Authority is following a sound, constructive policy in which Congress may take pride. MARCH 14, 1939.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield to me?

Mr. WALSH. Let me say—and then I am going to stopthat I suggest that somebody look into this activity and see if it is what it is represented to be, because, I repeat, that if we are able to continue this work and get rid of subsidies we ought to give consideration to it, instead of increasing our appropriations by $100,000,000 a year in subsidies,

Mr. GLASS. We do not exactly get rid of subsidies, because when the Alley Dwelling Authority has built a few houses it has rented them to persons on relief.

Mr. McKELLAR. And the Government is paying the rentals, adding just that much to the subsidy.

Mr. WALSH. Can it be said it is a subsidy because persons on relief have happened to be the tenants? I think they are the classes of persons who ought to be in the remodeled buildings instead of policemen and firemen and school teachers, who are getting subsidies.

Mr. McKELLAR. If they were paying rent, it would be a paying transaction; but as it is, we are furnishing the houses and paying the rent.

Now, let us look at page 19 of the report of the hearings:

How much have you invested? Mr. IHLDER. At the present time we have $865,000.

That is besides the amount they are getting from the Housing Authority.

Did Congress put up all of that? Mr. IHLDER. The whole $865,000. Senator Bankhead. Out of the Treasury? Mr. IHLDER. It has come from various sources.

I wish to say to the Senator from Utah that if he will look at the hearings he will find that we made a very thorough investigation into this subject, and I came to the conclusion that this was a real-estate proposition, and that we should not appropriate this money at this time.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, not being a member of the Committee on Appropriations, I am not familiar with the testimony given before the committee and just a few moments ago I received a copy of the hearings. An examination of the same does not show that the $6,500,000, or any part thereof, was received by the Alley Dwelling Authority, nor have any expenditures been made by the Authority based upon the expectation of receiving the amount referred to. Reference has been made to the $17,000,000 which was to be obtained from the National Housing Administration. Obviously, no part of that has been paid to the Alley Dwelling Authority and no commitments have been made by it based upon the expectation of receiving such sum. My understanding is that $865,000 was appropriated several years ago for the purpose of getting rid of some of the slums of Washington. Mr. Ihlder, in charge of the Alley Dwelling Authority, as I am advised, has expended this sum, and, so far as I know, the results have been satisfactory. My information is that an application was made by the Authority for a loan of $6,500,000, but I am not familiar with the terms under which the loan was to be received and the purposes for which it was to be expended.

With respect to the $865,000, my information is that a number of houses have been constructed and rented-some to persons in the employ of the Government; that some of the property acquired by the Authority has not been used for residential purposes but it is in the hands of the Authority and it has a value somewhat in excess of the amount which was paid for the same.

With my present views, I am in favor of the appropriation asked for, which was carried in the House bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The next amendment was, on page 62, line 23, to increase the appropriation for compensation of assistant postmasters from $6,950,000 to $7,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 63, line 11, after the word "services", to strike out "$7,700,000" and insert "$7,-750,000", so as to read:

Clerks, third-class post offices: For allowances to third-class post offices to cover the cost of clerical services, $7,750,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 63, line 24, after the word "carfare", to strike out "$1,340,000" and insert "$1,350,-000", so as to read:

Carfare and bicycle allowance: For carfare and bicycle allowance, including special-delivery carfare, $1,350,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 64, line 7, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$39,000" and insert "$50,300", and in line 9, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$53,000" and insert "$60,000", so as to read:

Domestic Air Mail Service: For the inland transportation of mail by aircraft, as authorized by law, and for the incidental expenses thereof, including not to exceed $50,300 for supervisory officials and clerks at air-mail transfer points, travel expenses, and not to exceed $60,000 for personal services in the District of Columbia, $17,930,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 65, line 7, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$31,500" and insert "$33,050", so as to read:

Railroad transportation and mail messenger service: For inland transportation by railroad routes and for mail messenger service, $101,990,000: Provided, That separate accounts be kept of the amount expended for mail passenger service: Provided further, That there may be expended from this appropriation for personal services in the District of Columbia not exceeding the sum of $23,000 to carry out the provisions of section 5 of the act of July 28, 1916 (39 U. S. C. 562) (the space basis act), and not exceeding the sum of $33,050 to carry out the provisions of section 214 of the act of February 28, 1925 (39 U. S. C. 826) (cost ascertainment).

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 66, line 12, after the word "offices", to strike out "$450,000" and insert "$460,000". so as to read:

Railway Mail Service, miscellaneous expenses: For rent, light, heat, fuel, telegraph, miscellaneous and office expenses, telephone service, badges for railway postal clerks, rental of space for terminal railway post offices for the distribution of mails when the furnishing of space for such distribution cannot, under the Postal Laws and Regulations, properly be required of railroad companies without additional compensation, and for equipment and miscellaneous items necessary to terminal railway post offices, $460,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Office of the Third Assistant Postmaster General", on page 67, line 19, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$2,000" and insert "$3,000"; and, at the top of page 68, to insert "to be expended in the discretion of the Postmaster General and accounted for on his certificate notwithstanding the provisions of any other law", so as to read:

Manufacture and distribution of stamps and stamped paper: For manufacture of adhesive postage stamps, special-delivery stamps, books of stamps, stamped envelopes, newspaper wrappers, postal cards, and for coiling of stamps, and including not to exceed $22,500 for pay of agent and assistants to examine and distribute stamped envelopes and newspaper wrappers, and for expenses of agency, $4,599,000: Provided, That not to exceed $3,000 of this appropriation may be available for expenses, including the cost of preparing an appropriate display frame of United States postage stamps for exhibition purposes, of delegates designated from the Post Office Department by the Postmaster General to attend the British Philatelic Congress to be held in London, England, during the fiscal year 1940, to be expended in the discretion of the Postmaster General and accounted for on his certificate notwithstanding the provisions of any other law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Office of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General," on page 71, line 16, after the word "offices", to strike out "$10,400,000" and insert "$10,600,000", so as to read:

Rent, light, fuel, and water: For rent, light, fuel, and water, for first-, second-, and third-class post offices, and the cost of advertising for lease proposals for such offices, $10,600,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All the committee amendments have been acted on. The bill is before the Senate and open to further amendment.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, on behalf of the committee I have been instructed to present the amendment which lies on the desk with respect to the transportation of so-called penalty mail. I ask that the amendment be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert in the proper place the following provision:

SEC. 6. On and after July 1, 1939, no executive department or inde-pendent establishment of the Government shall transmit through pendent establishment of the Government shall transmit through the mail, free of postage, any book, report, periodical, bulletin, pamphlet, list, or other article or document, except official correspondence, unless a request therefor has been previously received by such department or independent establishment or such transmission is required by law. For each quarter, beginning with the quarter commencing July 1, 1939, the head of each independent establishment and executive department (other than the Post Office Department) shall submit to the Postmaster General an estimate of the number of pieces and the weight of the mail matter that the independent shall submit to the Postmaster General an estimate of the number of pieces and the weight of the mail matter that the independent establishment or department will be required to transmit free of postage during such quarter, and he shall also certify to the Postmaster General at the end of each such quarter that nothing was transmitted through the mail free of postage by the independent establishment or department in violation of the provisions of this paragraph: Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed to prohibit the mailing free of postage of lists of agricultural bulletins or of lists of public documents which are offered for sale by the Superintendent of Documents.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, in explanation of the amendment I may say that the transportation in the mails free of charge of the communications which are sent out by the various departments, by Members of Congress, by newspapers, and by those persons who are interested in the education of the blind, has always been a matter of dispute and discussion from the time the Post Office Department was first established. There is a common impression, which is altogether erroneous, that the franking privilege of Members of Congress has been the chief cause of the financial burden upon the Post Office Department; but, as the executive agencies and departments have grown during the past 25 or 30 years, there has been a constant increase in the amount of printed and mimeographed matter which has been carried free through the mails.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield. Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator at this time state the figures as to how much is carried free of charge for the legislative branch of the Government, Representatives and Senators, and how much is carried for the various departments?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I shall be very glad to do that.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think it would be very appropriate at

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. BONE. I should be glad to have the Senator, while he is supplying the figures to which the Senator from Tennessee has referred, also indicate the amount of mail carried free for newspapers for which no postage whatever is paid, weekly newspapers, which are transported free of charge.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I shall place the figures in the RECORD. Perhaps the best way to do that would be to refer to pages 4 to 7 of the hearings before the House Committee on Appropriations on the Post Office appropriation bill at the present session of Congress.

On page 4 it is shown that in 1928 the estimated loss to the Government through the transportation free of charge through the mails of materials sent into the mails by the Government executive departments was $8,537,730. Ten years later, in 1938, that figure had increased to $35,690,807.

While the loss to the Government on the transportation of executive mail had increased from eight and a half million to thirty-five and a half million, the loss to the Government on the transportation of congressional mail had decreased. The estimated figure for 1928 was $909,864 for the congressional franks. In 1938 it had dropped to $779,369.

In the meantime it should be borne in mind—and this is in answer to the inquiry of the Senator from Washington-that newspapers have been carried free in the mails in the counties in which they have been published. The estimated cost of that transportation in 1928 was $745,451. In 1938, 10 years later, the estimated cost was $637,150.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is a loss on newspapers which pay no postage within the counties in which they are published? Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. What is the loss, if any, on newspapers which do pay postage outside of the counties?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. In that connection it may be interesting to state an incident in our early history: When the Post Office Department was created in the original Colonies, Benjamin Franklin, the publisher of a newspaper in Philadelphia, was made the colonial Postmaster General, and from that time on newspapers have been subsidized, as it were, by the Government, so far as transportation in the mails has been concerned. The argument advanced was that it is a perfectly proper public policy to make information available to the public, and with that argument I quite agree. The second-rate mail charge, according to the Division of Cost Ascertainment in the Post Office Department, is very much less than the cost of transportation. The actual figures I do not have at hand.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, has the Senator the figures as to the loss on second-class mail? If he would take the figures as to the loss on that class of mail and deduct the $35,000,000 carried for the departments and for the Congress he would arrive at about the figure representing the loss entailed by the carriage of newspapers and books and other classes of second-class mail.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator is quite right. Of course, it should be pointed out that newspapers and books which are transported at the second-class rate are ordinarily sent in response to requests.

Mr. McKELLAR. At less than cost.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Yes; they are carried at less than cost. The Post Office Department owes a service to the public, and the Government does not begin to charge what the service costs. It should be borne in mind, however, considering the amount of the subsidy which is given to the public at large in the transportation of the mails, that it is necessary for the Congress to appropriate large sums to employ the clerks and the carriers to handle this mail, and by every ton of waste material which is transported through the mail the cost to the Government is increased, and at the same time, of course, the cost is increased not only in the Post Office Department but in the various departments which prepare

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. HAYDEN. About 2 years ago the Senate Committee on Appropriations had a hearing relative to the cost of conducting the operations of the Post Office Department. I have some figures from the hearings which took place at that time, which are approximately correct at the present time, showing a total loss on second-class mail matter of $90,000,000 a year. The first loss recorded in the hearings is about $16,000,000 a year on carrying magazines. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Barkley] will remember that when we were in the House of Representatives together, Mr. Burleson, the then Postmaster General, pointed out to Congress that there was a loss of over $30,000,000 in carrying magazines through the mails. I think the subsidy to the Curtis Publishing Co. at that time alone was over $1,000,000 a year. We sought to correct the situation by requiring a charge, not for the reading matter in the magazine, but for its advertising pages, and as a result of the reform enacted at that time about one-half of the $30,000,000

The figures I have before me show that the loss for 1936 in carrying magazines was $16,000,000. It is probably a

The zone rate loss on carrying daily newspapers in 1936 was $30,000,000. For carrying newspapers other than daily newspapers throughout the country the loss was $12,000,000. On the free list in county publications the loss was $8,-000,000. That is a service which has been rendered, as the Senator from Wyoming states, from the beginning, and in the beginning it was sound public policy. I do not think Benjamin Franklin should be criticized for creating that service. At that time a great portion of the population was illiterate. We were establishing a new democratic form of government. To assure a well-informed electorate was worth the money expended.

Today, with widespread popular education and the other avenues for conveying intelligence, a very different situation exists. So the subsidy can now hardly be justified.

When we include all other publications, aside from newspapers and magazines, that cause a loss of $23,000,000 a year, the loss or subsidy involved in carrying second-class mail matter totals about $90,000,000 a year.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I may add to what the Senator from Arizona has so pertinently said, that at a time when we are continuing the 3-cent rate upon first-class mail paid by the ordinary citizen in the transportation of ordinary correspondence it is particularly out of line to continue these subsidies if we can reasonably avoid them.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand the amendment does not in any way touch subsidies. The subsidies referred to by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] are subsidies enjoyed by private publications and magazines or newspapers, whatever they may be. So long as those subsidies are being continued, I wonder whether on the floor of the Senate we ought to cut off the right of the Government to send out its own publications? I realize there are probably many departmental bulletins and publications-

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, let me interrupt the Senator at that point. My amendment does not propose to cut off the transportation through the mails of any legitimate item of public information. The proposed amendment, which has been unanimously endorsed by the committee, was drafted in such a manner as to protect that right. I should be the last person who would urge a deprivation of the public of full information which they are entitled to receive from their various departments. But every Member of Congress, every newspaper publisher, and, I should say, if I were to restrain myself from exaggeration, practically one-third of the population knows that a constant and increasing stream of printed and mimeographed matter proceeding from the city of Washington and issuing from Government offices, which is carried through the mails, handled by the clerks, handled by the letter carriers, when received is promptly deposited, without opening, in the wastebaskets of those to whom it is sent.

Mr. BARKLEY. That may be true in many cases. Of course, if we are not to send out these publications, we ought to quit printing them. Their printing has been authorized by the Congress.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I may say to the Senator that the President has endeavored to obtain that very result, and last October he issued an Executive order by which there was created the Interdepartmental Committee on Printing and Processing, the object of which was to contribute toward the same objective as that for which the committee is proposing the pending amendment. I shall ask that that Executive order may be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Walsh in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Executive order is as follows:

EXECUTIVE ORDER

ESTABLISHING THE INTERDEPARTMENTAL COMMITTEE ON PRINTING AND PROCESSING

By virtue of the authority vested in me as President of the United States, it is ordered as follows:

1. There is hereby established the Interdepartmental Committee on Printing and Processing, to be composed of representatives of each of the following-named departments and agencies, and such other departments or agencies as the committee itself may des-

Bureau of the Budget. Government Printing Office. Department of Agriculture. Department of the Interior. Treasury Department. Department of Commerce. Social Security Board. United States Tariff Commission. Post Office Department.

Each department or agency represented on the committee shall have one representative, who shall be designated by the head

3. Pending selection of a permanent chairman by the committee, the representative of the Bureau of the Budget shall serve as its temporary chairman.

4. The members of the committee shall be officers or employees of the department, independent establishment, or agency which they represent and shall serve without additional compensation.

5. The committee shall promulgate rules and regulations relating to the establishment, coordination, and maintenance of uniform policies and procedures, consistent with law, for the efficient and economical utilization of printing and processing in the executive branch of the Government. branch of the Government.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, October 29, 1938.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, the Senator knows that the departments are now printing books in halftones and colors, and the expenditure for such books on the part of the Government has gotten to be preposterous. The proposed amendment is not intended to cut off any legitimate departmental publication, but to stop the foolishness of printing in colora most expensive form of printing-stuff 90 percent of which is consigned to the wastebasket when it is received.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the point I am making is that the amendment does not affect the publication of any of these documents. It only prevents them being mailed free of postage.

Mr. GLASS. If the Post Office Department would not send them free the departments would stop publishing them.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not one of those who believe that the only intelligent matter that is printed by the Government of the United States emanates from the two branches of Congress. The amendment does not in any way restrict our sending out franked matter, whether it is requested or not. Recently we have heard discussion about restriction of the franking privilege. The amendment does not restrict that privilege. There are many documents printed by Government departments aside from highly colored and illustrated ones, that are of benefit to the people. The people generally do not happen to know what those documents are. Many of those who receive lists of the documents for sale by the Superintendent of Documents in the Government Printing Office may not be able to purchase them. There is an exemption of farmers' bulletins.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, the amendment provides for exemption of farmers' bulletins?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes. Lists of books which are for sale by the Superintendent of Documents in the Government Printing Office are sent out. But what I have in mind is the mass of people who do not know anything about those lists and probably cannot purchase the books at the price asked by the Printing Office. Many of the publications would be serviceable if persons desiring them could obtain them. I am not in favor of any Government department loading a mass of documents on people whether they want them or not. I imagine they have lists of institutions, or perhaps persons, to whom they send bulletins and magazines, whatever it is they issue. The only reservation made in the amendment offered by the Senator is that lists of Farmers' Bulletins and lists of books and pamphlets for sale by the Government Printing Office may be exempted.

I have prepared an amendment which I should like to read, and see if the Senator from Wyoming is not willing to accept it. Personally I think that it would have been better if a joint committee had made a survey of the whole matter; and brought in a report and a recommendation, rather than to attempt to deal with the matter on the floor of the Senate in the haste of passing an appropriation bill, but, inasmuch as the amendment is offered, and we have to deal with it, I have prepared a perfecting amendment which I should like to have added at the end of the Senator's amendment to the committee amendment, if the Senator will accept it. My perfecting amendment is as follows, to be added at the end of the amendment of the Senator from Wyoming:

Provided further, That this prohibition shall not apply to the transmission of such books, reports, periodicals, bulletins, pamphlets, lists, articles, or documents to educational institutions or public libraries or to Federal, State, or other public authorities.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am sure there could be no reason for objecting to that perfecting amendment. On behalf of the committee, I accept it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wyoming accept the qualifying amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Yes; I do.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. HAYDEN. The whole point that the Committee on Appropriations had in mind was to make an effort to reduce the tremendous increase in expense in carrying the mail from the departments, which, as the Senator from Wyoming has said, has increased tremendously during the last 10 years.

I have before me the figures. For 1933 the total cost was $14,000,000 and this year it is $35,000,000. That is out of all reason. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Barkley] mentioned action to be taken otherwise by the committee. I may state that the Joint Committee on Printing has been studying the problem of trying to cut off the publications at their source. As a result of the action taken by that committee, the President last October issued an Executive order creating an interdepartmental committee to try to stop the publications in the beginning.

There are two ways of reaching the problem. One is by preventing the original writing and publication of the documents. The other is to slow them down in getting through the mails. I think we should approach the problem from both angles. I assure the Senator that the Joint Committee on Printing will seriously follow up the action already taken to check the continued expansion in the issuing of publications and other documents by the departments.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I venture to say that I think the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] should accept the modification proposed by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY].

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I have already done so. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the modified amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

ORDER FOR CONSIDERATION OF CALENDAR BILLS

Mr. GEORGE obtained the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for another matter? I am compelled to leave the Chamber for a moment.

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the consideration of the appropriation bill the Senate proceed to the consideration of unobjected-to bills on the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

TREASURY AND POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 4492) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. King in the chair). The amendment will be stated,

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 69, line 25, after the word "devices", it is proposed to add the following in parentheses: "(not more than one-half of the funds herein appropriated for the purchase of twine shall be expended in the purchase of twine manufactured from materials or commodities produced outside the United States)."

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I very much hope the chairman of the committee will accept the amendment, for the reason that due to some intervening cause the Representative in Congress from my district was prevented from presenting the amendment to the House committee. After the bill was received in the Senate, I requested the distinguished senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKellar], who, I understood, was the chairman of the subcommittee considering the bill, to permit the Representative from my district to appear before the subcommittee. The matter was inadvertently overlooked by the chairman of the subcommittee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I was not the chairman of the subcommittee. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. Glass], who is the chairman of the full committee, acted also as chairman of the subcommittee. The Senator from Georgia did speak to me about the matter, and I told him that I knew the committee would be glad to hear the Representative from his State. I overlooked the matter. Under the circumstances, so far as I am concerned, I hope the chairman will accept the amendment.

Mr. GLASS. Unless there is objection from some member of the committee, I am willing to accept the amendment and let it go to conference.

Mr. GEORGE. I very much hope that may be done, Mr. President, because the facts could be stated to the conferees and the merits or demerits of the amendment weighed.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I have no objection to the amendment going to conference. I wish to say, however, that in considering this matter the committee relied very heavily upon representations made by the officials of the Post Office Department to the effect that as yet a cotton twine has not been devised which can be handled by the employees in such a way as not to cut their fingers. Jute twine can be readily broken when the employees are tying up packages. The tightly woven cotton twine which has been used heretofore is difficult to break, and frequently causes injury to the fingers of the employees. That fact was the major consideration.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Not only is the fact as stated, but the cotton twine is so much superior as a binding force, because it is harder to break, that it slows up operations in the post office. That is one of the primary reasons why the Post Office Department desires twine which will merely hold the bundles together, with the least trouble to the clerks who are using it.

Did the Senator point out that it was testified before the committee that a test is now being made at the Bureau of Standards, in cooperation with the Department of Agriculture, to see if cotton twine cannot be so treated as to lessen its tensile strength before it is purchased? If that were done, the Post Office Department would be perfectly willing to use cotton twine.

Mr. HAYDEN. I was just about to point out the fact mentioned by the Senator. The Department is more than anxious to use an American product in preference to something which is imported, if it can be used in practical operation. An experiment is being conducted by the Bureau of Standards at this time. Some indication was given that the Department appeared to be quite hopeful that a way of making cotton twine could be devised so that for all practical purposes it would be just as useful as jute twine, Mr. GLASS. It was indicated before the committee that the difficulties had been overcome.

Mr. GEORGE. I do not think there is any doubt about it. The amendment simply provides that one-half of the money to be used for the purchase of twine shall be used to purchase twine made from a fiber grown in the United States.

Mr. GLASS. Let the amendment go to conference.

Mr. GEORGE. I am perfectly willing to have the matter go to conference without going into it in detail at this time, because I think the question can be properly weighed by the conferees.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I do not wish to have the matter disposed of without entering a protest, and without stating that I am opposed to the amendment.

This amendment, or a similar amendment, has been offered year after year. Protracted debate and discussion have taken place on the floor. Senators have had no opportunity to have the benefit of discussion today. The report of the Post Office Department against these amendments, and its judgment in this matter, have been before the Senate on other occasions. I understand that the Appropriations Committee and the Department have repeatedly protested against this form of amendment.

I, for one, feel that it is my duty to protest against such hasty and sudden action in the closing hours of the discussion of the bill with a mere handful of Senators on the floor.

My information is that while the post office uses enormous quantities of cotton generally—1938, 2,416,000 yards cotton duck; 1939, 3,023,000 yards—and purchases considerable quantities of cotton twine where it can be used, it purchases a particular jute twine for tying letter mail. It has done so for several decades at great savings in cost. The jute twine is the only practical twine for this purpose. This amendment is proposed to substitute cotton for jute twine.

In the House a somewhat similar amendment to the bill, requiring one-half of the appropriation to be used for cotton twine exclusively, was offered and defeated on the floor—Congressional Record, February 28, 1939, pages 2040–2042.

In the hearings before the Senate subcommittee on Wednesday, March 8, 1939, the proposed amendment was considered. The Post Office Department officials testified as to the vast savings, indicating that cotton twine would have cost $79,000 additional in the last fiscal year and possibly much more in the fiscal year 1940 if it alone could be used: that cotton twine was not feasible for tieing purposes because it stretched and cut the fingers of postal employees; that the Agriculture Department was experimenting in an effort to remedy these obvious difficulties and that the Post Office was cooperating with this experiment, but that at present jute alone could be used and cotton was not only unsatisfactory but vastly more expensive. It was also pointed out that the jute twine in question is an American manufacture and is made in Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, Delaware, New York, and occasionally a few other points. The manufacture of this twine affords work for a considerable number of American employees.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, this matter was brought up in the subcommittee and was defeated by a vote of 6 to 1.

I should like to say that if cotton were developed to the point where it could perform the work in a satisfactory manner, I should have a great deal of sympathy with the idea of using it. However, the testimony of the officials as given in the hearings is conclusive to me that at the present time cotton would not do the work in a satisfactory manner. Tests are being conducted, and it may be that next year so much progress will have been made that cotton can be used in that way. However, at the present time, both from the standpoint of the price of the material insofar as the taxpayer is concerned and the way in which the function is performed, I believe cotton is not as satisfactory as jute.

I hope, therefore, that the amendment will be rejected.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I am somewhat disappointed that the distinguished Senators from Massachusetts are objecting to the amendment going to conference under the circumstances I stated, to wit, that we had appealed to the subcommittee for a hearing, and that a member of the subcommittee, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKellar], who I thought was the chairman of the subcommittee, had agreed to give us a hearing, and inadvertently overlooked it.

I do not care to go into a full discussion of this matter. However, if the amendment is not going to conference without a controversy, I say flatly that the whole trouble is with the specifications made by the Post Office Department. That is all there is to it. There is nothing wrong with cotton twine. The twine used is no longer broken by the fingers. Everyone in the Postal Service, from the remotest post office up to the Washington headquarters, has a service knife. The whole trouble is in the specifications. The specifications call for twine on a poundage basis rather than on a yardage basis. When the specifications applicable to jute are examined—and there, Mr. President, is where the shoe pinches—it is found that they provide:

The breaking strength of the twine must average not less than 20 pounds.

When we come to the breaking strength of cotton twine we find this:

Not less than 16 pounds nor more than 20 pounds.

Jute twine must have an average breaking strength of 20 pounds.

Mr. President, there are in the specifications other provisions which virtually exclude cotton; I make the statement deliberately that they virtually exclude cotton. They must have been designedly drawn. It is as if the specifications for automobiles should apply only to a Chevrolet or to a Buick, which, certainly, no other cars could meet. The breaking strength required in the case of jute is only an average, whereas in the case of cotton it is specified at not less than 16 or more than 20. The diameter of the twine is fixed exactly for cotton and so fixed as to make it possible for jute only to qualify.

The Government of the United States has today invested over $600,000,000 in cotton, and it is annually appropriating money to discover new uses for cotton, but the very same department which is endeavoring to discover new uses for cotton is using a foreign product, jute, which can be substituted for cotton.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there? Mr. GEORGE. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. LEE. Is it not also true that in the Government departments paper napkins and paper towels are being used? Does the Senator enjoy drying his face on a paper towel?

Mr. GEORGE. No, I do not; but I do not now desire to get into a discussion of that question.

Experiments have been conducted and are now being conducted—I am not authorized to divulge all the information I have in my hand and I do not want to do so—which, I am satisfied, have already demonstrated that cotton twine can be used for most of the purposes of the Post Office Department which are now filled by jute twine.

Mr. President, I have very frankly stated that I wished the matter to go to conference, so that the conferees could have the advantage of all the present available facts, and then, if the amendment should be found to be meritorious, that it be retained in the bill. The amendment does not exclude jute; it simply provides that a portion of the money appropriated for the purchase of twine shall be used to purchase some kind of twine made from some fiber produced in the United States. That, it seems to me, is a very reasonable request, and the amendment appears to me to be a very reasonable one, especially when the demonstrations recently made and now in progress indicate that cotton twine may be used for most of the purposes required by the Post Office Department.

Now I wish to call attention to the fact that in the last purchase of twine, when the Post Office Department bought 2,200,000 pounds, there were but two bidders. One of them was a concern interested in jute. There was but one cotton bid submitted, and that bid was the combined bid of three textile mills in New England.

I wish to say in my place here that, although nearly all the cotton twine made in the United States is made in the

Tydings

Wagner Walsh

Wheeler

Vandenberg

South, and much of it is made in Georgia, the mills there operating have long since declined to submit bids to the Post Office Department for twine. Why? Because they have learned from experience that the specifications are handmade to fit only one product, and for that reason they know it is useless to submit bids. Responsible manufacturers have from year to year so advised me.

Ninety percent of all the cotton twine used in the manufacture of automobile tires is made by one mill and its associated mills, as I recall the figures, in my State. These responsible manufacturers tell me that there is not one single scintilla of virtue in the objections urged against cotton twine. I believe their statements. I know the men who make them; I know how responsible they are. They tell me that the only reason why they do not submit bids and do not meet the specifications is that it is simply impossible to do so. I think that statement is true.

The Post Office Department from year to year has taken the position that a fiber produced in the United States cannot be used to tie mail; that it cannot be used in the mail service. The main objection, they used to say, was that cotton twine would stretch. The manufacturers met that objection and demonstrated that a cotton twine could be made that would not stretch. Then it was said that cotton twine would cut the hands. Of course, some of it will cut the hands, as will some of the jute twine; but knives are used in the Department, and there is no occasion to use the hands in breaking the twine. Demonstration after demonstration has shown that packages of mail shipped across the continent are 90 percent well preserved when tied with cotton twine, and only about 50 percent well preserved under ordinary handling when tied with jute.

Then it was claimed that jute was cheaper. What are the facts on that point? The specifications call for one-half pound balls of twine by the pound. The fact is that a pound of jute will measure in yardage about 850 yards, whereas in the very specifications of the Department it is said that a pound of cotton must measure 1,000 yards. Right there appears a discrimination of 25 percent against cotton. The Bureau of Standards will tell you today, Mr. President, that, as a matter of fact, a pound of cotton will make, when prepared suitably for the Post Office Department, approximately 1,350 yards as against 850 yards for jute, or 500 yards more. The Post Office Department does not care anything about how much it weighs. They are buying yardage and yardage only. Yet their specifications confine the bidder to a poundage bid.

Mr. President, it seems to me that there are sufficient facts here that the conferees might well weigh. I am asking that the Senate adopt the amendment, at least for the purpose of having it well considered in the light of the inquiries and tests that have been made recently and that are now in progress and that the information available be brought before the conference committee before the amendment shall be finally disposed of by the conferees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BONE obtained the floor.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I have presented an amendment to the pending bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not think the Senator has had the amendment read from the desk. I suggest that he have that done

Mr. BONE. I ask at this point that the amendment be

The PRESIDING OFFICER. As the Chair understands, the Senator from Tennessee is correct. The amendment has not been formally offered. It was offered, and allowed to lie on the table.

Mr. BONE. That is correct. I now tender the amendment and ask to have it stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 42, line 26, it is proposed to strike out "$440,000" and in lieu thereof to insert "$700,000."

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, let me briefly state that the purpose of this amendment is to provide additional funds for the completion and operation of the National Cancer Institute.

The National Cancer Institute Act, "An act to provide for, foster, and aid in coordinating research relating to cancer; to establish the National Cancer Institute; and for other purposes," was approved on August 5, 1937.

This act directs the United States Public Health Service to undertake a comprehensive scientific attack on the cause, prevention, diagnosis, and treatment of cancer. This dread disease is killing every year about 140,000 persons in this country. Therefore, cancer is one of the major public health problems.

The law broadly provides for two kinds of activities: First, experimental research; and, second, what may be called cancer control.

CANCER RESEARCH

Considerable progress has been made in cancer research during the past 40 years, much more than in all preceding time. The outlook for the future is even more promising.

In order to summarize present knowledge concerning the fundamental aspects of cancer, and to suggest meritorious lines for future study, Surgeon General Parran appointed a committee of leading scientists. The report of this committee, published last December, recognized three main lines of attack that have yielded our present knowledge of the disease:

First. The study of experimental animal cancers, which are readily transferable from one animal to another of the same species.

Second. The experimental production of cancers by the use of various chemicals and certain hormones manufactured by the animal and human body.

Third. The part played by genetic and hereditary factors in the development of cancer.

In addition to a continuation of investigations along these lines, the committee felt that the National Cancer Institute should foster especially research into cell physiology and the conditions which bring about that capacity of cells for uncontrolled growth, which is cancer. This is the core of the problem.

In line with this report, the Public Health Service for a number of years before the passage of the National Cancer Institute Act had pursued research on a small scale; one small group of scientists working at the National Institute of Health in Washington, and another small group working at the Harvard Medical School, and now in a building belonging to the Harvard department of chemistry. The main results of this work carried out during the past fiscal year are summarized in the annual report of the Surgeon General.

These activities will be brought to the central institute, for which the Seventy-fifth Congress appropriated funds for the erection of a suitable building at Bethesda, Md. Mrs. Luke Wilson generously donated the land. Careful plans were worked out so as to provide the necessary physical facilities for a first-class cancer research center. Building operations were started early in October of last year, and it is anticipated that the building will be ready for occupancy in the coming

RESEARCH FELLOWS

Complying with the provision under the law, steps were taken to appoint additional scientific and technical personnel. Fifteen research fellowships have been granted for work on projects that fit in with the general plan of attack. Some of these fellows are already recognized as leaders in cancer research, while others give promise of developing into capable investigators. There is great need for increasing the number of research fellows, not only to complete the staff of the National Cancer Institute at Bethesda, but also to promote cancer research in private institutions. In view of the magnitude and complexities of the problem, a total of 30 research fellowships at any one time would not be excessive. Many universities and research institutes are anxious to secure the services of such fellows for training in cancer research, and are very glad to provide the necessary facilities at their expense. Additional funds are needed to carry out these plans.

cost of operation of institute

There is one question which has caused considerable concern, and that is adequate funds for the efficient operation of the National Cancer Institute at Bethesda. Apart from the salaries of personnel and the cost for ordinary maintenanceheating, lighting, and so forth—the work of the institute is such as to require rather expensive scientific instruments, and facilities for the care and study of many thousands of experimental animals, chiefly mice and rats. As an illustration, it would be very desirable to have a diagnostic X-ray machine for the early recognition of internal cancers in laboratory animals. The ordinary machines used on patients are not adapted for use on small animals because of the rapid breathing and heart action, which causes fogging of the photographic plate. A suitable machine with short and intense exposure is needed, and this item alone would cost $7,000. Then there is the essential need for hygienic animal cages. which permit the housing of the tens of thousands of mice for periods of 1 to 2 years. This item involves a cost of approximately $15,000.

The cost of cancer research is much higher than many other kinds of research, because in animals, as in humans, natural cancer is a disease which has a very long "incubation" period. The animals must, therefore, receive the best of care by a large number of competent caretakers, in order that the results of the experiments shall not be lost due to intercurrent disease.

If additional funds are not provided, the only alternative would be gradually to assemble the necessary scientific supplies over a number of years, and to employ only a skeleton professional and technical staff for the institute. It is questionable that such a plan would meet the intent of Congress in establishing the National Cancer Institute.

GRANTS-IN-AID

The National Advisory Cancer Council has held 8 meetings and considered 82 applications for grants-in-aid for the support of cancer research in various private institutions in the country. These applications have totaled more than $1,000,000. The council has recommended, and the Surgeon General has awarded, only 16 grants-in-aid, totaling about $116,000. If adequate funds were available, these research activities could be extended.

CLINICAL RESEARCH CENTER

In order to provide facilities for certain research on cancer patients, plans have been made, and work is under way, for the establishment of a small cancer clinic at the United States Marine Hospital in Baltimore, Md. The activities of this research clinic will be coordinated, as far as possible, with the institute at Bethesda.

COORDINATION OF RESEARCH

The law provides for coordination of all the cancer research in the country. The most effective way to carry out this provision is by personal contact, through visits to research institutions, conferences of small groups of scientists, and attendance at meetings of scientific societies. It is believed that this activity is very valuable indeed, and in the best interest of increasing scientific knowledge relating to cancer. A limited number of visits have been made to cancer research laboratories in this country. Last summer the Chief of the National Cancer Institute made an official survey of various cancer-research centers in France, Belgium, England, and Scotland. He established personal contact with a great many scientists and attended two international scientific congresses.

This year the Third International Cancer Congress will meet in this country. If the necessary funds for travel were available, it would be very advantageous to have every staff member of the National Cancer Institute attend this Congress. Furthermore, it would be very desirable to bring to Washington at Government expense at intervals small groups of scientists for the purpose of special scientific meetings in certain fields of cancer research. The moderately paid scientist can ill-afford to carry the expense of attendance at many such meetings no matter how great his interest may be.

AIMS OF CANCER RESEARCH

It has been estimated that the ideal application of all now available knowledge would reduce the cancer mortality by about 25 percent; that is, about 35,000 persons could be saved yearly. The other 105,000 would be doomed to death. The only hope of decreasing this vast amount of human misery is through fundamental and clinical cancer research. Many competent men and women are only too willing to devote their lives to such work if they can find a modest livelihood and suitable facilities.

There is another side to fundamental cancer research which has not been mentioned. Cancer is essentially a biological problem; and therefore fundamental cancer research, besides promoting knowledge relating to cancer, is contributing to general biological knowledge which may become of value for a better understanding of some fundamental questions underlying the maintenance of health. This may seem visionary, but it is the truth.

CANCER CONTROL—SUPPORT OF STATE-CONTROL PROGRAMS

Although at the present time the care of indigent cancer cases is the ultimate responsibility of the States, under the National Cancer Institute Act it is the responsibility of the Federal Government to cooperate with the State health agencies in cancer-control programs, and to coordinate and standardize these activities.

The States look to the National Cancer Institute for leadership and guidance in formulating their program. Only six States-New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Connecticut, New York, Georgia, and Missouri—have legally enacted cancer-control programs. An analysis has been made of the laws in these States, and the institute is already being of service to other States that are becoming interested in cancer legislation. At the last meeting of the State and Territorial health officers with the Public Health Service, a resolution was passed urging the United States Public Health Service to establish an office of States' relations within the cancer institute, and to draw up a model State cancer law. In order for such an office to function properly, additional personnel and funds will be needed. Up to the present time very little has been done in this field. It is planned that this office will standardize cancer case records, and encourage the States to keep uniform statistical records and follow-up systems in order to evaluate the final outcome of treated cases of cancer. No cancer patient can be called cured until at least 5 years have elapsed from the date of the last treatment.

EDUCATION OF THE PUBLIC

The National Cancer Institute Act specifically calls for the collection of information upon studies which are being carried on in the United States or any other country as to the cause, prevention, and methods of diagnosis and treatment of cancer, and to make such information available to institutions, public and private, to physicians, and to the general public, through appropriate channels. Although public-health education is one of the most effective weapons we have in the control of disease, the National Cancer Institute has not yet organized a comprehensive educational campaign on a national scale. Until additional funds become available, educational activities will remain limited for the most part to cooperation with nonofficial organizations, such as the American Society for the Control of Cancer, and the American College of Surgeons.

TRAINING OF PHYSICIANS

Under section 4 (b) it is the duty of the National Cancer Institute to provide training and instruction in technical matters relating to the diagnosis and treatment of cancer.

Twenty trainees have been carefully selected and are now on duty at approved training centers throughout the country. These young men have declared their intention of devoting their lives to the diagnosis and treatment of cancer as a career. There is a great demand throughout the country from young men who have received special training in surgery, irradiation, and tumor pathology. The Cancer Institute has more than 40 applications over and above those now in training. Lack of funds prevents an extension of this service, which is recognized as one of the most urgent needs in the cancer field.

GENERAL CONCLUSIONS

It is quite obvious that the control of cancer by comprehensive research, and by the effective application of existing knowledge, represents one of the most difficult problems in public health. An annual appropriation of $400,000, if contined in the coming fiscal years, would permit only slow progress quite out of all proportion with the importance of cancer as a medical, social, and economic problem. The passage of the National Cancer Institute Act was an important event, since the Federal Government for the first time undertook to attack a neglected problem which in the course of years has brought, and will bring, untold misery and death to hundreds of thousands of citizens.

For the period of planning and organization, following the enactment of the law, the United States Public Health Service felt that not more than about $400,000 could be profitably spent. Now, however, the full authorization under the law of $700,000 for each year is urgently needed.

I have explained the purpose of my amendment to the Chairman of the Appropriations Committee, who is advised of my interest, and my reason for offering the amendment. I take it that everyone is vitally interested in the subject of cancer, because it has become one of the greatest killers of all time. Nearly every year, three times as many human beings are killed by cancer as died in the World War; and the work of the cancer institute is known to almost everyone.

I sincerely hope the chairman of the committee will accept the amendment.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, the amount called for by the amendment being the amount of the original authorization, I shall accept the amendment and let it go to conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The bill is still before the Senate and open to further amendment. If no further amendment be proposed, the question is on the engrossing of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GLASS. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and ask for a conference with the House of Representatives thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. Glass, Mr. McKellar, Mr. Typings, Mr. McCarran, Mr. Balley, Mr. Bridges, and Mr. Lodge conferees on the part of the Senate.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, at the request of our leader, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Barkley], I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of unobjected-to bills on the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Tennessee that he understands that order has already been entered. The consideration of unobjected-to bills is now in order.

STAY OF FORECLOSURE PROCEEDINGS UPON REAL-ESTATE MORT-GAGES TO THE UNITED STATES

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, at this time I ask unanimous consent of the Senate to introduce a joint resolution which, if adopted, will authorize the courts of the land to stay fore-closure proceedings upon real-estate mortgages to the United States.

This joint resolution, if agreed to, will not create an arbitrary moratorium. What it purports to do is to give the courts the power to stay proceedings upon such terms and conditions as the courts, by their orders, may prescribe for the purpose of protecting the interest of the mortgagors and the mortgagees.

The Supreme Court of the United States some time ago held, in substance, that legislation could not be passed depriving one person or one class of people of their property rights for the benefit of another class. What the court held was that when any person, or any group of persons, in a great emergency become destitute or in need, such a situation calls for aid and assistance from the entire public, or from the Government.

We now have such a situation in the case of the so-called Government mortgages which are being foreclosed by the thousands upon farms from which the farmers cannot get sufficient to live, not because in a majority of cases they have not worked hard, but because market conditions of the product they produce have made it impossible for them to exchange that product for a sufficient number of dollars to make a living.

In my own State, where it costs the farmers from $1.80 to $2.60 a hundred to produce milk, they are selling that milk in the majority of cases for 70 cents to a dollar a hundred. They are not to blame for that situation. They have worked hard. They are producing the product. Now, the taxes and insurance and interest on Government obligations require payment, and they cannot meet "the bill." So the Government forecloses.

In the county immediately north of my county in Wisconsin there are 400 foreclosures. This is one of the greatest dairy counties in America. I am informed that in five counties surrounding my county there are 1,500 foreclosures by Government agencies.

The resolution I am offering intends to authorize the staying by the court of such foreclosure proceedings for a term up to 2 years on such terms as the court may prescribe. In other words, the court, acting as an equity judge, sees the interest of the Government with its money invested in the farms, it sees the interest of the farmer, who, through no fault of his own, finds himself unable to meet the demands created by taxes and interest. The court sees the larger interest of the need of maintaining and retaining the Nation's most vital industry—the farming industry. The court weighs all the circumstances in each individual case and then determines the terms and conditions by his order.

All through the farm belt there is an immediate need for legislation of this kind. I ask unanimous consent for immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. McKELLAR. The joint resolution has not yet been printed?

Mr. WILEY. It has not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the joint resolution

The legislative clerk read the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 93) authorizing the courts to stay proceedings brought for the purpose of foreclosing upon real property mortgaged to the United States, and for other purposes, as follows:

Whereas the mortgages held by the United States and its agencies are the property of the Nation; and
Whereas due to present economic conditions, foreclosure proceedings have been instituted or will be instituted upon many of such mortgages; and

Whereas the foreclosure of such mortgages would have the effect of depriving many citizens of their homes and farms; and Whereas the problems of unemployment and relief would be intensified as a result of such foreclosures; and Whereas it is in the interests of the Nation that foreclosures should be stayed in anticipation of improved economic conditions;

Whereas the courts in which foreclosure proceedings are instituted are capable of determining the conditions peculiar to each case involving the foreclosure of any such mortgage: Therefore case involving the foreclosure of any such mortgage: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That any court having jurisdiction of any proceedings brought by the United States or any agency of the United States for the purpose of foreclosing upon any real property mortgaged to the United States or such agency shall have power to stay such foreclosure proceedings for a period of time expiring not later than 2 years after the date of enactment of this joint resolution. Any such stay of proceedings shall be granted subject to such terms and conditions as the court, by its order, may prescribe for the purpose of protecting the respective interests of the mortgage and the mortgagee in the mortgaged property.

SEC. 2. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation shall not exchange its bonds for the bonds of any Federal land bank or lend any funds to any Federal land, bank, if such Federal land bank has refused to consent to the entry; by any court having jurisdiction of any proceedings brought by such bank to foreclose upon real property mortgaged to such bank, of an order staying such foreclosure proceedings (1) for a period expiring not later than 2 years after the date of enactment of this joint resolution and (2) upon such terms and conditions as the court may prescribe for the purpose of protecting the respective rights of such bank and the mortgagor in the mortgaged property.

SEC. 3. The rate of interest on any loan made upon the security of a mortgage on real property with respect to which any foreclosure proceedings have been stayed pursuant to the provisions of this joint resolution shall not, for the period of effectiveness of such stay, be in excess of the interest rate which would be applicable to such loan if the borrower were not in default.

SEC. 4. (a) As used in this joint resolution—

(1) The term "foreclosure proceedings" includes any judicial proplicable to such loan if the borrower were not in default.

SEC. 4. (a) As used in this joint resolution—

(1) The term "foreclosure proceedings" includes any judicial proceedings by which a mortgagor or his successor in interest is divested of legal title (whether or not subject to a right of redemption) to any real property by reason of the breach of any condition or covenant of the mortgage on such property or the credit instruments secured thereby.

ments secured thereby.

(2) The term "agency of the United States" means any executive department, independent establishment, or agency of the United States and any corporation all of the capital stock of which is owned directly or indirectly by the United States.

(b) A stay of foreclosure proceedings may be granted under the provisions of this joint resolution at any stage of such proceedings prior to the order of the court confirming the foreclosure sale of the mortgaged property

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I did not hear all the resolution, but I heard sufficient to know that it should not be considered at this time. It goes into the whole question of loans and interest, and it ought to be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency in order that the committee may consider it. Has the Senator any objection to its going to the committee? We have before that committee for consideration questions similar to the ones raised in the resolution, and related questions.

Mr. WILEY. I have no objection to the joint resolution going to the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I have been faithfully observing the agreement made that the calendar was to be called following the disposition of the appropriation bill under consideration earlier in the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct. There is nothing before the Senate at this time.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I secured a unanimousconsent agreement awhile ago that immediately upon the conclusion of the consideration of the appropriation bill the calendar of unobjected-to bills would be considered.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I do not intend to sit here any longer and listen to something else.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the first order of business on the calendar.

The bill (S. 326) for the payment of awards and appraisals heretofore made in favor of citizens of the United States in claims presented under the General Claims Convention of September 8, 1923, United States and Mexico, was announced as first in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over. ECONOMIC DATA CONCERNING BRAZIL

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I had consent of the majority leader merely to ask unanimous consent for the publication in the Appendix of the Record of some data which relate to the economic situation in Brazil today and likewise to the geographic potentialities of that section. I ask that the data be published in the Appendix of the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

(The data appear in the Appendix under the heading "Economic Data Concerning Brazil.")

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in that connection I ask unanimous consent that an article in the Washington Post this morning by Walter Lippmann, on the same subject, be printed in the Appendix of the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

(The article referred to appears in the Appendix under the heading "Trade Agreement With Brazil.")

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

BILLS RELATING TO INDIAN AFFAIRS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 863) to provide for the payment of attorneys' fees from Osage tribal funds was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, during consideration of the calendar a few days ago I called attention to the fact that there were on the calendar several bills dealing with Indian claims, providing for sending a number of such claims to the Court of Claims. I stated that an investigation was being made, and I asked that those bills go over until the investigation had been completed and the information furnished; and that was understood. The chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Thomas], did not dissent from that view. So I ask that those bills, when they are reached, be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Utah? The Chair hears none, and all orders of business from No. 88 to No. 116, inclusive, will be passed over.

The following bills ordered to be passed over are as follows: The bill (S. 863) to provide for the payment of attorneys' fees from Osage tribal funds.

The bill (S. 783) to amend the act, as amended, entitled "An act to refer the claims of the Delaware Indians to the Court of Claims, with the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States," approved February 7, 1925.

The bill (S. 784) for the relief of certain Indians of the Winnebago Agency, Nebr.

The bill (8, 790) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claims of the Prairie Band or Tribe of Pottawatomie Indians of Kansas and Wisconsin against the United States.

The bill (S. 1222) authorizing an appropriation for payment to the Osage Tribe of Indians on account of lands sold by the United States.

The bill (S. 767) conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear, examine, adjudicate, and enter judgment in any claims which the Assiniboine Indians may have against the United States, and for other purposes.

The bill (S. 864) authorizing the Arapahoe and Cheyenne Indians to submit claims to the Court of Claims, and for other purposes.

The bill (S. 962) to define the status of certain lands purchased for the Choctaw Indians, Mississippi.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

AMENDMENT OF CIVIL SERVICE RETIREMENT ACT

The bill (S. 281) to amend further the Civil Service Retirement Act, approved May 29, 1930, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over. Mr. NEELY subsequently said: Mr. President, what happened to Order of Business No. 127?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was passed over.

Mr. NEELY. On whose objection?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On the objection of the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. King].

Mr. NEELY. I thought I had an understanding with the senior Senator from Utah last week. Of course, if he does not concur in what I am about to say I shall be certain that I was laboring under a false impression. I understood the Senator to say, when the bill was called last week, that he would not object to consideration when it was reached at the next call of the calendar.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I shall not object to consideration except under the 5-minute rule. There will be some debate. The Senator will recall that he suggested that he would move to have the bill taken up, and if he moves that the bill be taken up, so that we may have ample time for debate, I shall join with him.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I shall not interrupt the calling of the calendar now, but later in the day I purpose to move to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. KING. I shall not object.

Mr. McCARRAN. Let the joint resolution go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 95) to amend the Civil Service Retirement Act of May 22, 1920, as amended, to extend retirement to certain employees of certain Indian schools was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over. The bill (S. 840) to amend and clarify the provisions of the act of June 15, 1936 (49 Stat. 1507), and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. Sheppard] does not seem to be on the floor. I wonder whether there is anyone on the floor who can make an explanation of the bill. If not, I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

ERNEST S. FRAZIER

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 454) for the relief of Ernest S. RETIREMENT OF EMPLOYEES IN THE CANAL ZONE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1215) to amend the Canal Zone Code, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first paragraph of subsection (b) of section 94 of title 2, Canal Zone Code, as amended by section 2 of the act of June 24, 1936 (49 Stat. 1904), is amended to read as follows:

as follows:

"(b) Any employee to whom this article applies who shall have served for a total period of not less than 5 years, and who, before becoming eligible for retirement under the conditions defined in section 92 of this title, shall have become totally disabled for useful and efficient service in the grade or class of position occupied by the employee, by reason of disease or injury not due to vicious habits, intemperance, or willful misconduct on the part of the employee, shall upon his own application or upon request or order of the Governor of the Panama Canal, be retired on an annuity computed in accordance with the provisions of section 96 of this title: Provided, That proof of freedom from vicious habits, intemperance, or willful misconduct for a period of more than 5 years next prior to becoming so disabled for useful and efficient service, shall not be required in any case; and the claim of any employee which was or would have been disallowed under this section by reason of the requirement of such proof with respect to a longer period than 5 years, shall upon request of the applicant be reinstated, and shall thereupon be redetermined under the provisions of the section as herein amended: Provided further, That such claim is now on file with the Civil Service Commission or is executed within 6 months from the enactment of this act."

Mr. McKellar. Mr. President, may we have a statement about this bill?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, this is a measure which is very strongly recommended by the War Department. It makes a minor change in the Canal Zone Code so as to correct an injustice which is at present being done by that code to two individual employees of the Canal Zone. In other words, there is a very unusual situation, which is set out in full in the letter of the Secretary of War. The Governor of the Canal Zone and the War Department both feel that under the present terms of the act an injustice is done to two old employees of the Canal Zone. The amount involved is very small, and the committee felt that this injustice should be cured.

Mr. McKELLAR. It applies to only two employees?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It applies to only two employees in the Canal Zone.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 950) to exempt all vessels of the United States of less than 200 tons gross registered tonnage from the provisions of the Officers' Competency Certificates Convention, 1936 (being International Labor Conference Treaty, Convention No. 53, adopted by the International Labor Conference at Geneva in 1936), was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill? If not, let it be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1162) to provide for the recognition of the services of the civilian officials and employees, citizens of the United States, engaged in and about the construction of the Panama Canal was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. I should like to have an explanation of that bill. If not, I ask that it be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

ANTHONY CONIGLIO

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 221) for the relief of Anthony Coniglio, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Anthony Coniglio, of Lincoln, Nebr., the sum of $750 in full satisfaction of all his claims against the United States for compensation for an injury sustained by him, causing the loss of hearing in one ear, while an inmate of the United States prison camp at Kooskia, Idaho, as the result of an explosion of dynamite when he was working with a crew on a road near Kooskia, Idaho, on October 5, 1937: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with such claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with such claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of that bill?

Mr. BURKE. I did not report the bill, but I shall be glad to explain it. While a citizen of Nebraska was in a Federal prison in some Western State—I believe in the State of Idaho—an explosion of dynamite occurred, through no negligence of his, but through the negligence of someone else, which destroyed his ear drums. The Department recommended that he be allowed $700. That was the amount of the medical bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EARL J. REED AND GILES J. GENTRY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1429) for the relief of Earl J. Reed and Giles J. Gentry, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 7, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$3,000" and to insert "$1,500", so as to make the bill read:

"$3,000" and to insert "$1,500", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Earl J. Reed and Giles J. Gentry, jointly, of West Palm Beach, Fla., the sum of $1,500, in full settlement of their claim against the United States for the loss sustained by them on account of the estreature on April 23, 1936, to the United States of their cash-appearance bond deposited by them and conditioned upon the delivery in the United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida, in Miami, Fla., in criminal case numbered 4816-M, of one Alva Slayton O'Dell, by reason of the nonappearance of said Alva Slayton O'Dell in said court, although said Alva Slayton O'Dell was subsequently apprehended on information furnished by said Earl J. Reed and Giles J. Gentry: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

L. M. BELL AND M. M. BELL

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1038) for the relief of L. M. Bell and M. M. Bell, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$1,886.66" and to insert "$943.33", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to L. M. Bell and M. M. Bell, of Portland, Oreg., the sum of $943.33, in full satisfaction of their claims against the United States for payment of rental of three trucks, under contract No. ER-Tps-94-1789, dated July 16, 1936, from November 17, 1936, to the time each such truck was returned in as good condition as when received, ordinary wear and tear excepted: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claims. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claims, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RELIEF OF INDIAN SERVICE DISBURSING AGENTS AND EMPLOYEES

The bill (S. 1415) for the relief of certain disbursing agents and employees of the Indian Service was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to allow credit to employees of the Indian Service and in the accounts of J. E. Balmer, S. F. Stacher, and J. W. Elliott, disbursing agents of the Indian Service, for payments made during the period November 1933 to April 1934, to certain employees for the use of their personally owned automobiles as provided in the act of February 14, 1931 (46 Stat. 1103), to the extent that payments have been disallowed solely because the oil and gas used in such automobiles were purchased from Government supplies.

SEC. 2. Refunds are hereby authorized to be made out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated to any employees from whom collections have been made and deposited into the Treasury pursuant to disallowances on account of mileage payments made by the disbursing agents named in section 1 hereof.

JOINT RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

ERECTION OF MEMORIAL TO BUILDERS OF PANAMA CANAL

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 43) to authorize the erection within the Canal Zone of a suitable memorial to the builders of the Panama Canal and others whose distinguished services merit recognition by the Congress, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, with amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the first committee amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. The first committee amendment was, on page 2, line 2, after the word "shall", to strike out "contain a" and to insert "contain—".

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill? I understand the proposal would cost nearly a million dollars.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, the purpose of the measure is to build a memorial to the men who built the Panama Canal, and others whose distinguished services merit recognition by the Congress, a memorial of such a nature that the men who are now working upon and operating the Canal may use it. In other words, the proposal is to build an auditorium. For a long time an agitation has gone on in this country to commemorate the thousands of men who sacrificed their lives in the great undertaking of building the Panama Canal. Those who built it were obliged to combat disease and a great many difficulties. It is now proposed to build a memorial to those who gave their lives in that undertaking.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

MILITARY SECRETARY TO THE GENERAL OF THE ARMIES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1301) to create the office of Military Secretary to the General of the Armies of the United States of America, with the rank of colonel, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 7, after the words "grade of", to strike out "colonel, retired list" and to insert "colonel", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the office of Military Secretary to the General of the Armies of the United States of America, with the rank of colonel, is hereby created, and the President is hereby authorized, in his discretion, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to promote to the grade of colonel an officer of the Army who has served as military secretary to the General of the Armies continuously since that office was revived by act of Congress approved September 3, 1919: Provided, That not more than one appointment to office shall be made under the terms of this act.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of this bill. If no explanation is made, I ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Logan] is not in the Chamber at the moment.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Tennessee withhold his request for a moment?

Mr. McKELLAR. I withhold my request.

Mr. MINTON. The measure is a very simple one. General Pershing, as Senators recall, is the only General of the Armies left today. He has a secretary, who has been his secretary for many years. That man now has the rank of captain. It is desired to make him a colonel. When General Pershing dies, of course, the rank of General of the Armies will no longer exist, and his secretary will no longer have any active status, but under the provisions of the bill will simply be retired with the grade of colonel, as secretary to the General of the Armies.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does General Pershing desire it?

Mr. MINTON. General Pershing desires it. Mr. McKELLAR. I withdraw my objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Humler, who was killed in action while in the performance of his duty and before completing arrangements for a contract of such insurance: Provided, That the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs is hereby authorized and directed to deduct from the payment of insurance herein authorized the sum of $68, representing premiums based upon application of October 20, 1917.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1155) to provide for probationary appointments of officers in the Regular Army was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask for an explanation of that bill. If not, let the bill be passed over.

It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with such claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

AMENDMENT OF CIVIL SERVICE RETIREMENT ACT

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, is the Senator from Kentucky about to move that the Senate conclude its ses-

Mr. BARKLEY. I was about to make such a motion, but the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] desires to have considered very briefly a bill which is on the calendar. Consideration of the measure was objected to when it was reached on the call of the calendar.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Before the Senate adjourns, if I may, I wish to present an amendment to another bill, and to make a brief statement respecting it, so it will be on the record when the time comes to consider it.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator from Michigan will be afforded the opportunity to do so.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 281, to amend further the Civil Service Retirement Act, approved May 29, 1930. The calendar number is 127. This bill is almost identical with a measure that was passed by the Senate a year ago, with only one dissenting vote. It has the approval of practically everyone who will be affected by it if it becomes a law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from West Virginia.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 281) to amend further the Civil Service Retirement Act, approved May 29, 1930, which had been reported from the Committee on Civil Service with an amend-paragraph of section 10 of the act of May 29, 1930, as amended:

SEC. 7. The following paragraph shall be inserted after the first paragraph of section 10 of the act of May 29, 1930, as amended:

"Any employee may at his option and under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Civil Service Commission deposit additional sums in multiples of $25 but not to exceed 10 percent per annum of his annual basic salary, pay, or compensation, and for service rendered prior to the effective date of this act not to exceed the amount of the rate of basic salary, pay, or compensation received by the employee for the year immediately preceding the effective date of the act, which amount together with interest thereon at 3 percent per annum compounded as of June 30 of each year, shall, at the date of his retirement, be available to purchase, as he shall elect and in accordance with such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Civil Service Commission with the approval of the Board of Actuaries, in addition to the annuity and/or other benefits provided by this act, an annuity according to the experience of the civil-service retirement and disability fund as may from time to time be set forth in tables of annuity values by the Board of Actuaries based on an interest rate of 4 percent. In the event of death or separation from the service of such employee before becoming eligible for retirement on annuity, the amount so deposited with interest at 3 percent per annum compounded on June 30 of each year shall be refunded in accordance with the provisions of section 12 of this act."

SEC. 8. Strike out paragraph (b) of section 12 of the act of May 29, 1930, as amended, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "In the case of any employee to whom this act applies who shall be transferred to a position not within the purview of this act or who shall become absolutely separated from the service before becoming eligible for retirement on an annuity, the amount of deductions from his basic salary, pay, or compensation credited to his individual account, together with interest at 4 percent compounded on June 30 of each year to June 30, 1938, and 3 percent compounded on June 30 of each year thereafter shall be returned to such employee: Provided, That when an employee becomes involuntarily separated from the service, not by removal for cause on charges of misconduct or delinquency, the total amount of deductions from his basic salary, pay, or compensation with interest at 4 percent compounded on June 30 of each year shall be returned to such employee: And provided further, That all deductions from basic salary, pay, or compensation so returned to an employee must, upon reinstatement, retransfer, or reappointment to a position coming within the purview of this act be redeposited with interest at 4 percent compounded on June 30 of each year before such employee may derive any benefits under this act, except as provided in this section, but interest shall not be required covering such employee may derive any benefits under this act, except as provided in this section, but interest shall not be required covering any period of separation from the service.'

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I move that the amendment be adopted.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, in order that some of us who are not as well advised as the Civil Service Commission are, may I ask the Senator what are the benefits that are derived by the civil-service employees, the date and period of retirement, what they annually repay into the fund, and what the Federal Government pays into the fund, and the amount which the Federal Government up to this date has paid into the retirement fund?

I ask the latter question because frequently it is said that the Federal employees pay all the amounts which ultimately come to them upon their retirement; that the Federal Government pays nothing, but the employees themselves pay the entire amount of the fund of which they are the beneficiaries.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, the bill is designed to amend existing law as follows:

Section 1 reduces the ages at which employees may retire, after 30 years of service, from 68, 63, and 60 years to 64, 60, and 58 years respectively. In other words the 68-year limit is reduced to 64 years; the 63-year limit is reduced to 60: and the 60-year limit is reduced to 58. This is the only provision of the bill which the Civil Service Commission has not approved.

If the bill becomes a law it will benefit more than 507,000 deserving employees. The increase in cost to the Government will be only $604,000 a year.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. NEELY. I yield to the Senator from Colorado. Mr. ADAMS. I wish to make an inquiry as to what classifications of the service are covered by the reduction of the retirement age to 58 years.

Mr. NEELY. Railway mail clerks and mechanics and laborers and helpers in navy yards and naval stations.

Mr. ADAMS. This point probably has been explained, but it occurred to me that 58 years is rather a young retirement What are the other requirements?

Mr. NEELY. There is no change in the law respecting the classification to which the Senator refers excepting the reduction of the age limit from 60 to 58 years.

Mr. ADAMS. Except to reduce the retirement age 2 years.

Mr. NEELY. That is correct. Mr. ADAMS. I was thinking of the lower limit, which it is proposed to reduce to 58 years, which seems to be a rather young age for retirement.

Mr. NEELY. Not after 30 years of continuous strenuous service. The Civil Service Commission favors optional retirement for all Federal employees at the age of 60. The average age of retirement under the pending bill would be considerably more than 60.

Mr. ADAMS. I have the utmost respect for the Civil Service Commission, and yet I should not regard their recommendation as binding upon the Congress. I think we should have some regard for the increased cost which will inevitably be imposed upon the Government at a very unfortunate time.

Mr. NEELY. The proposed amendments to the law, if adopted, will cost the Government $604,000 a year.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator will recall that I propounded an inquiry as to the amount which the civilservice employees now pay annually and the amount which the Government is required to pay annually under existing

As I stated a moment ago, I am asking these questions because frequently I am told, sometimes by persons within the employ of the Government and sometimes by those outside, that the beneficiaries of the Civil Service Retirement Act pay all the costs and that the Government is not required to pay a single penny toward the retirement fund. So, I should like some information in regard to that subject. On the other hand, I have been told that under the present civil-service law the Government will be required to pay several million dollars annually, and in increasing amounts as the years go by. Can the Senator give us enlightenment on that question?

Mr. NEELY. The Government pays $86,329,509 a year under existing law.

Mr. NEELY. That is correct. But the increase proposed in this bill will not exceed $604,000 a year.

Mr. KING. I stated that the contention is made by some that the Federal Government pays nothing, whereas, as I understand the facts, the Government is called upon to pay many millions of dollars each year.

Mr. NEELY. Of course, the Federal Government contributes to the retirement fund.

Mr. KING. When the retirement bill was under consideration a number of years ago, the late Senator from Vermont, Mr. Dale, whose untimely death we so much deplored, stated, as I recall, that the retirement bill would cost the Government very little each year, and that the employees themselves would pay the entire fund. Now we are told by the able Senator from West Virginia that the cost to the Government is $86,000,000 per annum. Obviously as the years go by the cost will be increased. So we are now saddled with a perpetual obligation, increasing as the years go by.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I gather from a reading of the report that the Civil Service Commission does not approve section 1 of the bill.

I read from page 3 of the report:

Following is a report of the Civil Service Commission on this gislation. It will be noted that the Commission favors all of the bill excepting section 1.

Section 1 is the section which reduces the age limits. So I gather that section 1 does not have the support of the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. NEELY. It does not, and I stated that fact before the Senator from Colorado entered the Chamber.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MILLER in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I move to amend the bill by striking out the year 1938 wherever it appears and inserting in lieu thereof the year 1939.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. Wherever the numerals "1938" appear in the bill it is proposed to substitute "1939."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, before the bill under consideration is passed I desire to submit a few observations. I am greatly concerned over the mounting costs of the Federal Government. The demands for Federal appropriations are increasing, and unfortunately there is a growing sentiment that the Federal Government shall widen the field of its operations and multiply its expenditures. Scores of departments and Federal agencies, manned by hundreds of thousands of persons, are clamoring for larger appropriations. An examination of the hearings before the various committees dealing with appropriations, reveals the fact that substantially all the witnesses were employees of the Government and hold key or other important positions in the Government. It means, therefore, that the hearings present only one side of the picture; they are largely ex parte—the witnesses mainly are those who are urging appropriations and who, in many instances, would be the beneficiaries, directly or indirectly, of the grants made by the Federal Government.

Moreover, as I have indicated, the people are insisting upon the Federal Government expanding its operations into many fields of private endeavor. The Federal Government is urged to take over many of the duties and responsibilities which belong to individuals and the States and their political subdivisions. The spirit of independence is being undermined and the people are being taught that the Federal Government must assume the part of a benignant father if not a benevolent despot. Our dual form of government is being undermined and there is a subsidence of that fine spirit of individualism so essential to the maintenance of our form of government.

As indicated, from all parts of our country, demands for appropriations are increasing, and there is but little resistance to the policy which calls for the intrusion of the Federal Government into private activities and the assumption of responsibilities which are beyond the rightful authority of the Federal Government. There was a time when economy was a virtue; when public spending was deplored; when criticism and indeed condemnation awaited those who laid heavy taxes upon the people and incurred State, municipal, or national indebtedness. The philosophy of Benjamin Franklin concerning thrift and savings was approved and the spendthrift and the debtor were looked upon with disapproval. Political parties pledged themselves to economy in the administration of public affairs; and in those better days counties, States, and municipalities vied with each other in maintaining their governments free from indebtedness.

We recall when not many years ago Congress appropriated for the 2 years $1,000,000,000. The Nation was shocked, and the party in power was criticized for its unprecedented act. But the virtues of those early days seem to be forgotten, and thrift and savings are not regarded as proper attributes of individuals, States, or the National Government.

Congress, in my opinion, has been derelict in its duty in acceding to the demands which are being made for increased governmental activities, and of course increased appropriations. The fact is that the sovereignty of the States is being destroyed in the mad rush from all parts of the Union. to confer upon the Federal Government the crown and jewel of States' rights and individual liberty. The States and their political subdivisions and the Federal Government are putting on chains of bondage-bondage to debt-and individuals, corporations, and partnerships are likewise bonding themselves with fetters.

During the past 5 or 6 years we have increased the expenditures of the Federal Government by from 800 to 1,000 percent, and we have increased the public debt by billions, until it is now approximately $40,000,000,000. I have protested repeatedly against this waste and extravagance.

The platform of the Democratic Party in 1932 severely criticized the Republican Party because of its extravagance and waste. I was a member of the platform committee at the Democratic convention that drafted the platform, which, as I have stated, condemned the Republican Party for its

The Democratic Party pledged itself to economies, to reforms and a reduction of the expenses of government. I regret to say that the pledges made by the Democratic Party in the 1932 platform have not been kept. Both taxes and appropriations have been increased. Scores of new Federal agencies have been created, and the personnel of the Federal Government has been greatly increased. My recollection is that there are now nearly 1,000,000 persons in the executive, legislative, judicial, and administrative departments. There are also more than 335,000 persons connected with national defense. There are nearly 900,000 persons upon the rolls of the Civilian Conservation Corps and the National Youth Administration organizations, and more than 3,200,000 connected with the Works Progress Administration.

The deficits from 1931 to 1939 inclusive will approximate $24,000,000,000; and while I do not have the figures before me of the public debt, it will, at the end of this fiscal year, exceed $42,000,000,000.

Notwithstanding this rather dark picture, demands for Federal appropriations, as I have indicated, are multiplying, and some officials are insisting that the debt limit be increased beyond $50,000,000,000. Personally, I am opposed to increasing the debt limit. We should address ourselves, as I have indicated, to reducing expenses. Scores of executive agencies should be abolished, and drastic cuts made in the appropriations which are pouring in upon Congress.

Earlier in the day we passed a bill carrying more than $1,600,000,000 for but two of the agencies of the Government. It is now impossible to determine what the aggregate of appropriations will receive the approval of Congress during this session; but, as I have indicated, in my opinion, they will exceed $10,000,000,000. And we must not forget that there are four or five billions of dollars of obligations which are guaranteed by the Government of the United States. These should be taken into account in an endeavor to ascertain the financial standing of the Federal Government. May I suggest that the confidence of the people in the Democratic Party may be impaired by these enormous appropriations which are violative of platform pledges.

We know what deficits mean in private business, in individual and cooperative business activities. Individuals and corporations who habitually spend more than their income ultimately end in the bankrupt court. A few years ago, when I was in Germany, I discovered that the expenditures of the Ebert government were so large and the deficits so enormous that inflation followed, and that was followed by national and individual bankruptcy.

A few days ago there was some intimation that taxes were not to be increased. That information gave some assurance to individuals and to business enterprises, that if we could adopt a policy and carry it into execution that limited appropriations, to the revenues of the Government, there would be a renaissance in business and in every branch of industry. But if we increase the borrowings of the Government, it means increased taxes and increased appropriations with a certainty if such a course is continued that the credit of the Government will be impaired.

We hear some intimations that there will be a revaluation of gold. Such a policy, in my opinion, cannot be justified. If that were done, demands might be made to revalue and thus increase the nominal value of the gold above and beyond the $35-per-ounce limit.

Mr. President, I repeat when I state that the Democratic Party, which is in power in the Nation, should set its face toward proper monetary reform, toward a reduction in taxes and a reduction in Federal expenses. It is believed by some that a different course is being pursued, which will mean, if persisted in, unfortunate results. The time has come for economy, for a return to genuine democracy, to policies which protect the rights of individuals and defend rights of the States, and which withdraw the hand of the Federal Government and its army of employees and bureaus from the lives, conduct, and activities of individuals. May I say in conclusion that the time has also come for our Government to take the lead in a movement to reduce the military armaments of the world.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, before the vote is taken on the bill now pending before the Senate, Senate bill 281, to amend further the Civil Service Retirement Act of May 20, 1930, permit me to say that I served as a subcommittee of the Civil Service Committee charged with the study of the bill in the last Congress. At that time the bill was before us substantially in its present form and was passed by the Senate. Likewise I served as a member of the Civil Service Committee during the present Congress. I have had occasion to consider the bill. I supported it in the committee and I favor the bill now. The bill, if enacted, will not greatly add to the cost of government. There will be a slight addition but no material or substantial addition to the cost of government, and I think that it will do some things with respect to the civil-service employees that should now be done by the Congress.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, let me add a word of deep appreciation of the unusually effective services which the Senator from Georgia [Mr. George], the chairman of the committee [Mr. Bulow], and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Gibson], have rendered the civil-service employees in diligently helping to perfect the bill and vigorously supporting it both in the committee and in the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ORDER FOR RECESS—AUTHORIZATION FOR REPORTING, SIGNING OF BILLS, ETC.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, as I must leave to attend a committee meeting I ask unanimous consent at this time that when the Senate concludes its business today it adjourn until 12 o'clock noon on Thursday next; that in the meantime all committees may be permitted to report bills, resolutions, and nominations; that the Vice President may be authorized to sign any bills that may become ready for his signature; and that the Secretary of the Senate may be authorized to receive messages from the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

TAXES UNDER SOCIAL SECURITY ACT

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, when House bill 3790 comes before the Senate it will open to our constitutional reach the entire question of taxation. I intend to offer a rather fundamentally important amendment in that connection, and, therefore, I thought it was fair that I should present the amendment in advance to be printed and lie on the table and that I should make a very brief statement respecting it, because I am very anxious to have the subject fully explored.

Mr. President, I am proposing an amendment which will "freeze" the pay-roll taxes under title II of the Social Security Act for old-age pensions at the existing 2-percent level, instead of permitting the increase of 50 percent in this tax in

I desire to make a brief statement in respect to this problem. We are hearing constantly of the necessity for what is called "business appeasement"; we are hearing constantly of the necessity for tax reform, which brings some small degree of relief and advantage to business. Of all the taxes thave been levied during the last few years that have fallen with heaviest burden upon small business in the United States, the pay-roll taxes under the Social Security Act may be regarded as foremost. These pay-roll taxes at their present level are an almost insurmountable obstacle to business success for thousands upon thousands of small business enterprises in the United States. If the pay-roll tax automatically increases 50 percent next New Year's, the burden which it will represent will be almost fatal in respect to an infinity of small business throughout the country.

I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that automatically, under title II of the Social Security Act, the existing pay-roll taxes will not only increase 50 percent next year but they will increase 200 percent by 1948.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President-

Mr. VANDENBERG. If the Senator will allow me to finish my statement, then I will yield to him.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Very well.

Mr. VANDENBERG. They will increase 200 percent by 1948, and all the increase is totally unnecessary so far as the social-security fund is concerned. Not one penny of this increased taxation is necessary for the integrity of the old-age pensions. All this increase goes into what is called a full-reserve system upon which the present old pension system of the Government is built.

Mr. President, every life-insurance president of this country agrees that a tax-supported pension system does not need a full reserve. The advisory council which was named by the Finance Committee to study the details of this problem a year and a half ago has unanimously reported that the full reserve is not necessary. A full reserve definitely is not necessary, and so the tax increase which is contemplated next year is solely for the benefit of the full reserve.

I desire to call the attention of the Senate to just two sets of figures because they are so challenging. We have collected in pay-roll taxes—and I ask the Senate to mark my words—under title II, and we will have collected up to June 30, 1940, $1,826,000,000. That amount is taken out of the business of the country on the one hand and out of 40,000,000 workers on the other hand.

Remember, we shall have collected $1,826,000,000. How much do you think we shall have paid out in pension benefits? We shall have paid out just $60,000,000 out of $1,826,000,000. In other words, out of these pay-roll-tax collections up to June 30, 1940, we shall have put 3 cents in benefit payments, and 97 cents in the full reserve.

What will happen in the decade from 1941 to 1950, when these additional pay-roll taxes are to come into force? This is what will happen: The reserve will have taken $11,500,000,000 out of a total pay-roll tax collection of $13,750,000,000, and pensions will have had $2,000,000,000—$11,500,000,000 to the reserve, and $2,000,000,000 to pensions.

Mr. President, everybody concedes that a contingent reserve is desirable. A contingent reserve is necessary. A totally adequate contingent reserve is provided by the existing 2-percent pay-roll tax. Any increase in the pay-roll tax is simply and solely a contribution to the full reserve. The full reserve has no purpose in the world to serve except to help the Treasury Department of the United States to cushion its deficit spending.

What will happen when the reserve fund pours into the Treasury? The same thing will happen that has already happened in respect to the billion dollars already collected. The Treasury issues special bonds to the Social Security Board, and spends the cash proceeds of the tax collection. In other words, the reserve represents nothing but a set of I O U's, and the excess tax collection represents nothing except a convenient vehicle to help the Secretary of the Treasury pay the general bills of the Government.

Mr. John T. Flynn, discussing this subject recently in Harper's Magazine for February, called it a swindle. I do not use that word; it is too harsh; but I do assert that the collection of the full reserve which is involved in the tax increase next January, against which I complain, is unnecessary for social-security purposes, is not needed for the integrity of social-security pension funds, and is solely and simply a device to help cushion deficit spending.

I return to my original proposition: Congress should freeze the pay-roll taxes where they are this year, and stop the 50 percent pay-roll tax increase which otherwise will automatically become effective next New Year's Day.

I present the amendment which I send to the desk, which is intended to be offered when House bill 3790 is before the Senate. I ask that it be printed and lie upon the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I shall be glad now to yield to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Lundeen].

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, in this connection I should like to say that there is much truth in the statement of the able Senator from Michigan.

SOCIAL INSECURITY

The act to which the Senator has referred is not a social security act. It is a social insecurity act. It does not provide social security. The whole act ought to be repealed and scrapped. We now hear nothing but proposals for amendments to the act. As a Member of the House of Representatives, I opposed the passage of that act, and in the last session of Congress I proposed and introduced a real social-security measure, S. 6. I introduced that bill in the House of Representatives as H. R. 2827 in the Seventy-fourth Congress and H. R. 7598 in the Seventy-third Congress.

The present act is not founded on fundamentally correct principles. It cannot be made to work. It may well be, as the Senator from Michigan has stated, that the act will be such a handicap upon business as to actually retard recovery. If there is to be any recovery, there must be a reexamination of the whole subject. Some smart boy wrote that act and put it over on the American Congress. We had better get rid of it, or change it fundamentally, before it is too late and involves us in chaos and disaster.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, it was a smart gentleman who put in the law the full reserve, the thing against which I am complaining, for when title II of the Social Security Act was written by the President's own advisers it did not include the full reserve, and the President's advisers did not want the full reserve; and when the consideration of the Social Security Act was finally concluded in the Ways and Means Committee of the House, it did not include the full reserve. It was only upon the final day, when the House committee was ready to report the bill, that the distinguished Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Morgenthau, came to the committee and frankly said he wanted the full reserve, not for any social-security purpose but for the assistance it would give him in financing his problem. That is the way in which the full reserve got into the law. Congress ought to take it out

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President-

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DAVIS. If we continue to collect the full amount, in 1980 we shall have a reserve amounting to $47,000,000,000.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is correct; and inasmuch as the public has to make a general tax contribution through paying annually the interest on the I O U's that are in the full reserve, we might just as well eliminate the reserve and the necessity for paying the interest, and make the payment in a direct contribution to social security and accomplish the same result.

I desire to conclude by pointing out for the Record what the Advisory Council on Social Security has said upon this subject in the past few weeks. I remind the Senate that the Advisory Council was created on the motion of the Senate Finance Committee, and that it was constituted of 24 of the best nonpartisan expert minds we could find in the country to deal with this subject.

I quote just two paragraphs from the report:

With the changes in the benefit structure here recommended and with the introduction of a definite program of governmental contributions to the system, the council believes that the size of the old-age insurance fund will be kept within much lower limits than are involved in the present act.

Listen

Under social-insurance programs it is not necessary to maintain a full invested reserve, such as is required in private insurance, provided definite provision is made for governmental support of the system.

Listen

The only invested fund then necessary would be a reasonable contingency fund as outlined above.

Mr. President, we can stop the pay-roll taxes where they are, we can save American business from the prospective 50-percent increase in its tax load at this point, and still we can hasten and increase immediate benefit payments, if we proceed in the fashion indicated.

Supporting the specific proposal I am submitting—namely, that pay-roll taxes shall be held where they are—I quote the following paragraph, and then I shall have concluded:

Several members of the council feel that the increase of 50 percent in the tax rate, from 2 percent to 3 percent, now provided by the law to be made in 1940, should be reconsidered—

I repeat it-should be reconsidered. Unless the cost of the benefits payable in 1940 and 1941 shall exceed current income from the present 2-percent pay-roll tax, and in view of the probable size of the contingency fund on January 1, 1940—

The size of the contingency fund will be nearly $2,000,-000,000 without any increase in the pay-roll tax—they feel that the increase in the tax rate should not take place before the study herein recommended to be made in 1941 shall have been completed. They believe that under the present conditions it would be better policy to allow the sum involved in the increase in the tax rate to remain in the hands of employees and employers than to use it to increase the contingency fund.

Mr. President, when the appropriate time comes, I shall urge the adoption of this amendment to the tax law, so that business may be given, at least in this one tangible and concrete instance, something besides lip service in respect to a little emancipation and salvation.

TRADE WITH CENTRAL AND SOUTH AMERICA

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, in view of the fact that it is necessary to provide our people with employment, and provide our industries with business and commerce, in order that they may pay the taxes which we have heard so ably discussed here this afternoon, I rise to say that as a result thereof we are fundamentally interested in providing employment for American citizens, and increasing the business and the trade of American industry.

I know that the Senate has at last taken the advice of our honorable colleague the senior Senator from the State of Illinois [Mr. Lewis] in turning its eyes and its ears southward toward Mexico, Central and South America, and the West Indies, realizing at last, as we do, that south of the Rio Grande there reside about 140,000,000 people who, as a matter of fact, are in a position, if they so desire, to provide this country with more trade than they are providing at the present time. In view of the fact that the senior Senator from the State of Illinois has devoted a great deal of his time to an endeavor to direct our attention to trade opportunities in Central and South America, I think thanks are due to the Senator from Illinois from this body and from the American people.

I recall that yesterday we discussed at some length trade relations with the South American countries. By the way, this morning I picked up the Washington newspapers and I observed in the columns thereof that our colleague from Nevada the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations [Mr. Pittman] has suggested that we invite the 20 republics to the south of us to have constructed in this country such ships as they might need, both for war and for commerce, and that by his resolution we further invite them to have constructed here in our arsenals such materials as we may be able to manufacture for them.

In that connection, I wish to say that only a moment ago when I was looking over the pages of the New York Times I read therein printed a statement by our eminent leader of the majority the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Barkley] commenting upon the resolution and statement of the Senator from Nevada and expressing the opinion that he could see no serious objection to it inasmuch as, according to my recollection—and that is but vague, since I glanced over the article rapidly—it might help business in this country.

On page 6 of the New York Times of the issue of March 14, 1939, under the date line "Washington, March 13," I read:

The Pittman resolution proposing to bolster the defenses of Latin American countries by permitting them to obtain arms and munitions manufactured in United States Government plants was endorsed tonight by Senator Barkley.

Of the resolution Mr. BARKLEY said:

"There should be no serious objection to it. It merely would tend to aid industry and give employment in this country, and it should serve to improve relations with the Latin American republics."

The Senator remarked further upon the resolution of my distinguished colleague, the Senator from Nevada [Mr. Pittman], but as to his additional remarks I shall take the opportunity to discuss them at length at a later date. I merely wish to bring to the attention of Members of this body his statement when he said:

There should be no serious objection to it. It merely would tend to aid industry and give employment in this country.

And that is what we are anxious to do. I am in thorough accord with the Senator to that extent, because, as a matter of fact, all of us are desirous of aiding industry and thereby solving one of the greatest problems, perhaps the greatest, with which this country is confronted today.

In order to be able to start the wheels of industry revolving again and to give impetus, I may say to industry, in order that we may thereby absorb twelve or thirteen million people who are unemployed, we must of necessity find a market for the commodities of our land which are produced by our agricultural element, and we must of necessity, as we all know, find a market for our manufactured goods.

We agree, as I mentioned a moment ago, that we have turned our eyes southward with a view to considering the potential opportunities offered at the present time by the republics to the south of us. In the consideration of those republics let us take this one item for a moment.

Great Britain and France have recognized the Nationalist conquest of Spain, which conquest has brought about, more than ever before, peace and order and law in Spain, wherein reside anywhere from 24,000,000 to 28,000,000 people.

Unfortunately, since July 1936, a civil strife, revolution, has raged in historic Spain; but I believe that today the world is happy that the difficulties have at last been ended, and I personally am of the opinion that within the next month all the disorder will have been settled in Spain, because unquestionably by that time General Franco will have been successful in extending his sphere of influence over all of Spain.

As my well-informed colleagues know, during the revolution—that is, the greater portion thereof—General Franco exercised jurisdiction over approximately 10,000,000 people, while the so-called loyalists, the liberals, exercised authority over a larger portion of the population, about 14,000,000 people. In the Catalonian territory, the capital of which was Barcelona, which in later years really became the capital of the loyalists, were found all the great textile plants and manufacturing concerns in that section of Spain.

Mr. President, we must remember that Spain is the mother country of all of the countries to the south of us in the Western Hemisphere, outside of the West Indies. Spain is the mother country of all of those republics. As the mother country of all those republics, Spain, until the date of the revolution in July 1936, exercised a great deal of influence over those countries and the inhabitants thereof. Therefore, I am ready to assume that after peace has been brought out of chaos by General Franco, and Spain has thereafter assumed her proper position in the sphere of influence exercised by the larger nations of the world, she will reassume her former influence over our sister republics to the south. We must not lose sight of that, particularly in view of the fact that we are at this time making strenuous efforts to create more trade and find more customers in Central and South American countries. That is point No. 1, and I restate today that, in my opinion, we should recognize the Franco government in Spain. I have high hope that our administration during the present week, before next Sunday, will extend recognition to the duly qualified and constituted government of Spain.

The difficulty at the present time, as most of us know, is that some of the military leaders of one faction in Spain today unfortunately are holding off the date of surrender. They are perfectly willing to postpone that day, an evil day for them, because in their selfishness they would rather sacrifice the lives of innocent children and women and men who want an honorable surrender now than bring about peace and order. But I assume that just so soon as the armies of General Franco have taken the positions they desire to take, the untaken portions of Spain will be added to that portion already under the supervision of Franco, and, as a result, the millions of people in the territory now under those opposing him will be provided with the peace and the opportunities for prosperity which they enjoyed prior to the unfortunate beginning of civil strife in July 1936

Mr. President, as I stated a moment ago Great Britain and France have already recognized the Franco government. France was very eager to bring about an early recognition because France found herself between the devil and the deep blue sea, or I should say more properly that France was anxious to bring about recognition of the Franco government because she found herself between the devil and the dark blue English Channel, because to the right of her was Mussolini, to the north was Hitler, and to the left of her was the English Channel, and the only place she had to go was into the English Channel if she became involved in a controversy in Europe at this time. We all know that the French Government during the civil strife has rendered a great deal of assistance to Loyalist Spain, which is attributable to the influence which was brought to bear by the communistic element in France, a statement which would be confirmed by word of mouth by almost any Frenchman if perchance one should visit the Republic of France. If perchance, Mr. President, you had visited some of the warring sections of Spain, you would have observed with your own eyes hundreds upon hundreds, totalling into the thousands, of trucks that have been moving constantly from Spain to the left of the little Republic of Andorra, particularly into the Catalonian section, en route to Barcelona and Valencia, the two cities that were held by the loyalists during the closing days of the recent controversy in that section of Spain.

France was anxious to recognize the Franco government, first, because she wanted to make friends with that government, which is going to direct authority over the more than 24,000,000 people in Spain.

As for Great Britain, of course, she played hide-and-seek during all the years of the controversy in Spain, and no one could tell where in the world Great Britain stood. She was here one day and there the next, and I doubt if anyone ever knew where she really stood. Of course, if the Loyalists had won, I dare say she would have been just as ready to recognize that government as she was to recognize the government of Franco. The British have had so many years of experience in the diplomatic field that they play no favorites; but the British always play the winner. Furthermore, the British were anxious to get on the good side of General Franco, because they knew that when he won and had supervision over Spain Gibraltar could be made impotent; and, of course, Great Britain further recognized the fact that during these trying, unfortunate years, in which more than a million people were killed, the sympathies of the little Republic of Andorra have been with General Franco.

Besides that, the British recognize that during these trying years the influence of Portugal has been with Franco. If we stand upon that portion of the European Continent facing south we find that Portugal is just to the right of Spain. Portugal is along the Atlantic coast. Its capital, as we know, is Lisbon. Portugal and its capital, Lisbon, have been more prominently brought to our attention in the last 3 weeks than ever before, because in the trans-Atlantic flight by the American planes the first stop will be the Azores, and according to a franchise and arrangement we have with the Portuguese Government, the second stop must be made at Lisbon, Portugal. Although Portugal derives about 90 percent of all her revenue from Great Britain as the result of her sale to Great Britain of dried fish, sardines, cork, and Portuguese wine, the sympathies and the influence of the Portuguese people have been with the Franco side. Franco is now in a position to make Gibraltar impotent, and the British are aware of the fact that the position of Portugal in reference to Spain on the Atlantic will work to their great disadvantage unless they are friendly with the Franco government.

Mr. President, I wish to say that I am interested, as are all other Senators, in bringing about the early recognition by our country of Spain. We might just as well put it in our pipes and smoke it that Spain is going to be under the direction of General Franco. As to what sort of government he is going to set up in Spain I do not know. I repeat, it is none of our business what kind of government the 24,000,000 out of the 28,000,000 people of Spain want. It is none of our business what kind of government the people of any nation in the world choose to live under. The point I am trying to make, Mr. President, is that we are worrying ourselves in an earnest endeavor to solve the unemployment problem, and the best way to solve it is to start the wheels of industry turning, which will of necessity absorb the unemployed we have in our country at the present time.

While we are looking southward on our continent to the 140,000,000 people who live there to gain more trade for the industries of the United States, abiding by the suggestion so ably made by that beloved and eminent statesman from Illinois [Mr. Lewis], I say that we should now turn leftward, looking across the Atlantic, and focus our interest for the time being upon Spain, with a view to getting the trade, or at least our portion thereof, of the 24,000,000 to 28,000,000 people inhabiting Spain.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota. Mr. LUNDEEN. I understood the able Senator to say that we are much concerned with the unemployment problem. I am glad to hear that, because from the debates I have been listening to in the Senate for some time it has seemed to me that many of us were more interested in saving the world than saving the situation for the unemployed in our own country. I am glad to hear the Senator say that we are now interested in saving the situation of the unemployed here in our own country.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I thank the Senator, and I wish to state, in answer to what he has said, that we are all greatly interested, more so than ever before, in saving the United States of America; and I have arrived at the point where I believe the only way we can save America is to absorb the unemployed. That is the thing we must do. I believe the only way we can possibly absorb the unemployed is to encourage industry; start the wheels of industry turning. It was suggested a day or two ago that we could get rid of a great many unemployed in our country by shipping them to Brazil. I mentioned on the floor of the Senate, I think it was yesterday, that a gentleman from Brazil, Mr. Aranha, was in this country and had talked a couple of times with the President; and according to the newspaper reports this benevolent gentleman from Brazil, who came here to get $120,000,000, which sum is alleged to be for the purpose of paying debts of Brazil due to other countries, offered to help us solve our unemployment question by suggesting that we send a great many of our W. P. A. workers to Brazil to develop the territory of Brazil, and that we pay their transportation and pay their monthly

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Is that not in line with the policy of world saving in which we have been engaged? I am sure the Senator does not believe, now when we see Czechoslovakia breaking up into separate units, that we ought to go over and save the integrity of the Czechoslovakia nation? We were so very excited about Munich awhile ago, and about Austria before that, and about world saving and world policing. Are we finally turning our backs on this world-saving business; are we thinking of America once again, our own country? Does the Senator think we are adopting a new trend of policy? I hope so. Let us turn back to the old landmarks, the foreign policy of Washington, Jefferson, Jackson, and Lincoln. That foreign policy is good enough for me. It is the north star of our foreign affairs, our eternal guide given us by our founders and fathers of this great Republic.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I will say to the Senator that I do not see any need whatsoever of our becoming greatly excited or disturbed about what is going on in Europe, because the same thing is going on in Europe today that has been going on for a thousand years. If Senators will turn back the pages of history, they will find that the same thing is happening now that has happened heretofore. By the way, at that point I recall that a year or two ago I read the reprint of an editorial which appeared in one of the early published magazines of this country. The editorial of which I read the reprint was published about 50 years ago.

It has been a long time since I have read that editorial; but my recollection of it is that the editorial writer was lamenting the fact that Russia was hanging over Europe like a great cloud, and that there were disorders and uprisings among the Hindus in India, and that the British were experiencing great trouble in keeping down the uprisings. The article went on to say that the political situation in France was distressful, that it looked as though the Government was going to be overthrown, and that it was too bad that millions upon millions of persons were then out of employment in the United States.

Virtually the same thing is happening today, except that Russia hangs over the whole world. There are perhaps more uprisings and more rioting in India today among the people who are seeking liberty than ever before. I think Gandhi went on strike the other day.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the distinguished Senator from North Carolina yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Certainly.
Mr. LUNDEEN. I understand that India is incorporated in a great democracy—the so-called British democracywith all the wonderful tenets of government that any democracy has. We are told that the Government of Great Britain is a benevolent and kindly democracy, and that it is a splendid thing that Britain rules over India and other nations-nations enslaved and put down by the sword, probably for Christianizing and benevolent purposes.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I dare say the Senator knows the history of India. I dare say every Member of this body is familiar with the conquest of India, and how Great Britain finally was able to obtain control of that vast country, which today has a population of more than 355,000,000. Great Britain is a so-called democracy. Two million Irishmen near her shores have been trying to throw off the yoke of oppression since the year 1717, when, according to history, Great Britain first started her aggressions; but they have not been able to do so.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator again vield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. How about the benevolent British rule over South Africa—the Transvaal, and so forth?

Mr. REYNOLDS. The Senator is familiar with the cases of Northern Rhodesia, Southern Rhodesia, the Transvaal, and Uganda. As a matter of fact, all of Great Britain's territory in South Africa is conquered territory. The Senator is thoroughly familiar with the strife in the Boer country and the Transvaal, from Cape Town away beyond Johannesburg, for

Mr. LUNDEEN. The British did not know that gold and diamonds existed in South Africa until after they had conquered it, did they? [Laughter.]

Mr. REYNOLDS. No; they did not know that.

Mr. LUNDEEN. They just heard about it after they had conquered it. [Laughter.]

Mr. REYNOLDS. That point brings on further argument. The British always become more interested as soon as they learn that valuables are to be found in mother earth. The Senator will recall that Great Britain now owns British Guiana. In 1895 gold was discovered in southern Venezuela and norther Guiana. At that time the British began to encroach northward upon the territory of Venezuela. Venezuela lifted up her hands to the conscience of the world and called upon Uncle Sam to save her. The British were going to devour her. At that time Cleveland was President of the United States, and he was about to issue an ultimatum of war. If the Senator will look into the volume by Professor Dennis, of Yale, on the diplomatic relations of the United States, he will find that President Cleveland forced the British to cease their aggressions at that time.

In that connection, let me say that the same thing is happening today. We talk about being the "big brother" of the countries to the south of us, and giving one country $120,000,000 for favors and trade. Almost at our door is the little republic of Guatemala. It is a lovely section of the world. There is no more attractive city for tourists than Guatemala City. Just the other day the Guatemalans lifted their hands to high heaven and cried out in despair to the world to come to their rescue. They said then, and they say now, that Great Britain is trying to devour some of their land. They wanted to arbitrate the question, and Great Britain refused to arbitrate it. What happened? Guatemalans suggested that our own beloved President. Franklin D. Roosevelt, the fine man we have in the White House today, who is interested in the people to the south of us, be selected as an arbitrator. What did the British say? They are unappreciative. They said, "No; we will not have President Roosevelt as arbitrator. We want you to send this case to the World Court at The Hague, in Holland."

The Guatemalans did not do it, and they will not do it. I will tell the Senator why they will not do it. If the Senator were a Guatemalan, he would not agree to it. A burned child fears the fire. In the first place, as the Senator knows, the World Court is the back door to the League of Nations. In the second place, the Senator knows that the World Court is owned by Great Britain. In the third place, only one case has ever been appealed to The Hague from any of the countries of South America. That was a case which was appealed to The Hague by the Republic of Brazil in 1929. The party on the other side was the Republic of France. The case was decided in favor of the Republic of France. Why? I shall not say why; but I will say to the Senator that one of the judges was formerly the legal adviser of the Republic of France.

Getting back to Spain-

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the able Senator

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Before the Senator enters upon that discussion I desire to observe that it would be well for America if we adopted toward our people and Government the British methods and their disposition toward their own people and Government. They are good, patriotic Englishmen, who are always looking after old England and the British Empire, while we are engaged in world-saving. We ought to take a page from the British book of diplomacy and conduct and be concerned about our own affairs, our own development, and our own prosperity. That is exactly what the British are doing. That is what we ought to do in America.

Mr. REYNOLDS. John Bull is looking after his nephews and his nieces. Let me tell the Senator what happened. I do not like to get away from the subject of Spain, because, frankly, I am interested in selling North Carolina cotton to the Franco government. I am interested in North Carolina cotton, just as the Senator from Texas [Mr. Connally], who honors me with his presence today, is interested in Texas cotton. Texas produces more cotton than any other State in the Union. Why is the Senator from Texas present today? He is interested in selling cotton. According to the latest reports, we have millions of bales of cotton.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Before the Senator returns to the discussion of the problems of Spain, I should like to call his attention to a subject which he started to discuss a few moments ago, when his attention was diverted by a question from the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Lundeen]. The Senator did not finish his discussion. He started to discuss Gandhi in India, and he said only a few words when he yielded to the Senator from Minnesota for a question.

I think the world in general is interested in Gandhi. I know the Senator from Illinois has been watching him very closely during the past few weeks. I should like to have some further information from the Senator from North Carolina upon that great character.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I shall be glad to give whatever information I possess.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. In connection with Gandhi, does the Senator hope to sell much cotton from North Carolina or elsewhere to Gandhi? [Laughter.]

Mr. REYNOLDS. I will say to the Senator that if North Carolina expected to sell only the amount of cotton necessary to make a cotton robe for Gandhi, it would not get very far, because Gandhi, on account of the oppressions of John Bull, is so thoroughly emaciated that today he weighs only about 78 pounds.

Speaking about John Bull, I will say to the Senator-Mr. LUCAS. I take it the Senator will later return to Gandhi.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I shall try to return to Gandhi in a moment.

John Bull is looking after his people. He has always done so. If Uncle Sam would pay more attention to his nieces and nephews in the United States, he would not be in the position he occupies today.

Mr. President, I say that I am interested in cotton.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. MINTON. Who buys more cotton from the United States, in which the Senator is so much interested, Franco or Great Britain?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am surprised that the Senator should ask such a question. I have always considered and now consider the junior Senator from Indiana as one of the bestinformed Members of the Senate. Why I should be called upon to answer an elementary question of that sort is beyond my comprehension.

Mr. MINTON. The thing that disturbed me was the Senator's great concern for Franco at the expense of Great Britain. The Senator placed all of the discussion on a cotton basis. I could not understand his doing so when everybody, even the schoolboys of North Carolina, knows that Great Britain buys much more cotton from North Carolina than Franco buys or ever will buy.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Certainly.

Mr. MINTON. Why the Senator should be shedding crocodile tears about Franco buying cotton is something I do not quite understand. I think there must be something besides that element.

Mr. REYNOLDS. In the first place, Franco has never had an opportunity to make any purchases from North Carolina. Everybody knows, even the school children in Indiana in the primary grades or in the kindergarten, that Great Britain has always been a large purchaser of cotton from the United States, which means cotton from North Carolina and Texas, among other States.

The greatest industrialization that we can remember, insofar as Texas is concerned, began in Great Britain. They have plants at Lancaster and Manchester and Birmingham. Great Britain has always been a great consumer of our cotton, but in regard to the consumption of cotton I very frankly state to the Senator that Japan has been the greatest consumer of the cotton of the South. As recently as 1935, if it is desired to go into that matter, Japan herself bought $115,-000,000 worth of cotton from the Southern States, and of that cotton which she manufactured into textiles she only sent back into this country $15,000,000 worth of textiles. In other words, for every $115 that she paid to the people of the South for cotton, all the people of the United States gave back to Japan only $15.

Mr. President, I am interested in increasing the sale of the cotton of the South. We are confronted with a serious problem there. As the junior Senator from Texas knows, every cotton producer of the South is worried. Why? Because our competitors are increasing their production all the time while we are seeking markets for our cotton.

Let us see about that. I read the following from a newspaper article:

With the United States Government holding 11,000,000 bales of surplus cotton off the market, both the American cotton export trade and the British cotton industry in Lancashire are passing through the worst in a long series of lean years.

So far this crop year, exports of American cotton have slumped 42.5 percent as compared with last year. At the current rate, the present cotton year promises to be the worst year for exports since

And so forth. This article contains some enlightening statistics, and I should like to have it embodied in the RECORD as a part of my observations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the article will be printed in the RECORD.

The article referred to is as follows:

UNITED STATES HOLDS COTTON

With the United States Government holding 11,000,000 bales of surplus cotton off the market, both the American cotton export trade and the British cotton industry in Lancashire are passing through the worst in a long series of lean years.

So far this crop year, exports of American cotton have slumped 42.5 percent as compared with last year. At the current rate, the present cotton year promises to be the worst year for exports since the turn of the century.

the turn of the century.

the turn of the century.

In Lancashire spinning production is running 53 percent of capacity compared with 88 percent a year ago. Imports of raw cotton are the smallest since 1931. Exports of cotton yarn and piece goods have established new post-war low records.

American export trade in cotton is affected directly by the Government-loan policy. In effect, the Government stands ready to make a semipermanent loan against cotton delivered to it by the American grower. Rate at which it will loan is well above a market price depressed by a huge surplus of cotton. Cotton growers have followed the natural course and turned their crop into loan cotton which is then blocked off the market. Result has been a growing tightness in spot cotton which affects not only the American export trade but the domestic textile trade as well. With 11,000,000 bales of surplus cotton stored away, it is difficult even for domestic mills to obtain requirements of desirable grades, because growers are not disposed to repay their loans and redem cotton which would have to be sold at a lower price in the open market.

Lancashire's difficulties as reflected by the 73.4-percent drop in exports of American cotton to Great Britain are in large part caused exports of American cotton to Great Britain are in large part caused by the American-loan program. There is plenty of American cotton available for export, as well as for domestic use, but it is of inferior grade. Bulk of the cotton that is suitable for Lancashire mills has gone into the loan and it is impossible to convert mill machinery easily to handle other grades. This is the difficulty to which the Master Cotton Spinners' Federation referred in England yesterday when their resolution stated that Lancashire cotton spinners are funding it increasingly difficult to obtain adequate supplies of suit. finding it increasingly difficult to obtain adequate supplies of suitable American cotton.

This difficulty is a body blow to the long-suffering Lancashire area in England which British economic reports are now beginning to term one of the "special" or distressed areas. In addition to the difficulty of supplies, Lancashire has had to face the long-term trend of restricted foreign markets.

COTTON EXPORT FIGURES

Washington.—Exports of United States cotton the last half of the current season are expected by the Farm Administration to be considerably higher relative to a year earlier than during the first half of this season. The Bureau of Argicultural Economics based its forecast, in part, on the fact that midseason stocks of American cotton in foreign countries were more than one-fourth smaller than a year earlier, whereas foreign consumption of American cotton is now running about one-eighth less than at the same time last January cotton exports, reported at 290,000 running bales, were 55 percent less than the comparatively small exports in January 1938 and were the smallest for the month since 1872, the B. A. E. said.

Department of Agriculture officials last night refused to comment on action of the Lancashire cotton industry in adopting a resolution yesterday blaming the Government's cotton-loan program for the reduced American exports. They pointed out, however, that the cotton now held under loan was available to any purchaser who wished to pay the price for it. In response to the suggestion that Secretary Wallace had been giving his urgent attention to the matter for some time. They added further that any release of the loan stocks to private trade channels would have to be authorized by Congress.

Representative Fulmer (Democrat, South Carolina), a member of the House Agriculture Committee, commenting on the action of the British group, said that the situation described in that statement does not coincide with his understanding of the cotton situation abroad and said he believed it was made "in the interest of speculation." Secretary Wallace, Mr. Fulmer said, recently informed a congressional committee that the cotton situation in England was largely the same as our domestic problem, having more cotton on hand than they can use.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, likewise I desire to bring to the attention of the Senate the fact that the other nations of the world are turning their eyes and attention toward Spain, with a view to getting trade there. That is what we are interested in. In pursuance of that subject I bring to the attention of the Senate a dispatch in the New York Times from Buenos Aires, the capital of the Argentine Republic, dated March 3, 1939, entitled "Argentine Grain to Spain. Export of 7,346,000 bushels of wheat to be subsidized." I should like to have that dispatch embodied in the RECORD as a part of my remarks showing that every country of the world is looking to getting business in Spain. I say that we should do likewise.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the newspaper dispatch will be printed in the RECORD.

The dispatch referred to is as follows:

ARGENTINE GRAIN TO SPAIN-EXPORT OF 7,346,000 BUSHELS OF WHEAT TO BE SUBSIDIZED

Buenos Aires, Argentina, March 3.—The Argentina Government has subsidized the shipment of 7,346,000 bushels of wheat to Spain, to be paid for within 2 years. Simultaneously, the exchange-control board was instructed to issue import permits for Spanish merchandise at the official rate of exchange.

The deal also includes the shipment of 1,035,000 bushels of oats

The deal also includes the simplicit of 1,050,000 bushels of versions and 585,000 bushels of rye.

The Central Bank has opened a 2-year credit with the Hispano-Americano Bank, which figures as the purchaser of the grain, most of which is now held by the Argentine Grain Board. The grain will be shipped at the market price on the day of shipment on the basis f. o. b. at the Argentine port of shipment.

The newspapers give much prominence to the arrangement as the reopening of trade relations with Spain, which have been practically paralyzed during the Spanish war.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, in conclusion, let me say that I happened to observe in a newspaper recently issued-I have forgotten the name of the newspaper, as I make many clippings from time to time, but I think it is from the New York Evening Sun—a letter under the heading "Spain's Future—An Argument in Behalf of the Franco Establishment." I submit that article in reference to my suggestion as to the recognition of the Franco form of government. The letter is signed by Mr. Joseph Larocque and is dated New York, February 25, 1939.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter referred to is as follows:

SPAIN'S FUTURE—AN ARGUMENT IN BEHALF OF THE FRANCO ESTABLISHMENT

To the EDITOR OF THE SUN.

SIR: In this country the success of the Spanish Nationalists has Sir. In this country the success of the Spanish Nationalists has been proclaimed as a major defeat for democracy and as a triumph for nazi-fascism. Proloyalist sympathy has been aroused by capitalizing hatred of Hitler and Mussolini and by disseminating fear that a Nationalist victory would mean the creation of an additional totalitarian state. While the merits of the local conflict, as such, have been wholly ignored, the attention of the public has been constantly directed to the possible international implications of a loyalist defeat and they have been led to believe that the revolt in Spain was instigated, and has been carried through, by Fascist Italy, using Franco merely as her tool, for the purpose of destroying a republic administered by the duly elected representatives of the people, and setting up in its place a dictatorship wholly subservient to Mussolini. The leaders in this campaign of misinformation have selzed the word "democracy" as their slogan and have so tortured its meaning that it is now well-nigh unrecognizable.

How can it be seriously contended that the Communists, anarchists, and syndicalists who were fighting for the loyalist cause were truly interested in democracy as we have hitherto understood the meaning of the word?

The true history of the Spanish civil war can readily be obtained from available sources. Long prior to the revolution Spain was swarming with Russian agents, spreading Communist propaganda. The present loyalist government came into power through fraud and intimidation, and in fact Azaña's government was illegal in its inception, as the Cortes had not been dissolved prior to his taking office. It is a historical fact that on February 17, 1936, there was a general jail delivery, during which all prisoners were released, including those charged with murder and other felonies, and that at about the same time churches were burned and shops and private homes located by more corruing red face displaying and that at about the same time churches were burned and shops and private homes looted by mobs carrying red flags displaying the hammer and sickle. For years Barcelona had been a hotbed of anarchy, and early in the rebellion the anarchists, by their excesses, including the murder of thousands of priests and nuns, should have earned the opprobrium of the civilized world. For months a war ranged within a war between anarchists and Communists for control of the loyalist government.

Vincent Sheean, a loyalist sympathizer, who has just arrived from Spain, is reported to have said in a recent interview that Franco has in his possession a list of 800,000 anarchists and 300,000 Communists, all of whom, we may assume, have been fighting for the cause of what their American friends call "democracy." The progressive stages of the Russian revolution have found a close parallel in Spain, the chief point of difference being that Russia lacked a Franco to check the atrocities of Lenin, Trotsky, and Stalin, and of their horde of lesser butchers. The truth is that Franco, far from being a mere tool of Fascist Italy, is a patriot who has fought to relieve his country of intolerable conditions and to has fought to relieve his country of intolerable conditions and to restore order out of chaos. At the present time his success seems restore order out of chaos. At the present time his success seems assured and instead of characterizing the result of his self-sacrificing labors as a tragic defeat for democracy, it should be hailed as an important achievement in the preservation of civilization. In captured territory Franco has done a marvelous work of reconstruction, and the fear expressed in many quarters that he would indulge in cruel reprisals has proved to be false. In Barcelona the streets have been the scene of delirious joy when Franco's troops marched in marched in.

It is, of course, vital to the interests of Italy, as it would be to the interests of a democracy (in the true sense of the word), that neither communism nor anarchy should flourish in an adjoining country; but that a permanent dictatorship will be established, either under the suzerainty of Italy or otherwise, is improbable; this would be inconsistent with Spanish individualism.

These facts have been wholly disregarded, and it is curious that those who have been most insistent upon creating a dictatorship in this country by surrendering all powers of government to the President have, with few exceptions, been those who have been most vehement in their denunciation of Hitler, Mussolini, and Franco. We have extended the hand of friendship to Soviet Russia and Communist Mexico, but we still hesitate to recognize the Spanish nationalist government, in spite of the fact that self-interest requires us to establish commercial relations with her as early as possible.

early as possible.

During the excitement about dictators the Communists in this country have been playing a clever part. No longer are all Communists found within the Communist Party, but, boring from within, they are constantly seeking to corrupt both our major within, they are constantly seeking to corrupt both our major political parties and to destroy the foundations of our Government. So distorted has become public opinion that it is now accepted by many as a truism that the sole qualification for membership in the brotherhood of democracy is the hatred of foreign dictators, and we find gathered together under the banner of democracy those of all shades of political opinion, from conservatives to the most extreme radicals. Without doubt, politics makes strange bed-fellows. By extension of the meaning of "democracy," Communists have been automatically transferred to the democratic class and have been covered with a cloak of respectability which they are now wearing with easy assurance. They can now relax and permit the more respectable haters of dictators to pull their chestnuts out of the fire. As Moscow directs Communist activities here, the of the fire. As Moscow directs Communist activities here, the Soviets are for obvious reasons excluded from the category of Soviets are for obvious reasons excluded from the category of dictatorships.

President Wilson said that we entered the last war "to make the world safe for democracy." Shall we be forced into the next war to make democracy safe for the world? In our fear of a possible future and indirect danger from nazi-fascism abroad, must we close our eyes to the present and very real danger of communism at home? at home?

NEW YORK, February 25.

CONFIRMATION OF NOMINATION OF C. B. ALLEN

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, there is only one nomination on the Executive Calendar. I ask unanimous consent that, as in executive session, the Senate proceed to the consideration of that nomination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Chair hears none, and the clerk will state the nomination.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of C. B. Allen, of West Virginia, to be member of the Air Safety Board within the Civil Aeronautics Authority.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a short biographical sketch of Mr. Allen, who is a native of West Virginia and a most competent and deserving man. I further request that an article which appeared in the United States Air Services of the issue of March 1939 be inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the matters referred to by the Senator from West Virginia will be printed in the RECORD.

The matters referred to are as follows:

BIOGRAPHICAL DATA ON C. B. ALLEN

Born: Moorefield, W. Va., July 18, 1896. Education: Moorefield Public School; West Virginia Preparatory School, Keyser, W. Va.; University of West Virginia, Morgantown,

ALLEN THIRD MEMBER OF C. A. A. SAFETY BOARD

ALLEN THIRD MEMBER OF C. A. A. SAFETY BOARD

Appointment of C. B. Allen, until recently acting in charge of the C. A. A.'s Information and Statistical Division since September 1938, to be third member of the Air Safety Board of C. A. A. was announced on February 9. At the time Allen's first post was to be filled it was known that C. A. A. had set an unusual combination of qualifications as prerequisite for anyone to be considered; what the organization wanted was an experienced newspaperman who at the same time was an aviator. There are aviators who write, but relatively few working newspaper reporters are aviators. Allen comes under both classifications.

Interrupting studies at the University of West Virginia in mid-course, he entered the Aviation Section of the Army Signal Corps when the United States went to war with Germany. Gaining his commission too late to go overseas, he nevertheless has maintained an active status as a captain in the Army Air Corps Reserve. Besides being a military pilot, he is licensed as a transport pilot. Furthermore, from 1921 to the date of his joining the C. A. A. staff he was an active newspaperman. After some years of general reporting and service as editor on papers in Cincinnati and New York, he became aviation editor of the New York Herald Tribune—was on leave of absence from that paper when nominated by the President for his new office.

C. B. is a native of Moorefield, W. Va., born in 1896. He is honest, fearless tireless and extremely intelligent.

C. B. is a native of Moorefield, W. Va., born in 1896. He is honest, fearless, tireless, and extremely intelligent.

If these characteristics are still valued in a rapidly changing world, our young friend should go far.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I now move that the Senate advise and consent to Mr. Allen's nomination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from West Virginia.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I move that the President be notified of the action of the Senate in confirming Mr. Allen's nomination.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, MARCH 14, 1939

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Bishop Edwin Holt Hughes, senior bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church in the United States, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

God, be merciful unto us, and bless us; and cause his face to shine upon us, that Thy way may be known upon earth, Thy saving health among all nations. Let the people praise Thee, O God; let all the people praise Thee. Then shall the earth yield her increase; and God, even our own God, shall bless us. God shall bless us; and all the ends of the earth shall fear him.

O Lord, make our country a blessing to itself, a blessing to all the men and women and children that dwell within its borders, a blessing to men everywhere, so that the statue called Liberty Enlightening the World may be not only a symbol but a glorious fact. Make our Jerusalem to be "the joy of the whole earth." To this end and to all the purposes that meet Thy holy will, bless Thou these lawmakers on this day. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Hess, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 4218. An act making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the foregoing bill, requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. Tydings, Mr. Byrnes, Mr. Adams, Mr. Overton, Mr. Truman, Mr. Hale, and Mr. Bridges to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman withhold the point of order for the moment to enable the Chair to dispose of some preliminary matters?

Mr. RANKIN. Certainly, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. WHELCHEL].

STAR-ROUTE CONTRACTS

Mr. WHELCHEL. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 76, to authorize the Postmaster General to withhold the awarding of star-route contracts for a period of 45 days.

I may say that the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads have had this under consideration and are unanimous in their conclusion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that this joint resolution is somewhat in the nature of an emergency matter.

Mr. WHELCHEL. It is, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the joint resolution. The Clerk read as follows:

Senate Joint Resolution 76

Resolved, etc., That the Postmaster General is authorized and directed to withhold the awarding of star-route contracts for which bids have been received in the third contract section for a period of 45 days after March 7, 1939.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not, because I was in the committee when the bill was ordered out, will not the gentleman give us a brief explanation of what constitutes the emergency?

Mr. WHELCHEL. I shall be glad to.

Mr. Speaker, in 1937 a bill was presented to the Congress permitting the Post Office Department at its discretion to continue star-route contracts beyond the period of their termination. This bill passed both Houses of Congress in 1937, but I believe it was vetoed by the President. This same question again presents itself. As appears from the face of the resolution the time on these contracts has expired.

This resolution simply directs that 45 days be granted for the purpose of going into this question and giving it proper consideration.

A similar House resolution calls for 60 days. The Senate resolution calls for 45 days. I ask that the Senate resolution be substituted for the House resolution and that it be adopted.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia for the immediate consideration of the Senate resolution?

There was no objection.

The joint resolution was read a third time and passed, and a motion to reconsider and a similar House resolution (H. J. Res. 184) were laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record and to include therein an article on the cotton problem prepared by Hon. H. W. Nalley, of Alamo, Ga.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

MONETARY SYSTEM

The SPEAKER. In view of the fact that a point of no quorum is pending, the Chair cannot recognize Members except to submit unanimous-consent requests.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, the recent statement by the Federal Reserve Board will hardly be encouraging to those who look to the Board for constructive leadership in finding a way out of our present economic difficulties. I hardly expected from the Board an endorsement of forward-looking measures for monetary control and improvement of our present inadequate system. But neither did I expect a statement so barren and sterile as the one we got. The Board has pointed out that since the Nation depends on loans of bank credit for the creation of its medium of exchange and since the Board can neither compel the people to borrow or banks to lend, therefore it is impossible for the Board to exert effective control over the volume of money in circulation. The Board is substantially correct in this. But the disappointing thing is that not one constructive suggestion is made for correcting this situation and the implication is left that we should not even attempt to correct it, because, forsooth, even if we eliminated the monetary factors making for booms and depressions, other problems would still remain. Thus the Board disclaims responsibility for our present economic plight and tells us, in effect, that the Federal Reserve System cannot be expected to do the things which I am sure 90 percent of all the American people expected of it in its inception. It happens that I agree with the Board in its evaluation of our present machinery for monetary control, but it is dismaying, to say the least, to find in the Board's statement not one paragraph suggesting a method whereby we can seek improvement. On the other hand, no critic of our present system of the private creation of our money in the form of bank credit could have delivered a more devastating account of the helplessness of the American Nation so long as that system continues.

To say that monetary measures alone cannot solve our problem unless supplemented by appropriate tax policy and programs of wise and effective governmental expenditure is to state the obvious. But surely this is not to conclude that because other things need doing too, therefore we should leave what the Board itself demonstrates to be an uncontrollable monetary system in its present unsatisfactory condition.

The statement of the Federal Reserve Board that it is powerless to control either the volume or flow of money in the United States is a truism. The significant thing is that the Board fails to suggest that it be given power to exercise effective control over the creation and destruction of demand bank deposits. Demand deposits, not currency, as the Board points out, are by far the most important part of our circulating medium.

Neither the Federal Reserve Board nor any other agency could possibly control the volume or flow of America's money so long as a system of the private manufacture of flat credit on the basis of fractional reserves behind demand bank deposits is in effect. This is the reason for proposing, as my bill, H. R. 4931, does, to establish a system of 100 percent reserves behind demand bank deposits, and to vest in a Government monetary agency, instead of the private banking system, the function of bringing money or credit into circulation.

The Board states that it cannot force banks to lend or people to borrow. Evidently this is true and the Board's statement in this respect is convincing proof, if any is needed, of the economic helplessness of a nation which depends upon a monetary system wherein its money is created solely through the borrowing of bank credit.

And the real point here is that so long as the Nation depends for an adequate supply of the medium of exchange on the private contraction of debt it will have an uncontrollable and, in a highly industrial age, positively dangerous monetary system.

What is needed is power in a Government monetary agency, not to control all prices, but to put in circulation a volume of money corresponding to the growth of the Nation's population and business life—thus maintaining a reasonable stability in the buying power of the dollar itself.

And as the Board infers, though without directly stating it, such expansion cannot be achieved merely by increasing bank reserves. Therefore such expansion must be achieved in much more direct fashion by having the governmental monetary agent put into circulation either by the purchase of Government bonds from the public or the payment of a portion of governmental expenses from such additional volume of money as may be required to make possible increased prosperity. Merely to increase the amount of excess reserves is likely indeed, as the Board says, to be ineffectual. To pay old-age pensions or reduce the outstanding debt by purchasing bonds from the public would on the other hand actually achieve the expansion we need.

To say, as the Board does, that there was in 1938 as much money—in the form of demand deposits plus currency—as there was in 1929, means very little unless two other factors are considered. First, the mere existence of demand deposits or reserves for the potential creation of such deposits means nothing unless those deposits are in active circulation; second, the country needed, in 1938, not merely as much money as in 1929 but considerably more, on account of growth in population and productive capacity which had taken place in the 10-year period.

The Board says that the people are more concerned with the relationship between prices of things they buy and things they produce than they are with maintenance of general stability. This is merely to say that even with the achievement of a stability in the value of the dollar and the elimination of the dislocations resulting from violent fluctuation in that value, other problems would remain to be solved. This is true, but it hardly seems to me that we need to trouble the Federal Reserve Board to point out a thing so obvious, and neither does it seem to me that the Board's statement is in any way a refutation of the basic importance of attempting with all the power at our command to achieve "a dollar whose purchasing and debt-paying power will remain substantially constant."

No one, I hope, would be so foolish as to claim that merely by stabilizing the buying power of the dollar or by monetary measures alone can prosperity be assured. But the Board's statement will give added conviction to those people who believe that monetary measures can accomplish far more under a scientific system of control than is possible at present, and that without a dependable medium of exchange the effectiveness of other measures looking toward recovery is bound, at best, to be very transitory indeed.

The Board's statement of the weakness of its position under our present system of fractional reserves and private creation of money is, to me, at least, the most convincing proof that could be offered of the need for legislation to give the Nation effective control over the issue, volume, and flow of its money supply, including, of course, demand bank deposits.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. Ludlow asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks in the Record.

Mr. Nelson and Mr. Schiffler asked and were given permission to extend their own remarks in the Record.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox1?

There was no objection.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, during the day I shall offer a resolution to broaden the powers of the Appropriations Committee of the House so as to make possible a full investigation of the W. P. A. by this committee.

The resolution does not arise out of prejudice against anything or anybody but is intended to be used as the means for the development of facts.

There are those who believe the record of the W. P. A. to be good, others who believe it to be altogether bad. Some think that it is a racket, other a well-behaved agency of the Government. Some say that it puts too much emphasis on boondoggling; others, too little. Some contend that it has spent the billions of public moneys put into its hands in a wise, economical, and fruitful manner; others, that it has consciously used these billions to undermine the morale of the people, to destroy public confidence in constitutional government, and to prepare the way for transition into some form of state collectivism—certainly, to some it smells good and to others very bad. I take it that all would like to know what it is, fish or fowl, good or bad.

The Appropriations Committee has been selected to do this work because it is well established in the confidence of the House and the country and has the facilities for making a good job of the undertaking. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record and to include therein a radio address by myself and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCormack], and I also ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks to include a radio address of myself and Dr. Winkler, of City College.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Celler]?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT—ADDITIONAL APPROPRIATION FOR RELIEF (H. DOC. NO. 205)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

At the opening of this session I advised the Congress of the number of needy unemployed persons who were able to perform useful work. The estimates, based on actual and estimated figures, showed that in the judgment of the executive branch of the Government 3,000,000 persons should continue to be employed during the winter months, followed by a reduction to 2,700,000 persons during the latter part of the 5-month period ending on June 30, 1939. The amount of money required to supply these needs was estimated at $875,000,000.

Early in February the Congress appropriated $725,000,000, with directions that the number of persons on the relief rolls should not be decreased in number more than 5 percent during February and March and, in effect, requesting me to recheck the new situation thus created and advise the Congress of the result.

On February 7, I reported to the Congress that the reduction in the appropriation in itself created an emergency; that the number of persons on the relief rolls and on the "waiting list" had not decreased in number since early January; that as a result the need of these people was as great as before; that by continuing their employment during February and March half of the entire appropriation would be expended, leaving only the other half of the appropriation for the maintenance of relief during April, May, and June; that the amount of money remaining after April 1 would make it necessary to discharge, between that date and June 30, nearly half of the numbers on relief: that this, in my judgment, would constitute a definite hardship; and that I was advising the Congress of this fact in order to give sufficient time to study the conditions which would result from the curtailment of funds.

April 1 is approaching; and in pursuance of the spirit of the request for further information, I feel impelled again to call the attention of the Congress to the very serious situation which exists. Within about 3 weeks the reduction of Works Progress Administration employment must begin in order that the remainder of the appropriation may be apportioned over the months of April, May, and June, unless more money is appropriated quickly.

Since my messages of January and February, a careful checkup shows that there has been no substantial change in the conditions of unemployment. On the contrary, recent data have become available substantiating the real need for an additional appropriation of $150,000,000.

Partly because of seasonal conditions, the volume of employment has decreased since the end of December. This includes industrial and agricultural employment. Therefore, the need for unemployment relief has increased.

Due to the seasonal factors, Works Progress Administration employment was maintained in February at an average of 2,996,000 persons, and the average for March is being held at approximately the same figure.

Despite this fact, the number of persons now certified as being in need and eligible for employment is actually higher than it was a month ago. This so-called "waiting list" actually does not reflect the total needs, because in certain States certifications of eligibility are not given to the Federal authorities by the local public relief agencies until actual vacancies exist to which needy persons can be assigned.

It is my belief that improvement in business conditions between now and June will result in substantial increase in employment. However, based on the experience of the past, it cannot be expected that this increase will absorb more than 300,000 of those who are now on the Works Progress Administration rolls or who have been certified as in need and awaiting assignment.

That means that the present total of these two categories, 3,850,000 persons, would be reduced to 3,550,000.

In accordance with the requirements of the recent appropriation law, approximately 30,000 aliens have been removed from the rolls. The current investigation of the actual need of relief employees will shortly be completed in the field, but it is already clear from preliminary reports that the number who will be eliminated will not exceed 5 percent of the total and may be considerably less.

All possible economies in administration and operation are being sought and will be constantly checked, but here again the cold facts, which have been given insufficient emphasis, require restatement.

Out of every $100 of Federal funds expended by the Works Progress Administration, only $3.50 is for administrative overhead; $10.50 is spent for materials, equipment, and supplies; $86 is paid out directly in the form of wages. As a business proposition, it occurs to me that some modicum of commendation is in order.

If no additional appropriation is made, the Works Progress Administration must of necessity issue instructions, within the next week, to reduce the number employed. The plan proposed by the Administrator is to effect a reduction of approximately four hundred thousand in the first week in April and a further reduction of six hundred thousand in the first week in May. This will reduce the total employment to 2,000,000 persons.

However, even these drastic cuts will not be sufficient to make the available fund last through to June 30 and still comply with the requirements of the statutes. Therefore, a still further reduction of more than two hundred thousand will have to be made early in June.

This plan has been recommended as being preferable to a program of week-to-week reductions, because under the latter more persons would eventually lose their jobs.

Under the proposed plan, the number of persons who will be thrown out of employment in the near future is 1,000,000—growing to over 1,200,000 before June 30. The number of persons, including dependents, affected by this reduction will be 4,000,000 within the next few weeks and nearly a million more later on.

To these must be added the "waiting list" category, because it is obvious that while people now on the rolls are being discharged no people can be employed from the "waiting list."

I am of the opinion that States, counties, and municipalities are doing, in the overwhelming majority of cases, all that their finances will permit to meet the situation.

I further believe that, with few exceptions, those who are employed are actually in need and are not receiving more than they should in the form of Federal assistance.

It is the obvious duty of the Chief Executive to point out the need which exists and to give all possible factual information. This I have attempted to do in order that the legislative branch of the Government, in which the final decision and full responsibility necessarily rests, may act.

Because it has been alleged that I would be satisfied if no further appropriation were made for the coming 3 months, I feel that, in justice to myself, I must make it clear that I am not sending this message to the Congress merely for the purpose of going through motions.

For more than 6 years it has been the definite policy of the President and the Congress that needy persons, out of work, should not be allowed to starve; that it was an obligation of the Federal Government to give work to those able to work and an obligation of State and local government and of private charities to take care of those needy persons who are unable to work.

That policy, I am more than ever confident, is right. It should not be abandoned now.

It is wholly within the right of any and all of us to study and work for the greater efficiency of government. For several years infinite study has been given to the problems of relief in all its forms; additional studies are proper.

But the Government of the United States is faced today with a condition and not a theory. The insufficiency of the money appropriated will compel the Administrator to discharge about a million and a quarter actual workers in the immediate future.

I cannot bring myself to believe that these discharged men and women will contribute to the prosperity of the United States, nor do I believe that the merchants and landlords they are now dealing with will become more prosperous when their trade ceases.

Therefore, the responsibility for the situation in which all of these people will find themselves during the coming 3 months rests of necessity within the decision of the Congress of the United States.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, March 14, 1939.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record and include therein a short quotation relative to the Philippines.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record and include therein a letter from a resident of my State and my reply thereto.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL, 1940

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 4852), making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 4852, with Mr. Buck in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RICH. The first paragraph of the bill has been read, Mr. Chairman. My inquiry is, Is it permissible now to strike out the last word of the first paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman may make such a motion if he desires.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, this is the first paragraph of the Interior Department appropriation bill for the year 1940. You have just heard the message of the President of the United States stating there are more people on the unemployment list today than there were sometime ago, and that the list is gradually growing longer. An admission of his inability to cope with the unemployment situation after 6 years of his administration and going in debt $20,000,000,000. This morning's paper revealed the fact that the administration will not ask to increase the national debt limit—a wise decision at this time. This statement as being made yesterday by Secretary Morgenthau in discussing the question of increasing the national debt "ceiling":

It should be increased, he said, but Congress will have to take the initiative if it is done. He remarked, incidentally, that the way to economize—if Congress is bent on economy—is to cut appropriations instead of voting huge sums and then refusing to give the Treasury authority to spend the money.

We are now starting the consideration of the Interior Department appropriation bill for 1940 for the fiscal year beginning July 1 next. If the responsibility, as was stated by the Secretary of the Treasury, belongs to the Congress, then it is time for Congress to act. The President says the responsibility belongs to you. We have for the past 5 years increased practically every appropriation above what it was the year before. We are increasing this bill $15,000,000 over what it was last year. This cannot go on. Something must be done. The responsibility is yours, and what are you going to do about it? There are many provisions in this bill to which we are going to offer amendments to strike out and cut down. If you are going to assume your responsibility, you will help us cut this bill at least $40,000,000. The other day the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] said, "What are you going to do with the Interior appropriation bill?" I say to you, I tried my best to cut this bill down below what it now is before it came into the Committee, but without success. We are here before you as the Congress today. We are going to ask you to assume your responsibility. We are going to ask you to help us to cut this bill down. Can we expect your assistance?

May I say I am not any more interested in cutting down the Interior appropriation bill than any other appropriation bill. I am interested in cutting down every appropriation bill. Do not get me wrong on that. There is not a bill that comes before the Congress in connection with which we have the responsibility of making an appropriation, as was stated by the Secretary of the Treasury, on which we should not have the red blood in our veins and the backbone to say we are going to operate the Federal Government on a good, sound, and sensible business basis. That is your responsibility, and that is my responsibility. Are we going to rise to the occasion? It is up to you, and it is up to me. I am going to stay here and do my work and try to do my duty. If you will do this yourselves, I feel sure we will not have to increase the national debt above $45,000,000,000 but can hold it there, and we will take care of the people on relief just as soon as we give confidence to the people back home so the business interests of this country will be able to start the wheels of industry turning and will be able to have confidence that there is still opportunity ahead in America. The boys and girls who are going to school and trying to get an education want the same opportunities you have had; the same opportunities our forefathers had. Are we going to continue to give these opportunities to them, or are we going to put a millstone around their necks in the form of a national debt they will be unable ever to meet because we ourselves are unable to meet it? It will show that we as Congressmen are not able to meet the situation if we continue to increase each appropriation bill and the national debt. [Applause.] [Here the gavel fell.]

EXPAND THE CURRENCY AND RESTORE PROSPERITY

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

I believe it is about time that Congress began to understand that we never can balance the Budget by economy. We have long since passed that day. When this depression began in 1929, on the floor of this House I begged the Congress to do the one thing by which we could recover, to put on a reasonable, controlled expansion of the currency, which would raise commodity prices to their normal levels, start business moving, and restore prosperity to the American farmers, all without engaging in a great campaign of Federal expenditures.

I know, and every other well-informed man knows that we never can restore prosperity or balance the Budget by borrowing from the rich and giving to the poor money which the masses of the American people, the middle classes, the toiling masses, if you please, the farmers, the laborers, and the small-business men, will have to pay back with interest.

Let us not deceive ourselves. We cannot balance the Budget by economy, nor can we restore prosperity by cutting down Government expenses now.

We are being crucified on a cross of gold. We are now in a money panic. Our circulating medium is insufficient to restore commodity prices. Two things are necessary to maintain price levels; one of them is a sufficient volume of the Nation's currency, or circulating medium. The other is a sufficient velocity of its circulation. Our volume is down and the velocity of our circulation is almost at a standstill. Why? Because in the first place we are stymied behind a tariff wall. The very map of the world has become a barbed-wire entanglement of tariff barriers behind which international trade has long been stagnant and international commerce has become paralyzed.

We expanded the currency during the World War to get money with which to fight the war, and while we were engaged in that cause there was a rise in farm prices and in other prices, and our farmers and businessmen got in debt. They created obligations and regulated their business affairs as well as their standard of living on those price levels.

Then they brought on a depression, contracted the currency through the Federal Reserve System, which has been responsible during its existence for more depression than any other one thing in the history of this Republic for the time it has been in existence.

They then started in and collected the gold supply of the world, and what did they do with it? They buried it in the ground like the foolish man of Biblical times.

We cut the gold content of the dollar—and I helped to do it—with the understanding that we were going to thereby reduce, if you please, or depreciate the value of the dollar and in that way raise commodity prices so as to restore prosperity to our business; but instead of that, the men who are now advising us—and I am not talking about the President—took this gold, or advised him to take this gold, and bury it in the ground. We have more than $10,000,000,000—probably $15.000.000,000—buried in the ground in Kentucky.

Now, the thing to do is to bring that gold back and issue currency against it—American money, if you please—based on a 40-percent gold coverage, as the law requires, until we raise commodity prices back to where the American people can live and pay their debts and then stabilize them.

You cannot do this by quibbling around here like a tempest in a teapot, talking about cutting down this appropriation and that appropriation, nor can you restore prosperity by spending public money.

On the present price levels, with the present volume of your circulating medium and its present velocity of circulation you cannot balance this Budget in 100 years, nor can you restore prosperity; and you might as well forget it. We are going to have to change the system. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, due to the prolific nature of the New Deal, our Government has become like the old woman who lived in the shoe. We have so many children we know not what to do.

Consequently we go out and take over apartment buildings constructed to carry the weight of chairs, tables, beds, and other household goods, and tear out partitions right and left and then install heavy tabulating machinery and other equipment.

Is it any wonder Government employees labor under the shadow of fear for their lives when they are transferred to some of these remodeled buildings?

I particularly refer at this time to the recently acquired Government building formerly known as the Corcoran Courts, at Twenty-third and D Streets NW.

The Bureau of the Census has admitted to me that it turned down this building for its office quarters because the structure would not bear the load of heavy tabulating machines and other machinery used by that division. The office of the Surgeon General, which has been assigned to the first four floors of the building, has informed me it has been warned that the floors will not carry the weight of the complete battery of files used by that section, and that either more floor space must be obtained or some of the files stored in another part of the city. I am advised all of these files are used from time to time, and it hardly makes for efficiency to have them scattered about.

This Corcoran structure is an eight-story apartment building, and many partitions have been removed to provide large rooms. Surely this will have a tendency to lessen the supports of the structure.

I am advised that tons and tons of machinery used in the office of the Chief of Finance are to be shifted to the top floor of this building. The top four floors will be used by the Finance Section of the War Department. I am not an engineer, but it appears folly to me to place this enormous load on the very top of the building.

Federal employees about to be shifted to this building are greatly concerned. The matter of their safety in the building is common talk among them. Some of them have called my office. Apparently nothing is being done by responsible officials in charge to set at rest these reports.

Of course, the War Department employees have heard stories about the Ford Theater disaster in 1893, when many War Department employees were hurt, some permanently, in the collapse of the floors of that building, which was remodeled to house the records and pension section of the Department.

If the Corcoran Building is deemed safe from an engineering standpoint, these employees are entitled to know it. In view of the fact they have appealed to Congress, then we, too, are entitled to know and have it as a matter of record. These employees should not have their minds distracted day and night by these rumors—and that is what is happening. Such a feeling is hard on the morale and efficiency of these Federal agencies.

To obtain something definite on this matter I have today presented a resolution asking the Secretary of the Interior to furnish us with this information. If the fears of these employees are without foundation, then let us give them the facts relative to the sound construction of the building. [Applause.]

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I want to take occasion at this time to discuss the matter of the Indian legislation in this bill because I notice my friend from Missouri is present. I think this House has been "ghosted" for the last 4 years on Indian legislation by the gentleman from Missouri, and I want to give you the facts about what has happened in reference to Indian legislation in the last 87 years.

The Court of Claims was established 87 years ago, and during those 87 years claims to the amount of $2,187,000,000 have been presented to the Court of Claims. The total recovery on Indian claims in these years is less than the amount of money the gentleman from Missouri wanted for the Jefferson Memorial in St. Louis.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman vield?

Mr. BURDICK. I will yield to the gentleman any time.
Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman show me in any part of the Record of this House or in the Government files where I asked for one dollar for the Jefferson Memorial?

Mr. BURDICK. Yes; I will. Mr. COCHRAN. Where?

Mr. BURDICK. On January 3, 1934, in the House, House Resolution 213.

Mr. COCHRAN. Introduced by request and withdrawn by me.

Mr. BURDICK. I do not care whose request it was; the gentleman introduced it.

Mr. COCHRAN. It was withdrawn. Read my speeches in the RECORD and the gentleman will find I am on record in reference to that.

Mr. BURDICK. I will answer anything the gentleman asks. I do not care what the gentleman subsequently did. I said the gentleman introduced that resolution, and the Record of this House shows it.

Now, in the entire 87 years the Indians have recovered $20,595,000, or about one-fourth of the cost of a battleship well equipped.

Yet when the Indian bill comes in here the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Cochran] says the Indians are going to bankrupt this Government, and a lot of you believe it. Let me tell you that in percentage the amount recovered on Indian claims in 87 years has been a little over 1 percent of what they have asked for, and remember also when a jurisdistional bill comes in here the Indians do not ask for a dollar. The only thing they ask for is an opportunity to present their claims to the Court of Claims, if they have anything, and yet we refuse to let them do it. No Member of this Congress can justify that stand. If the Indians have a just claim against this Government, we ought not to refuse them an opportunity of being heard upon it, and if the claim is baseless, then let it be thrown out. A lot of gentlemen on my side of the House object to these bills, because we have inserted a clause that the Indians have a right to appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States. We put that in, because if you do not do that, the case goes up under a certiorari, and anyone here who is a lawyer-and most of those who object to these bills are lawyers-knows that a writ of certiorari does not review the competency of the evidence, that all it does is to certify that on the outside the appearance of the record is correct, but you cannot inquire into the merits of the case at all; so it is meaningless, and since there is only 1 percent actual recovery on Indian claims, is there anything to be feared about letting these Indians present their claims to the Court of Claims? Nothing in the world. How you gentlemen can follow this kind of advice, especially from the gentleman from Missouri, when the cost of that memorial to Jefferson in St. Louis will be $10,000,000 more than the amount we have paid all of the Indians in the United States in the last 87 years, is more than I can understand. I will give this House the actual figures on Indian legislation prepared by the Court of Claims itself up to March 31, 1936.

The Court of Claims was established in 1855, and since that time only 192 Indian claims had been presented to this court in this whole period of 87 years.

The total claims made by the Indians in these 87 years was $2,187,799,859.90, and the total recovery was $20,595,666.67; and taking all Indian claims from the beginning to 1936 the recovery did not exceed 2.34 percent. During this period only 27 cases were decided favorably to the Indians.

The average time consumed in the trial and decision of an Indian claim in the Court of Claims is 4 years and 11 months; the longest case 9 years and 11 months, and the shortest case $6\frac{1}{2}$ months.

Nearly all of these cases require audits to determine offsets, and the average length of time for an audit in an Indian case is 3 years, the shortest time 8 months, and the longest case 8 years and 11 months.

I will insert in the Record what Indian cases have been before the Court of Claims since March 31, 1936, just as soon as I receive this information from the court.

Please remember, also, that these Indians are the wards of this Government and we are their guardians. The Indians had no voice in creating this relationship, and hence the utmost good faith is required of this Government as a matter of law. The utmost justice should be shown them—more than to an ordinary citizen who is free to act for himself. For that reason an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States from a decision of the Court of Claims is the only method by and through which we can offer them this degree of justice and equity to which we must respond because of our fiduciary capacity. To say they are entitled to no more right on appeal than an ordinary citizen is to completely forget this relationship which we have ourselves created without the consent of the Indians. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Dakota has expired.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words. I compliment the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. Burdick] for his defense of the Indians. He was raised in the same country with a great tribe of Indians and he can talk their language. He should know more about the Indians than any other Member of this House, and probably does, but he does not entirely understand my position, judging from his many speeches on this subject.

I do not know how much the Indians have recovered in their suits in the Court of Claims, but I do know in the last Congress that we appropriated nearly $10,000,000—appropriated—in the last deficiency appropriation bill. I justified my opposition to the pending Indian bills last week. My speech is in the Record. The gentleman says that there have been $2,100,000,000 in claims filed since the Court of Claims was established. The Department of Justice tells me that at the present time there is more than that amount pending, and the figures are in the Record. Who is correct? I accept the Department of Justice figures. As far as this bill is concerned, you can search the Record for the last 12 years and no one will find where I ever made a motion of any character against any Indian appropriation in the Department of the Interior appropriation bill.

I am willing that the Indians go before the Court of Claims. I am willing that the cases that are pending now shall be heard if Members of Congress will leave the cases as they are and not try and change the jurisdictional laws which allowed them to sue the Government. I insist the Government have the opportunity of presenting its side of the case, a proper defense, but the gentleman is not satisfied with that. The gentleman wants to amend the original jurisdictional act, so as to take away from the Government this right of defense. That is what he wants and that is what I am opposed to.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. Not now. Please let me complete my statement. Congress changed the jurisdictional acts in the two cases that were decided against the Government and it cost the taxpayers of today nearly $10,000,000, which you will find appropriated in the last deficiency bill in the last session. You cannot dispute that statement. Let the cases that are in the Court of Claims now that have been certified remain there, and let them be tried. I repeat, I am only opposed to putting the Government at a disadvantage.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. COCHRAN. Not for the moment. I have another matter to talk about.

In regard to the Jefferson Memorial, I am one public official in the city of St. Louis who has voiced his opposition to a memorial building on the river front in St. Louis, and I did so on the floor of this House. Read my speech in the Record. At the request of the city officials of St. Louis and the committee, which was comprised of residents of almost all the States covered by the Louisiana Purchase, I introduced a resolution, and on the day I introduced it I gave a statement to the newspapers that there was not one chance in a million for Congress to appropriate the money. After that I introduced another resolution which did not provide for any money but for the appointment of a commission, and at the time it was considered I made a speech on the floor of this House. I said then, and I repeat it now, that the time would never come when I would ask this Congress for money for that purpose, and I propose to keep my word. I never have and never will.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. COCHRAN. Yes; I yield to the gentleman who brought the subject up.

Mr. BURDICK. But the fact is that the Government has already spent $6,750,000 for this purpose in St. Louis, is it not? Mr. COCHRAN. The Government made an award to the city of St. Louis from the P. W. A.

Mr. BURDICK. Yes. Mr. COCHRAN. It likewise provided money from the W. P. A. to hire relief labor to clear the site and do the landscape work and the city of St. Louis put up a certain amount of money. They have not yet turned a spade; they have not even bought the property. They do not know whether or not they will have sufficient money to buy the property, and until they do the project cannot proceed. That is the status of it

After the site is purchased, the land cleared, and the landscape work completed, then will come the question of a memorial building if the original plans are to be carried out. St. Louis cannot use any money set aside unless the Government advances money; so you see if there is ever to be a building, they will have to come to Congress.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield. Mr. BURDICK. As a matter of fact, is there any difference whether the money comes from the P. W. A. or from any other source, as long as it is Government money?

Mr. COCHRAN. The city of St. Louis is entitled to P. W. A. money and W. P. A. money as well as the gentleman's own State.

Mr. BURDICK. But you say they have not spent any of this $6,000,000.

Mr. COCHRAN. The project originally was to cost $33,-000,000. It is down now to about $9,000,000. The city of St. Louis is paying part of the cost. I do feel we are entitled to P. W. A. and W. P. A. money the same as any other city. am not going to help get any money from Congress for a building because I promised I would not.

Mr. Chairman, no Member of this House need feel he can embarrass me by talking about the Jefferson Memorial in St. Louis. The people of my city know my position, and Members of Congress should know it because I have made numerous speeches on the subject. I am not talking one way and acting another. To tear down 40 blocks of buildings, some nearly a hundred years old, and create a river-front park undoubtedly will be of benefit to St. Louis. It is a proper site for a memorial commemorating the Louisiana Purchase. If the park is ever created, then I would advocate a great granite shaft to be erected in the center; but I never have, and never will, urge the construction of a $20,000,000 memorial building. This correctly states my position, and I think the language is plain enough for anyone to understand it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

ADVANTAGES TAKEN OF THE INDIAN

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CocH-RAN] is the able chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments. The particular executive department that seems to arouse and attract most of his activity is that which has to deal with expenditures for the Indians. In his remarks just concluded he said he had no objection to the prosecution of claims that were before the courts, but that what he was objecting to was the amendment of the jurisdictional acts. I would like to call the attention of the Members of the Congress to the fact that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Cochran] has repeatedly objected to bills which would only restore to the Indians rights that were guaranteed to them in the original jurisdictional acts.

The right of appeal to the Supreme Court on the merits of a case was granted in many Indian-claim bills, but was taken away from them purely by interpretation of the Judicial Code that was adopted in 1925. By retroactive decision, so to speak, the right of appeal to the Supreme Court was reduced to that of applying for a writ of certiorari. Many bills which the gentleman has killed by parliamentary objection did not seek to amend the original jurisdictional acts; they only sought to restore and preserve a right recognized in the original acts-a hearing before the Supreme Court on the merits of the claim.

The gentleman said in his remarks to which he referred, those which he placed in the RECORD last week, that he would use every parliamentary means at his command to defeat consideration of bills of that character. That is exactly true; he would, does, and has. He boasted last week that in 1935 he attached a rider to an appropriation bill that would require the courts to charge against treaty claims every dollar spent for Indian affairs, regardless of whether the expenditure met treaty guaranties or not, and regardless of whether similar expenditures for white citizens was charged against them or not. I was not here in 1935. But I am told that 1935 rider was attached to an appropriation bill that came to the floor under a special rule to prevent its being taken out by a normal point of order.

The gentleman is honest and frank. By his own words he demands for himself every parliamentary weapon; he takes from Mr. Indian even normal parliamentary protection. He knows the tricks. He, armed, insists that the Indian shall be disarmed.

That is exactly what has happened in the entire history of this Government's treatment of the Indians. It has taken advantage of every parliamentary procedure; it has taken advantage of its skilled, technical knowledge of the law and language to whip into submission and take advantage of the illiterate and untrained Indians. That is what has been the cause of the shame and dishonor this country has had in its treatment of the American Indian.

The gentleman referred to the figures which he placed in the Record last week with respect to the amount of claims pending in various cases before the courts at the present time. The gentleman did not offer the figures during his speech. Those were inserted later under his permission to revise and extend. If the gentleman wants to rely upon figures placed in the RECORD and wants an accurate picture placed before the Congress, he should ask permission to correct the figures he placed in the RECORD last week, because in instance after instance those figures are in error.

I am not saying the gentleman made the error. He did not. He only submitted a list that was furnished him by the Attorney General. In several instances interest amounting to millions and millions of dollars was figured in and listed in cases where no interest is claimed, and in cases where no interest is ever given by the courts. In other instances interest was figured at 6 percent, whereas under the procedure of the courts and the recognized rights in those cases. only 5 percent could be charged. I do not know why the Attorney General furnished the gentleman with those misleading figures. I would not accuse the Attorney General of trying to terrorize the Congress, but certainly this must take the aspect of some special pleading to prejudice Congress against proper consideration of Indian legislation.

The Indian is not asking for any treatment in these jurisdictional bills other than that which he would accord to the Government, and the gentleman, in his concern for the Treasury of the United States, might well consider what will happen in some of those cases if a verdict is given to the Indians in the Court of Claims and the Government itself has lost its right to have the merits of the case reviewed by the Supreme Court. If the Government is also restricted to appealing merely on a writ of certiorari, he may find that he has let the Government in for some very large judgments and lost for the Government also the protection he took from the Indians

The Indian is willing that those cases should go before the courts upon their merits, both in the Court of Claims and before the United States Supreme Court. When the gentleman asks for some special parliamentary means to defeat consideration of a case upon its merits, it is a confession of weakness in the Government's case, a confession that he is afraid to submit the Government's case to even-handed justice. Personally I believe that this fair-minded Congress wants to have the Indian cases heard and considered on their merits. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE] has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I ask that all debate on this paragraph close in 5 minutes. We have had two days of general debate, and I believe it is not unreasonable to ask that debate on this paragraph close in 5 minutes

The CHAIRMAN. Is the gentleman submitting a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I make that unanimousconsent request, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Then, Mr. Chairman, move that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order that there is not a quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, in order to expedite action on the bill, I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from California that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. Chairman, with a great deal of interest I listened today to the confessions of New Deal leaders admitting the failure of several of their administration measures. First, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] admitted the complete failure of and indicted the monetary policies inaugurated under the New Deal. Then the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Cochran], the chairman of the great Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, which does not perform the investigating duties with which it is charged under the rules of the House, admitted unjustifiable raids on the Treasury under Indian legislation sponsored and enacted by the New Deal within the past few years.

I hope my Republican colleague the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. Burdick] will not continue to chide the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Cochran] because he supported the appropriation of many millions of dollars for a Jefferson Memorial. The New Deal has strayed far from the fundamental principles and policies of government expounded and practiced by Thomas Jefferson. Our New Deal friends, no doubt, ease their consciences by spending millions of dollars to erect a great memorial in honor of the man whose principles and policies they have repudiated. The New Deal has embraced the socialistic, communistic ideas of a regimented soviet bureaucracy imported direct from Moscow, the original land of planned economy.

Under New Deal monetary legislation and policies, which were denounced today by your own New Deal leader, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN], our American citizens were forced to turn in their gold to the Treasury for $20.67 an ounce or go to the Federal penitentiary for 5 years. The New Deal then imported more than $8,000,000,000 worth of gold at $35 an ounce, from foreign countries, mostly from France and England, which owe the taxpayers' Treasury more than $10,000,000,000. I submit that if the gentleman from Missouri wants to practice economy in a big way, he should not be devoting so much of his great ability and energy to saving a few millions at the expense of our American Indians. He should devote his great ability and energy to saving many billions of dollars at the expense of foreign gold producers. importers, and speculators, who have been waxing fat under the New Deal monetary program.

As a new member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, I shall give very careful consideration to the Indian questions which the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Cochran] has brought to the floor of the House. I sincerely hope, however, that our New Deal Commissioner of Indian Affairs, Mr. John Collier, will practice what he preached before the advent of the New Deal with reference to the administration of Indian affairs. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY

Mr. WHITTE of Chica Mr.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. White of Ohio: Page 2, line 6, at the beginning of the line strike out "$554,720" and insert in lieu thereof

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is offered for the purpose of holding the publicity expense of the Department of the Interior, office of the Secretary, to its present limit. There is a tendency in practically every branch of government constantly to expand, everlastingly to enlarge the operation of these propaganda divisions. It seems a great many of them are trying to take a page out of Goebbels' book of propaganda.

On this particular item the testimony in the hearings shows $50,000 was allowed last year to cover the expense of legitimate but sometimes unnecessary press relations activities, or propaganda work. They propose now to add 21 additional positions in this office, and the Secretary of the Interior says it will add a cost of $36,740. You will note the reduction I have suggested merely cuts out the proposed increase.

The amendment is submitted to the Committee on the basis of the contention that they already have enough people in this Department handling press relations. I think each and every one of us knows that the time of these people is spent in preparing press hand-outs that usually are superfluous and not very useful. I happen to be in the newspaper business myself, and I dare say there is not a reporter in the House gallery who would not tell you that the propaganda machinery is overmanned in most all of the departments and a lot of that work is silly and useless. A good reporter gets the real news without the propaganda gristmill. I think this is not a necessary function, and I think they can take care of the work that should be done along this line by their present force and at an expense not exceeding $50,000, the amount that will remain in this bill if my amendment is adopted.

The testimony of the Secretary before the committee called attention to the fact that they have a motion-picture division and also a radio division down there; in other words, they are building up a gigantic organization to produce a steady stream of publicity or propaganda. In this particular case Mr. Ickes called attention to the fact that they had a very lovely entertainment not very long ago in the form of a radio broadcast dramatizing the annual report of the Secretary of the Interior to the President of the United States. I do not know whether they paid for the broadcasting time or not, but they certainly had to pay the cost of preparing the broadcast scrip. This, I think, is an example of exceeding the necessary boundaries of proper press relations work.

I therefore ask the Committee to give their support to the passage and adoption of this amendment.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WHITE].

Mr. Chairman, it is impossible in a matter as far reaching and as complex as is the office of the Secretary of the Interior or any of the great Government departments to either propose things that ought to be done by such departments or to object to things that are proposed in the brief time of 5 minutes.

The committee did make a cut of $10,000, as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WHITE] will recall, which was for the purpose of bringing about this economy that we believed could be safely brought about. In fairness to the Department of the Interior, may I say that the Congress itself has placed into that department, in the last 4 or 5 years a great number of new activities which require added expense for administrative purposes. These activities are all of tremendous magnitude. You cannot charge the Department with that. We must take the blame ourselves for all these new activities, if it were an unwise thing to do. This year we gave them the Federal Housing Authority, a Nation-wide activity. We gave them last year the Bituminous Coal Commission, another great activity. We have brought into that Department many things of that nature and to say now that we should arbitrarily eliminate from this bill, without regard to the effect it might have on governmental activities, this particular item, or any item unless good cause exists, it seems to me, is unsound and I think the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WHITE] should not be agreed to.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEAVY. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Is it not true that two or three additions have been made since a year ago, at which time they had $50,000 in the bill for this particular purpose and that the added departments also have items for this same

Mr. LEAVY. I would not agree to the last statement that they have items for the same purpose.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. The United States Housing Authority does.

Mr. LEAVY. It has some money for that purpose.

[Here the gavel fell.] The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WHITE]. The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. White of Ohio) there were—ayes 53, noes 51.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I demand

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. Johnson of Oklahoma and Mr. WHITE of Ohio to act as tellers.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported there were—ayes 92 and noes 89.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

DIVISION OF TERRITORIES AND ISLAND POSSESSIONS For personal services in the District of Columbia, $57,000.

Mr. GERLACH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Speaker, as this is my first appearance before this honorable body, and this my maiden speech, permit me to introduce myself and to tell you briefly about the district which it is my honor and privilege to represent.

Two counties, comprising the Ninth Congressional District, lie in southeastern Pennsylvania and constitute one of the richest industrial and agricultural sections of our great Keystone State. More than 90 percent of my constituents are native-born whites, substantial, God-fearing people, people who believe in the Ten Commandments, the Bill of Rights, and the opportunity to work and rear their families according to their abilities, and without any paternalism on the part of their Government. Their forebears came with William Penn and were doing their part in establishing our great State when it was still known as Penn's woods. Bucks County, one-half of my district, was one of the three counties into which Pennsylvania was divided by Penn in 1682. He named the county Bucks and its second county seat Bristol. after a county and town of the same names in England. Penn himself resided in the county for a number of years. Bucks County, too, is replete with Revolutionary War history. It was into this county that Washington crossed the Delaware on Sunday, December 8, 1776, after the Battle of Trenton, and the dwelling in which he established his headquarters. and which is on the site once considered by Congress for the Capital of the United States, is still standing and in a fine state of preservation. It was in this house that George Clymer, a signer of the Declaration of Independence, lived and died

My home county of Lehigh, while not so old as Bucks, is not without its historic background. Lehigh County was a part of Northampton and was settled by the Moravians, a religious people, in some respects like Penn's Quakers, but of Germanic stock. They were the result of that early outburst of the Reformation and were a pious, thrifty, industrious, and self-sufficient people. The Moravians were opposed to war, but, like the Quakers, often made exceptions. They had no objections, of course, to caring for the sick and wounded. On the contrary, they were glad to do it. During the Revolution their women prepared a beautiful silk flag, which they presented to General Pulaski's regiment, an event celebrated and immortalized in Longfellow's well-known poem. In Allentown, our county seat, one of the great cities of the Commonwealth, stands Zion Reformed Church, in which the Liberty Bell and bells of Old Christ Church, Philadelphia, were hidden in 1777. This church is now an historic shrine. Allentown, too, is the seat of Muhlenberg College, notable for its association with the Muhlenbergs of Revolutionary fame.

Industrially we are the largest silk-producing district in the State and the center of the cement industry. Our chief products, both in Lehigh and Bucks, are cement, silk, textiles, metal products, auto trucks, machinery, chemicals, clothing, cigars, furniture, limestone, and agricultural crops, especially fruit and potatoes. We also manufacture airplanes, carpets, worsted, woolen and leather goods, and have several shipbuilding plants. For the lover of wildlife Lehigh County can boast one of the few remaining buffalo herds in the United States. For this we are indebted to the late Gen. Harry C. Trexler, who, many years before his death, established on his vast estate a 2,000-acre game preserve in which, in addition to the buffalo, are hundreds of elk and deer. This preserve is now one of Lehigh County's prized possessions and is a constant attraction to thousands of tourists.

With this brief recital of some of my district's highlights, and of the character of my constituents, I believe you will agree with me that they are pure, unadulterated Americans, and that their creed is what we all like to call the great American system; and under this American system it is well to remember that our people have been able to secure for themselves benefits far beyond those enjoyed generally by any other people in world history. Under this system, our spiritual advantages carry the priceless content of liberty, common sense, and the dignity of man. The history of civilization proves that free people are secure only if they continue to make their government a servant rather than a master; that to achieve and maintain free government is the business of all the people; that responsibilities alone make rights and liberties possible, and that true liberalism can best be achieved along principles established by reason and based on experience.

We are liberal, but we do not propose to get away from the sound practical way of doing things. Sound thinking men and women of this Congress, irrespective of political affiliations, must conclude that many of the policies of the present administration, however well intended, are carrying us toward certain disaster.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order the gentleman is not speaking to the bill. We want to get through some time. I am perfectly willing to run along here a couple of minutes if the Members will speak on the bill.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Gerlach] had permission to address the House yesterday, but his time was eliminated due to a death of one of the Members. He is asking for this 5 minutes to get these remarks in the Record.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I will not object at this time, but I shall object hereafter.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Johnson] withdraw his point of order?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Genlach] will proceed.

Mr. GERLACH. Mr. Chairman, to my way of thinking we will make a great deal more progress in solving our problems when we begin squarely to face the facts; and, if they are bad, recognize the fact that they are bad; and, if they are tough, recognize the fact that they are tough, and decide to act accordingly. Political parties under our system of government are the vehicles for the transmission of the will of the people, but our approach to the fundamental problems of the Nation should be above mere partisanship. America is greater than political parties and, above all, we are Americans; and, like the Apostle Paul, "citizens of no mean country." My friends, let me repeat, America is greater than political parties and above all, we are Americans. It was Thomas Jefferson who said:

We are to guard ourselves, not against ourselves as we are, but as we may be, for who can imagine what we may be under circumstances not now imaginable.

The wisdom of those who guided the destinies of our country and laid the foundations of our system of government is unquestioned. The astounding fact, as revealed after a lapse of 150 years, is the uncanny gift of prophesy which they possessed, and how well they anticipated the problems faced by this generation. Jefferson dreaded a time to come when the Government could not be stopped from wasting the labor of the people under the pretense of taking care of them. That time has come.

Therefore, I am going to offer to this honorable body 10 suggestions, which, I believe, if enacted into law, would bring about economic recovery in this the greatest country in the world.

NO. 1. INDUSTRY

This Seventy-sixth Congress encouraged industry and business when it showed independence and courage on a number of important bills, but that is not enough. We must go still further. We must relieve industry of excessive taxation by repealing the undivided-profits tax and other unfair levies on business, and by amending the Social Security Act to meet the needs of the people and not carry large surpluses. [Applause.] Instead of the Government competing with industry it should lend industry a helping hand. By doing this it would be possible to reduce the tax burden, and the added confidence given to industry would induce it to start operations at once and put men to work in gainful employment. Plants and factories should be operated for at least 4 months on a full-time basis, even though they may not have immediate orders for all commodities produced. Any surpluses could be carried in stock, as was done years ago, thus enabling the plants to operate on full time, as indicated, instead of running intermittently as orders are received. If industry will give to the workingman, immediately, continuous employment for at least 4 months, at full pay, he will in turn spend this money which he receives. because he is now down to the point where he needs practically everything necessary to maintain himself and his family, thus keeping the money in circulation. This automatically will bring recovery to the businessman and to the farmer and to everybody generally. The plan to establish laboratories so that new uses may be found for farm products is noteworthy and will lead to the greater consumption of these products. There is also pending in Congress a bill providing for a laboratory through which new uses for coal may be found and that sick industry rehabilitated.

NO. 2. RETAIL BUSINESS

Retail businessmen, both large and small, always had their shelves well stocked before this depression. When business conditions were normal and they had confidence in their Government, they bought in large quantities; but during the past 8 years they have reversed that practice, merely supplying their requirements from day to day. With added confidence and relief from burdensome taxes, they would again stock their shelves, thereby helping to move the wheels of industry and fulfilling their part in the recovery program. Business needs only to be unhampered to go ahead.

NO. 3. LABOR

The laboring man has the right to bargain collectively. and we need laws that are workable to protect those rights; laws that will give him a square deal, because the interests of the employee and the employer are identical. Attempts to divide these two essential units of national well-being into hostile camps is a step toward national suicide. Representatives of industry have received many hard knocks. They are anxious and willing to join with the workers in any reasonable plan to save the business principles which have guided and benefited our country from the beginning of our national life. The paramount objective of labor is real jobs in productive enterprise. [Applause.] There are only two employers in our country: the Government and private industry. If all the people worked for the Government, where would the Government get the money to meet its pay roll? The answer to the problem of balancing the National Budget and decreasing unemployment is for the Government to stimulate business by every means at its command. Otherwise increasing deficits and more unemployment are inevitable. What we need is a Nation-wide reaffirmation of our faith in the American system of government. It is well to remember that under the American system our people have been able to secure for themselves benefits and advantages beyond those enjoyed generally by any other people in world history.

NO. 4. THE FARMERS

The farms are the dynamic factories in the business machinery of the Nation. There can be no disagreement with the fact that the farmer is entitled to a fair share of the wealth of our country. We pay and compel the farmer to produce less while, at the same time, we permit injurious foreign competition in our domestic market, which market, by every right, belongs to the American farmer. We help the farmer to grow more and better crops through soil conservation—and the basic principles of soil conservation are sound—but at the same time it is proposed to restrict acreage, control marketing, and produce less. Furthermore, taxes are absorbing more and more of the consumers' dollars, leaving less and less for the farmer. One of the biggest and most essential aids to agriculture would be the restoration of activity in business and industry. Above all things, the American farmer, to be secure in the possession of his birthright, should be the boss of his own farm and the captain of his own soil.

NO. 5. BANKERS

The local banks throughout the country claim that the restrictions surrounding the administration's banking policies are hampering them in loaning money to retail businessmen so that the latter may buy merchandise in large quantities. Moreover, a downward trend in interest rates both in shortand long-term money would be a real help to business. In my home county of Lehigh, the county commissioners borrowed money from New York banks on long-term notes at 2 percent, and on short-term notes at less than one-half of 1 percent. In the last session of the Seventy-fifth Congress the Federal farm-loan law was enacted, giving the farmer the opportunity of borrowing money at 31/2 percent. Why was not this same opportunity extended to the workingman who may have a H. O. L. C. or a F. H. A. loan on his home? He should be given the same interest rate as the farmer, and, last but not least, there are 2,000,000 medium- and smallbusiness men in the United States who should also enjoy the privilege of borrowing money at these lower rates. After all, supply and demand help to fix the prices of merchandise, and the money market is no different. Our banks are loaded with billions of dollars of idle money which is not earning them a penny. If this were put to work, I believe every businessman would employ an average of three additional persons. A total of 6,000,000 people would thus be taken off relief and the W. P. A. rolls, thereby considerably relieving the country of the heavy burden of relief. The worker would earn enough to buy his family the things that industry must sell to keep it in a prosperous condition, and, as I have said before, every workingman is now in need of practically everything necessary to adequately and completely maintain himself and his family.

NO. 6. SOCIAL SECURITY

Social security must be made really secure. It is regarded as the outstanding contribution of the present generation. Its humanitarian objectives are commendable and its benefits are undeniable. This act has made a genuine contribution toward helping our aged, and our blind and dependent children, through that partnership of the State and the Federal Governments which has long been a part of our American system. One group of our people, however, has been neglected by the present Social Security Act, a group that has been denied the full benefits of the act, because of the age limit, which is no fault of theirs. This group is composed of those who are past the age limit of 65 years. In my judgment, they should receive the same benefits per month as are enjoyed by others who now come within the provisions of the act. If this were done, their buying power would increase and substantial and permanent recovery be hastened. The unworkable program of proposed legislation presented to the Seventy-sixth Congress should be discarded immediately if this group is to be given the same benefits. I am told the reason this tax money is paid into the General Treasury is because the administration claims it would be unconstitutional to do otherwise; and if this be true, let us have an amendment to the Constitution so that this money can be kept in a separate fund to be used for the purpose for which it was intended. Let us also amend the act so that there will not be large accumulated surpluses.

NO. 7. RECIPROCAL-TRADE AGREEMENTS

Our present administration has inaugurated reciprocaltrade agreements with foreign countries, stating that they make for a "good-neighbor policy." Most of these same foreign countries owe us billions of dollars in unpaid loans, on which they refuse even to pay the interest. Why should we sacrifice to this "good-neighbor policy" our home markets, allowing the importation of commodities which could be manufactured by our own people working millions of manhours? As an illustration, let us take one commodity, cement. Cement is now being imported into this country and sold at 20 cents a barrel less than we can manufacture it. This is a very good example of one of the many commodities on which the tariff has been reduced to a point where our manufacturers cannot compete with the foreign product. Cement and all other commodities imported into this country should carry a tax or tariff sufficient to balance the cost of production here and abroad.

Permit me to call your attention to the silk industry, which is a major industry in my district. This industry is at the lowest ebb in the history of the business. There are two reasons for this condition: For years a small group of men have imported the raw silk from Japan and Italy. This group now controls the silk, beginning with the importation of the raw product down to the time that its manufactures are sold to the retail trade. In other words, the mill owners no longer sell their product but are merely commission merchants for this small group of importers. A thorough investigation, I am sure, would help solve a large part of the trouble in this industry. In addition, the low import tax on both finished and unfinished silk, due to our reciprocal-trade agreements with Japan and Italy, is a real detriment to the silk industry.

NO. 8. RAILROADS

There is a widespread desire throughout the country to consider ways and means of rehabilitating the Nation's $26,-000,000,000 railroad industry. The rapid and largely unregulated development of transportation facilities in the United States has produced a national problem without a national transportation policy. Much favoritism now exists, and to a pronounced degree, in the important matters of regulation, taxation, and subsidies. While substantial relief should come with improvement in general business the removal of all favoritism and inequalities is essential to the healthful functioning of the transportation industry. Certain temporary measures are necessary and should be adopted, but the only way by which anything of lasting benefit can be accomplished is by equalizing all modes of transportation with respect to the three important matters mentioned.

The records show further that in recent years substantial increases have been made in the already high salaries of railroad presidents and vice presidents. This practice cannot be justified in these hard times. In short, three factors must be considered in dealing with our transportation problem—the public interest, the employees, and the investors.

NO. 9. BUSINESS WITH LATIN-AMERICAN COUNTRIES

The Government, through the Department of Domestic and Foreign Commerce, should establish a sales force, if you please, that would cooperate and develop business with foreign countries, namely, the 20 countries in South America, as well as other countries that are friendly with our Nation. It is a fact that due to our high standards of living and higher wages, our manufacturers cannot compete with foreign manufacturers who pay starvation wages and whose employees' living standards are, necessarily, on a much lower level. I suggest after proper investigation by the Government into manufacturing costs that we meet this competition of foreign manufacturers by having the Government pay our own manufacturers the difference between what it costs to manufacture the same articles here and abroad.

As an illustration, it has come to my attention that within the past year the Chilean Government asked American shipbuilders for a price on three battleships costing approximately $90,000,000 and that not one shipbuilder from this country bid on the contract because he could not meet the foreign competitive prices. As a result, the contracts went to foreign countries.

Now, would it not have been better to have adjusted the prices between the Chilean Government and our own shipbuilders, thereby giving the latter an opportunity to hire our men, take them off W. P. A. and the relief rolls, and reinstate them in industry?

NO. 10. MERCHANT MARINE

For many years foreign shipowners transported much of our finished products all over the world, and the reasons therefor were that our exporters could ship cheaper in foreign vessels, due to operating costs and lower wages. But when the World War started and our Army and Navy needed merchant ships, such ships were not available. We had only a few of our own, and the foreign vessels had been called home and pressed into service there. Since then, the Government has been urging private shipowners to build a merchant marine second to none. Upon investigation, however, the industry was found to be in such financial difficulties that private bankers did not care to carry the enormous risk of loaning it the necessary funds. Congress therefore came to the aid of this important industry. It enacted the 1936 ship subsidy law, providing for a merchant marine. Under this act the Government agreed to furnish 75 percent of the cost of these new ships at 31/2-percent interest and with an amortization plan allowing them 20 years to pay. Notwithstanding this help, many shipowners were unable to raise their 25 percent of the cost.

I believe there are two good reasons why the Government should go ahead and build a merchant marine if the private shipowners cannot see their way clear to do so: My first reason is, that our merchant marine is certainly an adjunct to our national defense, and if we depend upon foreign service to carry our world trade we will be left high and dry when the foreign ships are called home at the first hint of an emergency; secondly, it will reduce the number of unemployed now on relief rolls by giving additional men work in building, as well as in operating these ships; and it will not be amiss to bear in mind that 90 percent of our American travelers who visit Europe now travel on floating palaces built and operated by Britain, France, Germany, and Italy.

We must establish our foreign shipping facilities on a sound basis. To neglect them will prove costly in an emergency. An adequate merchant marine in an emergency will operate as the supply train of our Navy, and we should lose no time in providing for it.

May I say in closing that you cannot solve great economic problems by miracles. You cannot solve them with anything but sound and appropriate policies based on economic experience, economic principles, and economic facts. We have had the longest and worst depression in history and are still in the midst of it, because year after year economic experience, economic principles, and economic facts have been ignored while we have watched and prayed for economic miracles. But none has yet been performed. None ever was. None ever will be. Government, in short, must balance its Budget. Business in general must be allowed to balance its budget and begin making profits instead of losses if this depression is ever to end and prosperity be restored. This depression would long since have ended as previous depressions have, and prosperity and employment in private business would have been fully restored had we used the good common sense employed by our forefathers in other depressions and not indulged in unfair and stupid economic policies which already had been discredited by all previous human experience. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

DIVISION OF INVESTIGATION

For investigating official matters under the control of the Department of the Interior; for protecting timber on the public lands, and for the more efficient execution of the law and rules relating to the cutting thereof; for protecting public lands from illegal and fraudulent entry or appropriation; for adjusting claims for swamplands and indemnity for swamplands; and for traveling and other expenses of persons employed hereunder, $548,000, including not exceeding $39,240 for personal services in the District of Columbia; not exceeding $52,000 for the purchase, exchange, operation, and mainexceeding $52,000 for the purchase, exchange, operation, and maintenance of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles and motor-boats for the use of agents and others employed in the field service. The Secretary of the Interior shall include in his annual report a full statement of all expenditures made under authority of this paragraph.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it. LXXXIV---173

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the paragraph that it is not authorized by law. There is no authority in the law, as I understand it, for the maintenance of this division. It went out on a point of order last year, and, as I remember the situation, there has been no change in the law since. I believe that is all that needs to be said on the subject at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make a point of order to the entire paragraph?

Mr. TABER. To the entire paragraph; yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Johnson] desire to be heard?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, the objectionable provisions to which the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] refers have, I feel sure, been stricken from the bill. In fact, those provisions were stricken from the bill

Mr. TABER. What I am contending is that these provisions were largely put back in the bill. The bill contained only the nonobjectionable items, but the objectionable items were put

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, the provision to which the gentleman refers is, we think, authorized under title 16, chapter 4 of the code, title 5, sections 43 and 485. and title 43, section 981.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

The Chair believes the last sentence in the paragraph as it now stands, reading, "The Secretary of the Interior shall include in his annual report a full statement of all expenditures made under authority of this paragraph," is clearly legislation and is subject to a point of order. If the gentleman from New York insists upon his point of order going against the entire section, the Chair will necessarily be forced to sustain it. The Chair does sustain the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Johnson of Oklahoma: Page 3, line

Amendment offered by Mr. Johnson of Oklahoma: Page 3, line 19, insert the following:

"For investigating official matters under the control of the Department of the Interior; for protecting timber on the public lands, and for the more efficient execution of the law and rules relating to the cutting thereof; for protecting public lands from illegal and fraudulent entry or appropriation; for adjusting claims for swamplands and indemnity for swamplands; and for travelling and other expenses of persons employed hereunder, $548,000, including not exceeding $39,240 for personal services in the District of Columbia; not exceeding $52,000 for the purchase, exchange, operation, and maintenance of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles and motorboats for the use of agents and others employed in the field service."

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment that it is not authorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I have just given the citations authorizing this provision. I will repeat them if the gentleman from New York desires me to do so.

Mr. TABER. No; it is not necessary.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

The language of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma follows very closely the language adopted by the Committee of the Whole in the 1939 Interior appropriation bill. At that time the gentleman from New York made a point of order against the language then offered and the Chairman in his ruling, by which the present occupant of the chair feels himself bound, stated the following:

The language embodied in the amendment proper is clearly authorized by existing law for protecting timber, and so forth. It seems clear that incidental to such authority the power to conduct the investigation in the handling of that and to properly handle it, would be entirely in order.

The Chair, therefore, overrules the point of order.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Taber to the committee amendment offered by Mr. Johnson of Oklahoma: Strike out "$548,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$440,000."

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, this appropriation represents an increase of $108,000 over the last year's appropriation, an increase of 25 percent. It seems absolutely ridiculous that we should be asked to provide $108,000 more for detective service in the Department of the Interior than we did last year. This is getting to be an octopus. It started a few years ago with $30,000 or $40,000 and has now grown tenfold. The activities this outfit is required to look after have not increased one whit. Almost every item of investigation they have today that is of importance, with the exception of one item which came in at the close of the year and therefore created a small build-up in their cases outstanding, shows a decrease. We should not permit such an increase as this.

I hope the Members of this House will show some spirit of economy and cut out this item of $108,000 increase for detective service in the Interior Department. There is no excuse, if we are ever going to balance the Budget in this country, for permitting increases when there is no possible excuse for them. I hope the House will make a beginning in the direction of economy at this item. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, if the Members will turn to page 53 of the hearings before the committee they will find an itemized statement of the number of investigations that have been made by the Department. It will be found that the Department is running far behind in these investigations. It is a fact that at this time the Department is more than 11,000 cases behind, as will be shown by the letter in the record from the First Assistant Secretary of the Interior. The number of such cases is constantly increasing. I read just one paragraph from his letter. It is as follows:

As of June 30, 1938, there were 11,914 uninvestigated cases pending before the Division. This number exceeds the total number of cases handled during the fiscal year 1938, hence the Division is not only a full year behind in its work, but the number of pending cases is constantly increasing. It is essential that investigations be made promptly if the Government's interests in matters under cases is constantly increasing. It is essential that investigations be made promptly if the Government's interests in matters under the jurisdiction of the Department are to be protected and if services such as the issuance of leases, grazing permits, etc., are to be rendered to the public without undue delay. These matters include timber and coal trespass cases often involving considerable damage and the loss of property for which damages should be collected, homestead entries, appraisals of land, investigations of applications for leases and permits, and numerous other matters affecting practically every activity of the Department.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. If we do not have these investigators, there is no telling how much fraud will go on that will never be discovered. This is to stop frauds against the Government in part.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. The gentleman is correct. Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. TABER. Of the 2,000 increase in cases pending-

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. But the gentleman understands there are 11,000 cases pending. Is that not correct?

Mr. TABER. There is a 2,000 increase in cases pending, or a 2,017 increase.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Yes; 2,017 increase; but 11,914 cases actually pending. The gentleman will admit, I am sure, that the figures I have presented are correct.

Mr. TABER. Of those, however, upward of 3,000 are in the Central Valley, and they are temporary items which involve just going over some points in connection with the large project involved there. They are not things that should justify a permanent increase, which is what this is.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from New York yield to me?

Mr. TABER. I have not the floor.

Mr. RICH. Does the gentleman know that $52,000 was spent for automobiles in this division?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Taber) there were-ayes 94, noes 105.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Johnson].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

DIVISION OF GRAZING

For carrying out the provisions of the act entitled "An act to stop injury to the public grazing lands by preventing overgrazing and soil deterioration, to provide for their orderly use, improvement, and development, to stabilize the livestock industry dependent upon the public range, and for other purposes," approved June 28, 1934 (48 Stat. 1269), and as amended by the act of June 26, 1936 (49 Stat. 1976), including examination and classification of lands with respect to grazing or agricultural utility, preparation of land classification maps and reports, traveling and other necessary expenses, payments for the cost of packing, crating, and transportation (including drayage) of personal effects of employees upon permanent change of station, under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, not to exceed $62,700 for personal services in the District of Columbia, not to exceed $30,000 for the purchase, exchange, operation, and maintenance of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, and not to exceed $1,000 for expenses of attendance at meetings concerned with the work of the Division of Grazing when authorized by the Secretary of the Interior, $650,000; for payment of a salary of $5 per diem while actually employed and for the payment of necessary travel expenses, exclusive of subsistence, of members of advisory committees of local stockmen, $100,000; in all, $750,000.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Rich: On page 5, line 5, after the word "Interior", strike out "$650,000" and insert "$500,000."

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I want the Democratic Members of the House to bear with me for a few moments on this matter, in view of the fact that you have passed a reorganization bill in the House. You are giving power to the President to reorganize the Government. We have two separate and distinct bureaus of grazing in the Government, one in the Department of Agriculture under the Forest Service and the other in the Department of the Interior, an exact duplication, at great expense to our Government.

Secretary Ickes has said that he is opposed to duplication and Secretary Wallace has said that he is opposed to duplication. The President of the United States has said that he is opposed to duplication. Let me read you a question asked by the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. Scrugham] in his examination of Secretary Ickes:

Mr. Scrugham. Mr. Secretary, is there any valid reason, in your opinion, for maintaining the jurisdiction of the grazing area partly in the Interior Department and partly in the Department of Agriculture?

Secretary ICKES. No: I have never seen any reason for it.

The chairman of our Appropriations Committee, Mr. Tay-LOR of Colorado, says there is no reason for it. There is not a man on the Appropriations Committee who believes there is any reason for it, and yet we come in here with this appropriation bill and you are now asked to increase the appropriation $100,000. Why do you do it? A waste in duplication.

I may tell the Members of the House that we have 49 divisions of grazing in the Interior Department. They look after the cattle and the sheep with respect to grazing interests in the wintertime and in the summertime all the cattle and the sheep go into the mountains and then they are under the supervision of the Department of Agriculture. Is not that just ridiculous? Of course it is. Think of the duplication we have set up in this way. It is absolutely criminal. No sense for such procedure.

Now what are we doing? If you pass the reorganization bill, the President of the United States, Secretary Ickes, and Secretary Wallace have all said they ought to be consolidated, yet in this bill for 1940 you want to increase the appropriation by $100,000. All I am asking you to do is to maintain what they have established and in the meantime they can consolidate and reorganize this Government service and in this way save setting up additional increased staffs.

This is the only sensible and the only wise thing to do. It is the only fair thing for the taxpayers of America and there cannot be one good reason advanced why we should increase the appropriation at this particular time.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Are not both departments more than paying their own way in revenue to the Government?

Mr. RICH. No; they are not. The receipts last year from the grazing were $817,499.04 and of the receipts we spent 50 percent in giving that amount of the total back to the grazing districts. A great amount of it goes to the territory in the gentleman's State of Oregon. Twenty-five percent of the receipts goes for improving the range. This would mean that we have spent $613,125 and the Government gets back $204,000. It cost them last year $650,000, which we appropriated and therefore we were in the red $455,000, which came out of the National Treasury. How does that pay the bill?

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Is not that money we gave them for making water holes and developing and building fences and improving the range, and that will not have to be spent again?

Mr. RICH. We paid $204,000 and spent the most of it in the gentleman's State, and he ought to be satisfied. Why come in here and ask for duplication?

Mr. BULWINKLE rose.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I do not yield any further to the gentleman from Oregon. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania was speaking of the reorganization bill passed last week, and of wanting these departments put together. Did the gentleman vote for it?

Mr. RICH. I did not; because I had not any faith that you would accomplish it. Now, I want to see you do it, and I am showing you the way; and if you fellows are interested in economy let us see some of you Democrats vote for economy. Where is the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM]? Let him stay in here and vote for it. Help us cut down this appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. The gentleman from Pennsylvania and myself have discussed this subject a number of times, and we are in accord on a great many points. A few days ago when the reorganization bill was brought up in the House an item was presented whereby the Forestry Service, which has control of the grazing of the national forests, was to be eliminated from the agencies to be reorganized. At that time I spoke briefly to the point of consolidating the grazing agencies and said I considered such reorganization to be desirable. But the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Rich] did not raise his voice with any word of encouragement. I have told him repeatedly in committee meetings that some efficient consolidation could be worked out, and his cooperation would be appreciated. The problem cannot be solved by blindly cutting off part of an appropriation. Reading from the testimony of Mr. Terrett, the Acting Director of the Grazing Division, as to the amount of fees paid by the grazing areas by the men concerned as owners of the various animals grazed on the area, in the first year there was no fee paid. In the second year the amount was $48,271; in the third year, $415,254; in the fourth year, $800,075; and the estimate for 1939 was $1,000,000-all to be paid into the Treasury of the United States from fees collected as the result of the operation of this act. If you are going to improve the range-and that is the object of the law-some money must be spent for the purpose. It is a wise investment, because the greater the improvement of the range the greater the carrying capacity and the greater the revenue paid in fees. I submit to you that this proposed amendment is no matter of economy at all; it saves nothing to the Government in the long run.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Yes.

Mr. RICH. Does the gentleman from Nevada think we ought to maintain the department of grazing in the Interior Department for the wintertime grazing and in the summertime the one in the Agricultural Department? Does the gentleman think we ought to maintain these duplicates?

Mr. SCRUGHAM. I expressed myself somewhat fully at the time the reorganization bill was under consideration a few days ago and I voted to make it possible for a consolidation of the grazing agencies. If I recollect correctly, the gentleman from Pennsylvania voted against authority for such consolidation.

Mr. RICH. The reason I was against it was because I had no faith it would be carried out, but now let us try to carry it out. Another thing, of the amount of money received from grazing 50 percent goes back to the State.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Not necessarily. Half of the amount goes to improve the range in order that the carrying capacity can be increased, and for the increase of revenue that is to be brought into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. RICH. The Treasury of the United States has not received any money. The money it receives is paid out to the States.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Wait a minute. The money received is certainly not all paid to the States of origin. The gentleman should be fair.

Mr. RICH. That is what I am trying to be. The Government paid out to the States 50 percent of the money that it received, and paid out for improvements of the range 25 percent. Therefore it received less—

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I did not yield for a speech, but I shall endeavor to answer the question. The public domain of the West involves a very large acreage; and, like everything else, in order to be improved requires the expenditure of time, money, and effort. Every domestic animal using that grazing area will pay a fee commensurate to the service rendered. According to reliable estimate those fees for the coming year will amount to approximately $1,000,000. Last year the fees amounted to over $800,000. Unless the range is continuously improved it will deteriorate. This proposition is elementary conservation. It involves a prudent management of the range to make it self-sustaining.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nevada has expired.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I particularly want to address my remarks to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Rich]. There is very little money to be saved by the consolidation of the activities under the Taylor Grazing Act and the Forest Service. There will be some, but not a great amount. They are entirely different activities. Grazing under the Forest Service is a minor activity; under the Taylor Act it is the sole activity. The Taylor Grazing Act takes charge of the public domain, and rents it out to the stockmen who use it or are entitled to use it under the act. Fees for use of the range are paid into the Treasury. When we passed the act the public domain of 170,000,000 acres was fast becoming a desert. By reason of putting it under the Government control, the grazing was limited and ranges were saved and protected. A considerable amount of money was appropriated to improve the range. In the State of Oregon, where there has been spent many dollars, many water holes were dug so as to afford water for the cattle and sheep that were grazing on the public domain. Fences were built. That was a permanent investment. It does not have to be made every year. Eventually fees collected will far more than cover these outlays. The stock that goes onto the range under the Forest Service pays a fee which exceeds the administrative expense. The great work of the Forest Service is to preserve and perpetuate the forests and to show us how we can use the forests and not wipe them out as we have been doing in years past. They are adopting sustained yield programs which will make forests of permanent value. work is that of scientific forestry. If the two departments of the Government are thrown together there will be very, very little saving. The men who look after the range in the forests in the summertime are employed for that part of the year only. The men working under the Taylor Grazing Act are some of them employed by the year and some of them for the grazing season. There is not much money to be saved by throwing them together. I think it was a wonderful act of conservation when the Congress passed the Taylor Grazing Act.

I hope the amendment will not pass.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman vield?

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. I yield.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. The gentleman speaks of digging wells. Grazing land is useless without water for the stock,

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Yes; land without water is useless. A large amount of water has been provided in Oregon, to my knowledge.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. And by the digging of these wells they have increased the value of the grazing land?

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Yes; and many lakes have been built where water was reservoired.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. I yield.

Mr. RICH. Does not the gentleman think that if we give them the same amount of money we gave them last year, $650,000, and if there is consolidation, why build up your organization when you have to change it? If you are going to consolidate it, you will certainly do it next year, will you not?

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. You will have to employ practically as many men, as they must cover a large territory doing different types of work.

Mr. RICH. No; not at all.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. I will say to my colleague from Pennsylvania there is nothing to be saved.

Mr. RICH. When you ran the State of Oregon as Governor you tried to economize. You should take that position here the same as you were when you were Governor of the State of Oregon and try to protect the taxpayers of your State. Now you are interested in getting everything you can out there. Give us a break for the rest of this country.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Certainly I am interested in the welfare of my section, which adds to the general wealth of our country. I am interested in preserving forest grazing and I am interested in preserving the public domain which today we are administering under the Taylor Grazing Act, and also to protect the integrity of the Treasury. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Rich].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Rich) there were ayes 83 and noes 107.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

PRINTING AND BINDING

For printing and binding for the Department of the Interior, $275,970, of which $66,840 shall be for the National Park Service, $85,290 for the Bureau of Mines, and $54,500 for the Office of Education, no part of which shall be available for correspondence

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CARTER: On page 8, line 22, strike out "$275,970" and insert in lieu thereof "$265,970."

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, this amendment has the effect of cutting down the appropriation for printing and binding in the Department of the Interior by $10,000. There are a great many of these bureaus and departments that are doing unnecessary printing. They are sending out all kinds of pamphlets, and I hold in my hand one that was recently sent out under this caption: "United States Department of the Interior, National Park Service, Washington, D. C." I thought the National Park Service was created for the purpose of administering the parks. I want to say that I support them in doing that work. I am a supporter of the national-park system of this country. I believe the national-park management is doing a very good job of administering the national parks, but here they have sent a memorandum to the editors throughout the country, a printed communication consisting of seven pages notifying the editors that pictures are available and advocating the establishment of an additional park in the United States; and, by the way, in my own State. I am not saying we would not like to have another park in the State of California, but I do believe that the National Park Service should not be using the taxpayers' money to send out communications of this kind and should not be using the franking privilege of the Government of the United States to send out a communication that advocates giving them an additional area to administer.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Did the Park Service send out a memorandum asking that Crystal Cave park be established, in which the gentleman himself was terribly interested just a few months ago?

Mr. CARTER. In the first place, there is no Crystal Cave park. The gentleman is entirely in error; and I never sent out anything with reference to the improvement of that cave or anything else. What I did do was this-I decline to yield further until I have answered the gentleman. In the Sequoia National Park in my State there is quite a wonderful cave that will bring in considerable revenue to the Government of the United States, and I did advocate and receive an appropriation of $25,000 for the purpose of developing that cave, and the Park Service proposes to charge an entrance fee of 25 cents, and it is estimated they will receive an annual revenue of $10,000 from that cave. Those are the facts in relation to that matter.

However, I want to say there is a great deal of unnecessary matter of this kind sent out through the country and that we must cut this down some. I do not propose to cut out an amount that will hamper or entirely cripple this Department, but I do believe it will stand a cut of $10,000 which I have proposed, and it will be a warning to those bureaus in the Department to attend to their own business rather than to be sending out propaganda throughout the United States when they should be giving their time to administering the affairs of the national parks.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California [Mr. CARTER] has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I have profound respect for the gentleman from California, a very valuable member of the committee, but I did ask him a question, not intending to embarrass him, but it did sound a little peculiar if not absolutely funny-

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. In just a moment. It is significant that the gentleman would so criticize the National Park Service for advocating an additional national park when the gentleman, as a member of the committee, was successful in securing, without a Budget estimate last year, an appropriation for the establishment of Crystal Cave. It all seems to depend upon whose ox is gored, and by that I mean on whether or not a particular project happens to be in the district of the gentleman from California as to whether or not it is advisable. People who live in glass houses should not throw too many stones.

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman now yield? Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. CARTER. In the first place, I tried to explain to the gentleman that it was not for the establishment of a national park. That national park has been established for 40 years.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. That, I submit, is beside the issue. The gentleman was not only willing but anxious to make the appropriation for Crystal Cave, which happens to be in the gentleman's district, without a sign of a Budget estimate.

Mr. CARTER. In the second place, I do not like to have the gentleman flatter himself to the extent that he thinks he could embarrass me on anything.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I thank the gentleman for his extreme politeness as well as his generosity. Certainly I meant no offense to the gentleman in the suggestion I made.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I shall be glad to yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania even if he-

Mr. RICH. I am not pleading for any appropriation for anybody that is not good sound business, and I do not want any reflections of that kind cast, because if I were not running true to form here and if you could get something on me, you would try to burn me up, but that cannot be done. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Since the gentleman has made that statement, should a committee amendment be offered at the suggestion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, will the gentleman vote for it or vote against it?

Mr. RICH. There will be no amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania that is not based on a sound business basis. My advice to the membership is that if they think anything offered here is not on a sound basis they should not vote for it. That is what I say to the membership.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. What is the gentleman's question? Does the gentleman desire to ask a question or to make a speech?

Mr. RICH. If the gentleman would keep away from personalities he would get further. I assure him of that. Now let me ask the gentleman this question-

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. The gentleman from Pennsylvania seems to be interested in making a speech. I am not casting any reflections on the gentleman, I am complimenting Members on trying to get additional appropriations for their districts.

Mr. RICH. Thanks a lot for any compliments as well as stones.

The Department spends a great deal of money for printing these beautiful illustrated booklets of the parks that it passes out free. When an automobile comes to the park bearing five people, they all want one of these free booklets, but if a small charge was made for these beautiful park booklets not only would the Department receive some remuneration and repayment of the cost of printing them, but in all likelihood not more than one booklet would be asked for by the people in that car, instead of five, thus a great saving.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. The gentleman is making a speech. I thought he wanted to ask a question. What is the gentleman's question?

Mr. RICH. Would it not be advisable to have a charge made for these booklets? Would not this save considerable expense and waste of printed matter?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I may say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that we have already made such a suggestion to the Park Service. Because of that insistence we have every reason to hope that in the future a small charge will be made for such pamphlets. If the gentleman will take the time to read the committee report, he will find that the committee this year recommended that in future a reasonable charge be made for these pamphlets when more than one is supplied to an automobile carrying visitors.

Mr. RICH. I agree that statement was put in the report, but would we not more greatly impress upon the Department the desire of Congress that they do this if we cut the appropriations and sent that to the Department as our insistence that this is necessary? Could we do it in any better way than by cutting $10,000 from this appropriation?

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Carter) there were—ayes 101, noes 111.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total, Commission of Fine Arts, $10,000.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, one of the outstanding differences that has occurred in this House over a comparatively small matter during the last 5 years has had to do with the construction of the Thomas Jefferson Memorial in Tidal Basin. Many of us felt that the Tidal Basin site was not the proper place to put any sort of memorial, particularly because it destroyed the conformity of the land there and removed numerous beautiful trees. But that question seems to have gone by. The Congress saw fit to locate the Jefferson Memorial in Tidal Basin and those of you who come to the Capitol by that route can now see what destruction is taking place in connection with the preparation of the foundation.

The Commission of Fine Arts is definitely opposed not only to the location but to the style or type of architecture. We will pass over the location matter, because that point has already been decided. The Commission of Fine Arts is a body consisting of unpaid people of outstanding merit, and it has to do with the question of beautification in the city of Washington as well as elsewhere. Certainly we ought to go a long way in being guided by its advice. Unfortunately the architect selected by the Commission died before the final plans were approved. He approved what is known as the Greek Pantheon style of architecture, which others believe entirely wrong for that particular location.

Mr. Chairman, the Commission of Fine Arts has recently sent a report to Congress, which I have in my hand, condemning the architectural design. It seems to me we should go slow in approving a design which the Commission of Fine Arts does not approve. They say very definitely at the bottom of page 2 of this report:

Finally, but only after public announcement of the plans, the Jefferson Memorial Commission decided to present the design for the memorial to the Commission of Fine Arts and the National Capital Park and Planning Commission. The Commission met jointly to consider Mr. Pope's scheme on March 20, 1937, and, to quote from the minutes of this meeting, "the design submitted by Mr. Pope, which called for a Pantheon type of memorial, was not approved."

There is the definite judgment of this Commission which is set up for the purpose of passing upon the merits of architectural designs and fine arts, particularly in the city of Washington. I commend this report to the consideration of all the Members of the House. It is stated also in this report that in spite of the wrong location, the foundations for which structure the sum of $500,000 has been appropriated and contracted for, these very foundations may be used now for the building of a colonnade style of memorial, which would be much more appropriate and a better monument to Thomas Jefferson than the Pantheon design.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the Commission on the Jefferson Memorial ought to heed the advice of the Commission of Fine Arts and consider rejection of the Pantheon design and the adoption of the colonnade design. Everyone should carefully peruse this document which the Commission of Fine Arts has issued as a report to the Senate and House of Representatives concerning the Thomas Jefferson Memorial. If the Members of the House will read this document carefully, I am certain the advice of the Commission of Fine Arts will be accepted and the colonnade style of architecture will be adopted instead of the Greek Pantheon style.

Mr. CULKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield to the gentleman from New York, a member of the Commission.

Mr. CULKIN. I will have to ask the gentleman a pretty long question.

Mr. TREADWAY. Why not take time later on? My time is about up.

Mr. CULKIN. I will not ask the gentleman to yield, then. [Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the Members of the House to what my colleague on the Committee on the Library has said. During the present week bids for the building of the Pantheon style will be opened by the Commission. As pointed out in this document, if we are to finish the Thomas Jefferson Memorial within the $3,000,000 provided for this monument, we will have to cheapen the whole structure. We will make it a matter of disgrace to us and I call the attention of the Members to that fact. If we do cheapen it to that extent, we ought to be ashamed to build it at all.

Mr. Chairman, we ought to be willing to build a great memorial to a great man, as Jefferson was, but we should listen to the Commission of Fine Arts that has been created for this special purpose. Our failure to do so will reflect on the intelligence and courage of this House.

I am speaking today with the object in view of serving notice on the Commission that if it attempts to carry out a plan which will require another million dollars, when it can have a much more beautiful and more appropriate monument built to Jefferson than the present one now under consideration, I shall oppose it in every way I know how.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. TREADWAY. Was it not distinctly understood in the hearings held before the Library Committee that the total cost to the Federal Government for the erection of the Jefferson Memorial would not exceed $3,000,000?

Mr. KELLER. It was.

Mr. TREADWAY. The Commission states now it is impossible to carry out the plan which they are adopting and keep within the limit of $3,000,000?

Mr. KELLER. That is true.

Mr. Chairman, I propose that we call the attention of the Commission in such a way that they cannot misunderstand the feeling of the House on this subject. We are not going to stand for a cheapened memorial and we are not going to stand for another million dollars either, because neither is necessary. We can build on the present foundation already contracted for a columnar form of structure, which is more beautiful and which was endorsed by the Fine Arts Commission as being the most appropriate. That is exactly what we ought to do. If the Commission is going to go along with this thing, I am going to offer a resolution in the House directing them in this matter. I want every Member of the House to understand exactly the reasons for this.

Mr. Chairman, if the Members have not read this report of the Commission of Fine Arts, I hope they will look over it sufficiently to get a complete understanding of the subject, because it is one in which the House is interested and for which it is responsible. We should not appropriate the extra million dollars, and we should not permit the cheapening of the present memorial. This memorial they propose to build down there is a duplicate, viewed from either side, of the front part of the National Gallery of Art now being erected. I called attention to that fact before the Committee on Appropriations a year ago before the money was appropriated for the building of the foundation. I regret that any appropriation was made until an agreement had been arrived at that would provide a worthy memorial to this great man, one acceptable to the Fine Arts Commission and to this House.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, we are beginning to see the land after a long voyage on a stormy sea in the matter of the Jefferson Memorial. The distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts and the distinguished gentleman from Illinois for the first time in my hearing have conceded that a memorial is either desirable or necessary.

May I give you a brief history of this memorial? I am a member, unhappily perhaps, of the Thomas Jefferson Memorial Commission. The late John Boylan, a very distinguished, kindly, and splendid Member of the House, was chairman. The present chairman is Stuart Gibboney, the man who saved Monticello to the American people. Another member of the Commission is Fiske Kimball, the leading American authority on Jefferson in architecture. The many-sided Jefferson was one of the first great architects in the history of America. At the suggestion of the Fine Arts Commission, in which the present Chairman of that body concurred, we selected John Russell Pope, now dead, to design the plan for this memorial. Before he died he completed the design, making it an exquisite and dignified composite of Jefferson's ideas in architecture. This plan had the unanimous approval of the Jefferson Commission; it had the approval of the President of the United States; and it had the approval of everyone, including the Fine Arts Commission, at one time; even the present Chairman of the Commission, whose only claim to fame is that he is a good landscape gardener.

John Russell Pope, to my mind, was probably the best architect not only in the history of America but in the history of the world. His fame was known in every capital in Europe. At the time of his death he was doing classical structures in London, in Rome, and in Paris. Fully mindful of and knowing full well the Jefferson tradition in architecture as exemplified by Monticello, he has made this monument a composite of all that Jefferson stood for in architecture.

The opposition to this proposition, to both the site and the type of monument selected, is capricious and without just foundation.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CULKIN. I cannot yield now.

I said before that the Chairman of the Fine Arts Commission, who, as I say, is probably a good landscape gardener, seems to have the notion he must have his way on what shall be the particular design. He runs true to his trade, for what he wants is a row of encircling colonnades, which is typical of what goes in front of the average realestate development. We have caused Jefferson to be reborn again in Pope's brilliant, daring, and splendid architecture. We rest the case on that and we stand squarely on that ground, every member of this Commission. The Commission is composed not of modest men like myself, with no particular technical equipment, but men who know Jefferson in architecture and who know his place in the history of America. On the Commission is Gibboney, a Virginian of Virginians, who rescued Monticello from destruction. What service, may I ask, except lip service, did the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Keller] ever render Jefferson's memory. On that Commission, I repeat, we have Fiske Kimball, the leading authority on Jefferson in architecture, the man who wrote a book on Jefferson in architecture, and is at present director of the Philadelphia Museum of Fine Arts.

The secretary of the Commission is the gentleman from Virginia, the Honorable Howard W. Smith, who represents the Mount Vernon district. The cultured gentleman from Texas, the Honorable Fritz G. Lanham is a member of the Commission. The Senate is represented on the Commission by Senator Thomas of Utah, Senator McNary, of Oregon. and Senator Andrews, of Florida. The President's appointments to the Commission include Thomas J. Coolidge, former Under Secretary of the Treasury, a lineal descendant of Jefferson, and for a long time president of the Museum of Fine Arts of Boston, Mass.; also that deep student of Jefferson, the former secretary to President Wilson, the Honorable Joseph P. Tumulty, and Brig. Gen. Jefferson Randolph Kean, a lineal descendant of Jefferson. We are honored also by having as an associate member that great educator, Dr. George J. Ryan, president of the Board of Education of New York City. We have had our differences, but every conclusion of the Commission has been unanimous.

This is the Commission that the House has charged with the responsibility of the erection of this memorial. The House well knows that the whole question is being approached with reverence and care, and it need not be concerned by the idle vaporing of a landscape gardener with a Bob Moses complex. The House will be kept advised of every step that the Commission takes, and can be assured that Jefferson will live again in the glorious memorial now proposed. [Applause.]

Mr. KELLER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Illinois rise?

Mr. KELLER. For the purpose of suggesting that since my name has been mentioned and my acts challenged, I have a perfect right to answer, and demand the time to do it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Committee, by unanimous consent, has ordered that all debate shall cease in 5 minutes from this moment. By inference, this time was assigned to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH], who is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I happen to represent the congressional district within which is the home of Thomas Jefferson. For that reason I assume I was made a member of the Thomas Jefferson Memorial Commission, and we on that Commission have served for something like 3 or 4 years.

I think it unfortunate that whenever anything is done about erecting a memorial to that great statesman, of whom all political parties today love to boast, some incident should arise in the matter of criticism of the conduct of the Commission. None of us sought this duty. We are all trying to do our duty in the best way possible.

I wish at this time to make only a brief statement on the subject of this controversy. I may say the gentleman from Massachusetts and my good friend from Illinois have both attacked this memorial on numerous occasions on the floor. On two separate occasions, at least, the House by substantial majorities has voted its will that a memorial to Thomas Jefferson in the National Capital should be erected, and that ought to settle the controversy. I hope it will not be futilely continued. The question of dispute between the Fine Arts Commission and the Thomas Jefferson Memorial Commission is also settled. The act that created this Commission directed the Commission, if it saw fit in its discretion, to ask the advice—that is the language of the act—of the Fine Arts Commission.

I may say that we have constantly asked the advice of the Fine Arts Commission, and in many, many instances have taken the advice of the Fine Arts Commission, and until there was a change in the chairmanship of the Fine Arts Commission never a ripple of controversy arose between the Jefferson Memorial Commission and the Fine Arts Commission. Apparently the gentleman who is now Chairman of the Fine Arts Commission has misconstrued his function in connection with the Thomas Jefferson Memorial. His function is to advise, but by no stretch of the imagination is he given the authority to dictate to the Thomas Jefferson Memorial Commission, which is the creature of this Congress. [Applause.]

We went into this subject quite thoroughly with that gentleman and with his predecessor and with his Commission, and we have tried in every way we could to meet their wishes. When the time came that certain complications arose, which I shall not go into at this time, that Commission, after the most studious debate and consideration of the matter, came to the conclusion that the type of memorial we selected was the one that should be built. We acted upon this conclusion, but we did not act upon it until after the Chairman of the Memorial Commission had gone to the White House and consulted with the President and the matter met with his approval.

I may say further, in conclusion, that we hope in a short time to submit to the Congress a report of the actions of the Thomas Jefferson Memorial Commission, which I trust and believe will be entirely satisfactory to every unprejudiced Member of this body. I do not expect it to be satisfactory to those who are prejudiced and have fought the project tooth and nail since its inception, but I hope the Members who are unprejudiced in the matter will reserve their judgment until this Commission has an opportunity to submit to you its report and its reasons for the action which it has taken. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]
The Clerk read as follows:

NATIONAL BITUMINOUS COAL COMMISSION

Salaries and expenses: For all necessary expenditures of the National Bituminous Coal Commission in performing the duties imposed upon said Commission by the Bituminous Coal Act of 1937, approved April 26, 1937 (50 Stat. 72), including personal services and rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; traveling expenses, including expenses of attendance at meetings which, in the discretion of the Commission, are necessary for the efficient discharge of its responsibilities; contract stenographic reporting services; stationery and office supplies; purchase, rental, exchange, operation, maintenance, and repair of reproducing, photographing, and other such equipment, typewriters, calculating machines, mechanical tabulating equipment, and other office appliances and labor-saving devices; printing and binding; witness fees and fees and mileage in accordance with section 8 of the Bituminous Coal Act of 1937; not to exceed $12,500 for purchase, exchange, hire, maintenance, operation, and repair of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, including one for use in the District of Columbia; garage rentals; miscellaneous items, including those for public instruction and information deemed necessary by the Commission; and not to exceed $6,000 for purchase and exchange of newspapers, law books, reference books, and periodicals, $2,900,000: Provided, That expenditures during the fiscal year 1940 under this head and under the head "Salaries and expenses, Office of Consumers' Counsel, National Bituminous Coal Commission," shall not exceed an amount equal to the aggregate receipts covered into the Treasury during the period July 1, 1937, to June 30, 1940, under the provisions of section 3 of the Bituminous Coal Act of 1937, after deducting therefrom the total expenditures under these heads for the period July 1, 1937, to June 30, 1940, under these

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TABER. I make a point of order against the paragraph on the ground it delegates additional power and discretion to the Commission, and I call particular attention to lines 23, 24, and 25 of page 9, which also contain the words "in the discretion of the Commission."

It seems to me this makes an appropriation and leaves the amount of the appropriation which shall be spent to the discretion of the Commission or gives the Commission power to determine whether the appropriation should be made. It is the same thing as delegating authority to the Commission to make an appropriation, and is clearly legislation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard in opposition to the point of order.

If the distinguished gentleman from New York will read title V, section 83, he will find full and ample authority for the language to which he objects.

Mr. DOWELL rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Iowa on the point of order later.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. This is a general provision of the code, title 5, section 83, which provides that no money appropriated by any act shall be expended for membership fees or dues of any officer or employee of the United States in the District of Columbia in any society or association or for expenses of attendance of any such persons at any meeting unless specifically appropriated by Congress. The provision in the bill grants this specific authority, as required by title 5, section 83, of the United States Code, to which I have just referred.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to inquire of the gentleman from Oklahoma what his interpretation of the word "meetings" is. Does that include outside meetings or meetings of the Commission, or just what is his interpretation of that word?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I think it might be held to include meetings other than meetings of the Commission.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa desire to be beard?

Mr. DOWELL. For just a moment, Mr. Chairman.

I simply want to add that the proviso is clearly a limitation to the statute that was passed in 1937 and that this provision cannot go beyond what was provided by law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair rules that the inclusion of the words "in the discretion of the Commission" is probably covered by the citation given by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Johnson]. Title V, section 83, of the United States Code provides:

That no money appropriated by any act shall be expended for membership fees or dues of any officer or employee of the United States in any society or association, etc., or for the expenses or attendance of any person at any meeting or convention of members of any society or association unless such fees, dues, or expenses are authorized to be paid by specific appropriations for such purpose and are provided for in express terms in some general appropriation.

The language in the paragraph under consideration seems to comply with that provision, and the point of order is overruled.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania: Page 10, line 15, after the word "periodicals", strike out "$2,900,000" and insert "$2,000,000."

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, 4 years ago Congress passed what is known as the first Guffey Coal Act. That act, having been operative for nearly a year, was outlawed in 1936. During its active life, enormous cost was placed on the bituminous coal industry and absolutely no benefits whatever were received by that industry. Two years ago in April the second Guffey Coal Act was passed. The purpose of the act was to establish minimum prices, to eliminate unfair trade competition and to bring order out of chaos. In considering this appropriation this afternoon, in all fairness, we must realize that we have been experimenting for 4 years with this kind of legislation, and that during this whole period not one single effective minimum price has been established. The so-called cutthroat, destructive competition has not been eliminated. It is as rampant today as it was 4 years ago, and instead of bringing order, we have brought greater chaos to what can now be considered a comparatively orderly industry. Conditions, if anything, have grown steadily worse. At this point I want it understood that I do not blame the chaotic condition of the bituminous coal industry at the present time on the Commission altogether. but I do say that in spite of the millions of dollars that have been expended during the past 4 years, it has failed to correct the evils which obtain in the industry, and has failed to check the downward spiral in that industry. In 1936 the bituminous coal industry lost six and a half million dollars; in 1937 they lost $30,000,000; and in 1938, $68,000,000. All this shows that during the period in which this act has been in force the conditions have grown steadily worse, and no corrective measure or step has been taken.

More mines that were hitherto profitable are facing bankruptcy today than ever before. More mines are closed down today than ever before, and there are more miners out of work than there were before the act was passed. You are going to be asked to give this Commission another chance. You are going to be told that because of litigation and misunderstanding their work has been hindered, but I believe that 4 years and the expenditure of some $23,700,000 is long enough to experiment with any legislation of this kind. I do not believe we should be called upon today to give this Commission further opportunity to waste more money, for that is what it amounts to. At the present time we are exactly where we were when we started, as far as legislation and enforcement are concerned, except that conditions in the industry are far worse than before, and there is absolutely no light ahead. During the past 4 years, as I have said, we taxed this already sick industry $23,700,000, a sum of money which it cannot afford to lose. We are told that in May perhaps the first minimum prices are going to be fixed, and on the other hand we are told that fuel oil and other coal substitutes are eating into the bituminous-coal industry.

Gentlemen, what is going to happen when we raise coal prices? Are not coal substitutes going to be used in still greater quantities? Will not the consumption of coal be less and will not more miners be thrown out of work? It does not do any good to receive high prices for coal if you cannot sell your product. It does no good to give high wages if miners do not get a chance to work for those wages.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. In just a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Allen] has expired.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. In reality we have handed the Bituminous Coal Commission a piece of legislation which I believe is absolutely impracticable. Do you realize that in the Appalachian area alone we are asking this Commission to establish something like 500,000 different individual minimum prices, each price changing according to the slight difference in freight rates or the difference in the ash content of the different coals or the sulphur content of the different coals? I maintain that there is no commission on earth that can enforce or regulate 500,000 different prices.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. In just a moment I will.

The time has come for us to be fair and honest with the coal operators and with the miners. My district is a large bituminous-coal district. If this act had helped the operators, if it had helped the miners themselves, if those men were working today, if the industry was prosperous or at least breaking even, I would be down here defending that Commission with all the energy I have. It has absolutely failed, however, and it will continue to fail until this act is clarified and amended, and until the contradictory features are stricken out or the irreconcilable provisions corrected. Until the Commission can justify its existence, or until we can help them to function efficiently and satisfactorily, it is our duty this afternoon to save this industry, which is sick and facing destruction, this $900,000. The time has come for the Coal Commission to prove by actual facts and accomplishments that they can justify their existence. We must cease trusting in their everlasting promises that something constructive is going to be done. I hope my amendment will be upheld.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. BOLAND. Is it not a fact and does not the gentleman know that the only way to stabilize the bituminous coal industry is with a minimum wage and minimum price for coal? Is it not a fact and does not the gentleman know it to be a fact that 80 percent of the bituminous coal operators want this legislation, and is it not a fact that 95 percent of the workers in the bituminous coal fields want this legislation and this appropriation?

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. My answer is that if there is any operator in my district who wants this legislation he has been silent and I have not heard from him, and every single letter which I have in my files from my own district and other districts protest the continuation of this act.

Mr. BOLAND. I can inform the gentleman from Pennsylvania that 80 percent of the operators of the bituminous coal fields want this legislation.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. I can only answer the gentleman as I already have, that no operator has told me that he favors the act, and all the letters I have received are opposed to this legislation in its present form.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. HOOK. Will the gentleman tell me how he is going to make this Commission operate more efficiently by cutting off $900,000? Why not cut out the other $2,000,000 if it is all waste?

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. I will say to the gentleman that during the 4 years this Commission has been in existence they have gathered all necessary data together and have all the information they need to establish minimum prices. If they are going to do anything, they can do it now with no further need for the huge force which they have employed to gather this information in the past. That is my answer to that.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Does the gentleman know whether the United Mine Workers in his district have, as a body, taken a stand in favor of giving the National Bituminous Coal Commission the entire appropriation mentioned in this bill?

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. I believe they have. That is, the leaders. The rank and file of the miners do not know what is facing them today. They do know that they are unemployed, thousands of them. At a labor meeting last Saturday night I challenged any representative of the mine workers who had benefited by this act to stand on his feet, and not a single one of them arose,

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the hearings, wherein the members of the Bituminous Coal Commission themselves, as well as the representative of the consumers' counsel, said they could not successfully establish minimum prices and administer the Bituminous Coal Act for the coal industry unless and until a similar regulation was applied to competing fuels.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has again expired.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. The Bituminous Coal Act of 1937, approved April 26, 1937, declares that-

Regulation of the sale and distribution in interstate commerce of bituminous coal is imperative for the protection of such commerce; that there exists practices and methods of distribution and marketing of such coal that waste the coal resources of the Nation and disorganize, burden, and obstruct interstate commerce in bituminous coal, with the result that regulation of the prices thereof and of unfair methods of competition therein is necessary to promote interstate commerce in bituminous coal and to remove burdens and obstructions therefrom.

For that reason the Coal Commission was created. It has been operating approximately only 2 years instead of 4. The reasons for the delay of price fixing are given on page 585 of the hearings. I inquired of Mr. Tetlow:

Mr. Scrugham. What was the basic reason for the failure of the first price code set up?

first price code set up?

Mr. Tetlow. A question of the procedure, sir, under which the Commission established minimum prices on December 16, 1937.

The interpretation of the act was such that it was quite difficult for an administrative body to decide what the law provided and what it should consider to be due process in dealing with the rights of consumers or producers, and in having fair hearings out of which minimum prices could be established.

This act provides for the establishment of prices, and it also provides that any producer, State, political subdivision, or other party at interest had a right to file a petition for modification of any price schedule.

any price schedule.

The Commission felt that it had complied with the requirements of the act, but, unfortunately, the courts decided otherwise. The Commission, out of the interpretations and decisions of the court, is now better informed. Certainly, we now have a better understanding of the requirements of the law. At that time on account of the invalidation of certain prices established by the Commission for railroads and other large consumers of coal, the Commission was compelled to suspend the prices in effect because of the unfiltered of enforcing these prices on these who had not been the unfairness of enforcing these prices on those who had not been given relief.

It would have meant a continual attack on these prices in the courts, because of the procedure followed.

Due process, of course, is a requirement that administrative bodies must meet, and they must conduct themselves so that all parties of interest will have a fair hearing. Out of that comes the necessity of establishing the facts in a public record that is reviewable in the courts, and the administrative body is required to make its findings and its decisions upon such a record.

The amendment just offered proposes to cut the appropriation from $2,900,000 to $2,000,000. The effect of this would be to seriously hamstring the Commission in the issuance of its price findings and justification thereof. If this Commission is authorized-if it is desirable to regulate the bituminous coal industry, give them a chance. Your Appropriations Committee decided that the appropriation of $2,-900,000 for the Commission and of $285,000 for the consumers' counsel was a sufficient and proper sum of money to enable them to continue in the manner indicated by the

Let me again repeat that if this amendment is adopted to reduce the item to $2,000,000, you might as well, in my opinion, cut off the appropriation entirely.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCRUGHAM. I yield.

Mr. CARTER. If this item is cut to $2,000,000 we would just be wasting the $2,000,000, would we not? Is it not a fact that the Coal Commission is just about to put these rates into effect? In fact they will be in effect within the next few months, and in less than a year it can be determined whether or not this work is going to be effective.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. In my opinion, yes. The increased amount over and above the amount the gentleman from Pennsylvania suggested in his amendment is necessary because there has to be a certain flexibility in fixing these prices on coal. The very reason mentioned by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Allen], namely, there are competitive fuels, there are competitive substitutes, and as the price of the substitute fluctuates the price of coal has to be adjusted accordingly. The Coal Commission has to maintain a force adequate to deal with these variable factors.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCRUGHAM. I yield.

Mr. RICH. Is it not a fact that we have spent $8,150,000 and the Commission itself admitted that they had not accomplished anything?

Mr. SCRUGHAM. That is not exactly correct. On page 614 of the hearings appears a table of the tax collections. It will be noticed that the money is raised on the basis of a tax of 1 cent a ton. This money does not come entirely out of the Treasury of the United States as money that is not reimbursable. If the gentleman is interested in cumulative figures the gentleman will see that the estimated total at the end of the fiscal year 1940, of tax collections, is $10,-097,399 whereas the total expenditures to that same date will be $10,713,373 less $615,000, the reduction made by the committee. In the judgment of the committee the cumulative appropriations and the cumulative collections should be approximately the same.

The point I wanted to make was that after Mr. RICH. having spent $8,500,000, whether the money came from the Federal Treasury or from the coal companies, they should have accomplished something long, long before this.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, anyone who has known the bituminouscoal industry all his life is bound to realize that throughout the entire history of its existence it has been in the most chaotic state of any industry in the United States; and as the years go by in this industry, which employs so many men, conditions become worse with each year. The only solution I can possibly see for this problem is for them to be subject to the regulation of some commission such as this. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Allen] in his statement of losses of from twenty to sixty million dollars per year in this industry furnishes a good and sufficient reason for the continuance of the present appropriation for this Commission. Surely an industry cannot be expected to continue operating at a loss.

I think it will be interesting to the membership of this Committee this afternoon to know why this industry is so demoralized. About 40 years ago when practically the only fuel used for steel making in the United States was coke, made from bituminous coal, and bituminous coal was the modern streamlined fuel for railroads, ships, all steam plants, and for heating purposes, various industries expended vast sums of money buying coal in the ground. They bought vast acreages of coal all over the United States and tied up a great deal of money. Later on other fuels came into competition with bituminous coal, but because of the great amount of money which had been expended initially to buy up coal fields, many of these various companies found themselves in the position of having white elephants on their hands. Interest and taxes go on and they are forced to operate. Overhead in the mines opened goes on whether the mines work or not. These conditions were intensified as a result of the expansion during the World War. In consequence we have today an industry in which cutthroat operations are inevitable unless some regulation is in force. In this cutthroat competition both the operators and the miners suffer. The bituminous-coal mining industry in the United States employs about 600,000 individuals. They are for the most part men who are the least fitted of any men in the Nation to turn their hands to some other occupation when unemployed in the coal mines. Many of these men were brought here from Europe years ago for the express purpose of working in these mines. As conditions in the coal fields have caused increasing unemployment amongst this class of people they have had to be taken care of, but they are the hardest class of people in the United States to take care of.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Allen], if agreed to, will strike from the appropriation to be made to the Bituminous Coal Commission the sum of $900,000. May I call the attention of the members of the Committee this afternoon to the fact that this Commission is the only commission or board in this appropriation bill which pays its own way. As a matter of fact, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Johnson] intimated to the committee in his opening statement that if that committee had known there was a million dollars coming to this Commission which had not yet been collected, that committee would not have cut the $600,000 which was originally cut from the Bituminous Coal Commission. I wish it distinctly understood that the Commission has paid its own way to the full extent of the $2,900,000 already appropriated and is a million dollars to the good. The money has been turned into the Treasury of the United States. This is the only commission included in the pending bill that is paying its own way, the only one that is self-supporting, yet here is a move to cut its appropriation.

Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Pennsylvania has so little faith in this Commission, as he appears to have, why should his motion not include striking out the entire amount for this Commission? After all we are led to suspect this must be a sort of private feud the gentleman is carrying on to hamstring this Commission by cutting off $900,000 of its appropriation. If it is in such bad repute with the gentleman, why did he not offer a motion to do away with the whole appropriation and thereby eliminate the entire Commission?

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FADDIS. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. I suspect the gentleman had an idea if he did that it would meet with the same fate that an amendment proposing to abolish the Labor Relations Board by withdrawing its appropriation met when there were only 15 votes cast in favor of the amendment.

Mr. FADDIS. Very likely, and therefore seeks only to hamstring the Commission. Here is another thought I would like to leave with the Committee. There were 600,000 individuals engaged in this industry last year and 40,000 of these men have been replaced by loading machinery. The conditions in respect to the miners are bad enough at the best, so, in the name of simple justice, give this Board a chance. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, may I say that the members of the subcommittee gave deliberate consideration to this particular item having to do with the Coal Commission. Hearings of considerable length were held and we did reduce the amount of the appropriation asked for by $600,000. I think I am stating the matter correctly when I say it was the opinion of the members of this subcommittee that the Commission should be permitted to continue with the work presently before it, that these rates which they hope to put into effect this spring, perhaps in May or June, should be put into effect and the result obtained from the establishment of those rates noted and studied by the Congress.

Mr. Chairman, I stated a while ago that the result of this motion will be to waste $2,000,000 and would place the Bituminous Coal Commission in a position where they cannot do anything. I agree with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Faddis] that it would be far better business to cut out the whole thing than to leave the Commission in a position where it could spend $2,000,000 and still be unable to achieve its objective. I am sure it is the sentiment of the coal industry, the coal miners, and the sentiment of the overwhelming majority of the people of this country that these rates should be put into effect and a fair, square chance given the Coal Commission to see whether or not it can produce beneficial results.

Mr. Chairman, I ask the Committee to vote down the pending amendment.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. EDMISTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I represent one of the largest coal-mining districts in this country, and my district is certainly not in accord with the views expressed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Allen] who has offered the pending amendment. I would say that 95 percent of the miners in my district are in favor of the legislation and 80 percent of the operators are also in favor of the legislation.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Allen] has said in his remarks that the Commission had done nothing and that the industry is in a worse condition now than it ever was. I challenge that statement. There is at least peace in the coal industry of this country today, which was practically unknown until legislation of this sort was put on the statute books. The miners are getting a living wage for their day's work. They are not working for starvation wages. The industry is peaceful and the men are working. When the Coal Commission has finished its job, which is about 80 to 90 percent completed, there are many of us who believe that the chaotic condition which for years has existed in the industry will be remedied.

During the past 23 years the Congress of the United States has made some 19 investigations of the bituminous-coal industry, and out of those hearings and studies has come the Guffey coal bill. Many of us are disappointed that it is not functioning at the present time. We would like to have it do so. However, many difficulties were encountered in trying to do the job.

There are some 15,000 operating bituminous coal mines in this country, and every one of them has to have its own conditions met and its own price fixed. On account of that fact alone, it has been a big job which this Commission has been called upon to do. So let us give them a chance to see if it cannot get to functioning properly and enjoy prosperity.

I want to emphasize that the $2,900,000 which the committee has recommended is not costing the taxpayers of this country one thin dime. It is being put up by the industry itself at the rate of 1-cent-a-ton tax on bituminous coal.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. EDMISTON. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman feel that the bituminous coal industry today can afford to pay this 1-cent tax? And further, why should it be called upon to pay a tax when no other industry receiving benefits of any kind from the Government is called upon to pay a tax?

Mr. EDMISTON. I will answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Does the gentlemen believe we should put this tax on the bituminous coal industry alone?

Mr. EDMISTON. Any coal operator who cannot operate because they put a 1-cent-a-ton tax on him ought to get out of the business anyway. When he is averaging, as he does in my country, better than $2 a ton for his coal, the 1-cent-a-ton tax is not going to bother him. And he is paying his miners a living wage, a minimum of $5.10 per day for 7 hours' work. The object of this act is to give the operator a fair profit and the miner a living wage.

Not since the World War until the N. R. A., when the coal industry was under Government regulation, has the industry made any money. The operators were in bankruptcy and the miners were starving. Let us give the Commission a chance to do its job, and I believe the money spent will be the best investment the industry has ever made.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMISTON. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky. Mr. MAY. I hope the gentleman will discuss also the vital importance of the coal industry to the railroad industry, and the fact that the men who work in the railroad industry and the coal industry are paid by the mine operators and the railroad owners the highest wages of any industries in the country.

Mr. EDMISTON. That is true. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. EDMISTON. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALTER. Does the gentleman believe it would be fair to interfere with the operation of this agency just at a time when it is ready to proceed with the sort of work it was set up to accomplish?

Mr. EDMISTON. I just pointed out that their job is 80 to 90 percent done. Let us give them a chance to see if they cannot do what many of us believe it is possible to accomplish

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMISTON. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. If we subsidize the expansion of hydroelectric power development much further there will be no place for the bituminous coal industry.

Mr. EDMISTON. If the gentleman will look up my record he will find I vote against it consistently, for that very reason.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. Chairman, I have not used any time on this bill and have information here that, as a friend of this legislation, I should like to give to the Committee, so I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for 5 additional minutes. I shall not ask any other time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, I wonder if we cannot agree on some limitation of debate at this time. I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be concluded in 50 minutes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, has the gentleman counted the Members on their feet, so we can each have 5 minutes?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. That was my thought. Ten Members were on their feet.

Mr. DOWELL. Reserving the right to object, may I have 5 minutes of that time?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. That is my understanding, I may say to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will divide the time equally among the gentlemen who were on their feet at the time the request was made. The Chair may say to the gentleman from Oklahoma that the request of the gentleman from Kentucky was that he be permitted to proceed for 10 minutes. Is the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma that debate be limited to 50 minutes, in addition to the 10 minutes to be allotted to the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky that he be permitted to proceed for 10 minutes?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, ladies, and gentlemen, the coal industry is one of the great necessary key industries of the Nation, both in peace and in war. Next to the railroads it furnished more work for more men than any other industry. It pays the highest wages of any industry, even higher than the wages paid to railroad workers. It provides 20 percent of all of the freight loadings of the country, and that is double the amount provided by any other industry. More than $4,000,000,000 are invested in the soft-coal industry.

A distinguished committee of mining engineers appointed by the United States Coal Commission estimates that we have bituminous-coal and lignite-coal reserves amounting to 1,625,050,000,000 tons. Kentucky alone has 62,290,000,000, Pennsylvania has 34,920,000,000, Illinois has 53,920,000,000, Indiana has 26,640,000,000 tons, and West Virginia has 66,540,000,000 tons of soft coal.

When the Nation is reasonably prosperous, there should be produced and consumed in the neighborhood of 500,000,000 tons of soft coal annually and provide employment for more than 450,000 miners. It can and does provide much of the light and power for industry, the homes, the schools, the churches, and cities. It is frightful to contemplate what would happen if the supply of coal of the Nation should be suddenly cut off. It can be seen at once how important this industry is to the welfare of industry, labor, agriculture, and commerce.

HAS IT HELPED OR HURT PRODUCERS AND MINERS?

What I have to say is not for the purpose of cutting down the appropriation for the Commission, or for the purpose of criticizing the Commission. There was a great deal of politics in the set-up of the Commission, and a lot of confusion. The President had to take a hand and did partially straighten these matters out. I really do not think any of the appropriation the Commission has asked for in this bill should be denied to it. I want this act and this Commission to have a full and fair test. If we should reduce the appropriation now when the Commission insists they will submit a code of minimum prices in May 1939, and then the Commission should continue to fail to bring about better times in the soft-coal industry, the Congress would be blamed. I do not want the Commission to have any alibi if the plan does fail. Let us give the act and the Commission full opportunity to prove or discredit itself. However, I think the Congress and the country ought to know if any benefits up to this time have been derived from this act or the Commission, and on the other hand if the coal industry and miners have been helped or hurt.

In 1937 there were produced 442,455,000 tons of bituminous coal. In 1938 there were produced only 342,308,000 tons. It will be seen that there were 100,048,000 less tons produced in 1938 than there were in 1937. In 1929 there were produced 539,989,000 tons. That was 192,582,000 more tons that were produced in 1938, after we had the Guffey Coal Act and the Bituminous Coal Commission for nearly 2 years.

What the miners desired was more jobs, not less jobs. What the operators desired who favored the Guffey Coal Act was an increase of production, not loss.

The United States Bituminous Coal Commission estimates that the bituminous-coal industry lost $37,000,000 in 1937. This industry, it is estimated, lost somewhere between $60,000,000 and $100,000,000 in 1938. The results are just the opposite to what the operators and miners desired, and what the Congress had hoped for when the Guffey Coal Act was passed and the Bituminous Coal Commission was appointed and took charge of the coal industry.

I must confess that I have been greatly disappointed. My district produces a large tonnage of the highest grade of bituminous coal. I have been very anxious at all times to speak and support measures that would, in the opinion of the coal operators as well as the miners, create greater production and provide more jobs. The results of the Guffey Coal Act and the efforts of the Bituminous Coal Commission are most disappointing to me.

The bill before us is an appropriation bill. No amendment to the Guffey Coal Act would be in order here. The Ways and Means Committee would have to submit a bill to repeal or amend the Guffey Coal Act. One of the provisions in this bill merely makes appropriation for the Bituminous Coal Commission.

GUFFEY COAL ACT

The miners and the coal operators generally, and the people of the Nation, as well as the Congress, felt that some action was necessary to stabilize this industry and stabilize the price of coal. Perhaps coal operators representing 80 percent of the tonnage of soft coal and most of the miners urged the adoption of the Guffey Coal Act. Congress passed this act in 1935, but the Supreme Court held that act to be unconstitutional. A new Guffey Coal Act was passed and became effective in April 1937. The constitutionality of this last act appears to have the approval of the courts.

The Bituminous Coal Commission was appointed. It set up an elaborate and expensive organization and set about to stabilize the industry and prices of soft coal. It did fix minimum prices for the coal generally. Because the Commission had failed to observe the law and hold hearings and give the producers and consumers of soft coal an opportunity to be heard the courts set aside the order of the Commission fixing these prices, and for a year or more the Commission has been holding hearings and gathering data to fix a new code of minimum prices. The Commission has let it be known that this new order will be made in May.

WHAT ARE THE RESULTS?

It is quite clear from the letters and telegrams I have received from all parties interested in this great industry—the producers as well as the miners—that they, too, have been disappointed and there is not that overwhelming sentiment for the Guffey Coal Act that there was when it was passed.

I read from the following letters that will give the Congress and the country some impression as to their attitude now. Here is a letter of February 24, 1939:

We are appealing to you to help have the Guffey Coal Act amended so that the 30-day clause, the tax, and the market provision will be eliminated. This law has completely demoralized the coal business, and unless some relief is given through amendment of this law, many coal companies will be forced to the wall.

Here is another letter dated February 25, 1939:

At the end of almost 2 years, the Guffey Coal Act has accomplished nothing for the coal industry. On the other hand, it has cost approximately $20,000,000 in taxes and District Board expenses and direct cash out-of-pocket expenses to producers (coal operators). Due to the restriction on the sales contracts and the uncertainty of this law hanging over the industry, it has, in my opinion, cost the industry an additional $50,000,000 to $75,000,000 in losses.

These are reliable coal people who were friendly to and urged the passage of the act.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. I wonder if the gentleman will not agree with me that the reasons there were so many coal miners unemployed during the period to which he refers were through the competition of hydroelectricity, the competition of fuel oil shipped into this country, and the competition of natural gas. None of these is a labor-employing industry.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. They are contributing factors.

One trouble about the Guffey Coal Act is that no coal company under that act and the orders of the Commission can make a contract to furnish coal to any concern or individual for a period beyond 30 days. They must run their business on a hand-to-mouth basis. A coal mine cannot run and do any good that way.

Furthermore, under the Guffey Coal Act the coal producers themselves must pay not only their social-security tax and other taxes, but they must pay 1½ cents a ton to carry on certain activities of the Coal Commission and other activities in the enforcement of the act; and then there is such a restriction on sales contracts as we are advised greatly hampers the production and sale of coal. Another producer of coal writes:

To the Guffey Coal Act is mainly attributable the demoralized condition of the coal business at this time, with a resulting hardship on the employees (miners) who make their living that way. An amendment should be made so that the tax, the 30-day clause, and the marketing provisions will be eliminated.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Just as soon as I read one or two more of these letters.

Here is one dated March 9, 1939:

The Coal Act of 1937 has been an experiment costly to the industry in extra taxes, extra expenses, and loss of realization. Its continuation will benefit none. It has hurt the coal business and at the same time has thrown tens of thousands of miners out of work. The 30-day limitation on contracts is particularly harmful.

Here is another letter dated February 22, 1939:

The coal industry is in a terrible shape and we think the Guffey Coal Act is responsible. We have no hopes of a price ever being established that will ever be fair to all or anyway near to all.

Then another letter dated February 28, 1939:

There is no question but what it has had a very ruinous effect on the industry. For over 2 years the Bitminous Coal Commission has been trying to find a way to make it work, and I say to you frankly that it is the opinion of nearly all of the operators that it is impossible to make it work.

I am not unfriendly to this or any other measure that has for its purpose to help the coal industry and the miners. I strongly favor measures that will help the coal industry and help the coal miners. The coal industry cannot continue to lose these large sums of money and neither can the coal miners continue to be without work with their families suffering from hunger and cold. [Applause.]

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania and Mr. MAY rose.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I yield first to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. I want it understood that I feel exactly the same way about that, and I agree with what the gentleman has said about the condition of the coal industry; but does not the gentleman believe also that if the minimum prices are established, which will be higher than the prices which they are receiving today, this will drive the consumer more and more to the use of coal substitutes, especially when the fact is considered that the producers of the substitutes can contract for a year if they want to, as against 30 days in the coal industry?

IS THE GUFFEY COAL ACT WORKABLE?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I thank the gentleman. I am wondering if the Congress has not handed to the Commission an impossible task. There are tens of thousands of coal mines in the Nation with difference in the thicknesses of the seams of coal, the quality of the coal, the distance from the market, and many other material factors that enter into the cost of production and value of the coal. Is it reasonably possible for this Commission to fix prices that will not greatly favor one coal mine or one section of the country as against another coal mine in another section of the country with different thickness of seam, quality of coal, and location to the consuming markets? Will it not be necessary for them to fix thousands of prices and then, with changing conditions in industry and agriculture, can the Commission from day to day or from month to month change these prices to meet these changing conditions? Under this act the Commission has virtually taken over the coal-mining industry in this country. How can a commission and its assistants here in Washington determine with any degree of fairness and accuracy all of these many, many questions?

There is another complication that enters into this problem that is outside of the power of the Commission. As we increase the price of coal it increases the use of crude oil, natural gas, and hydroelectric power. The Commission here can only regulate and fix prices on one of the four chief fuels of the Nation. It can put the halter on coal, but it can do nothing about oil, gas, or electrical power. If this matter can be handled at all by the Government, the Commission must have jurisdiction to control these four fuels.

The administration refuses to put a protective tariff on the hundreds of millions of barrels of fuel oil that have been shipped into this country in competition and used in competition with coal. The Government has taken the tax money of the coal producers, as well as the coal miners, and developed hydroelectric power. This has operated heavily against the producers of coal and the miners in Kentucky, Tennessee, Virginia, West Virginia, Alabama, and other States. The coal mines and miners furnished the coal to run the shops, factories, and mills, heat the homes, and light the cities and towns. Now they are getting power subsidized by the Government, and this has taken away hundreds of millions of tons of coal business and the work of hundreds of thousands of miners. This administration is doing that to the soft-coal industry and to the coal miners of the Nation.

Great pipe lines have been and are being put in to pipe natural gas for long distances. For instance, there are pipe lines leading from Texas into and through coal fields in Kentucky, and there are pipe lines leading from West Virginia and other States into and through coal fields in Kentucky.

There is no restriction put on these three fuels, but coal is taxed and haltered, and that industry and the miners are suffering tremendously; and, as pointed out, there are 100,000 less miners at work today than there were in 1937, and in 1938 we produced over 100,000,000 tons of coal less than in 1937; and the coal business lost $37,000,000 in 1937 and from $60,000,000 to $100,000,000 in 1938, and it is not getting any better.

It is little wonder that the coal industry and the miners who favored this legislation in the beginning are losing faith in the act and in the Commission and are losing faith in the administration's pledge to put this industry on its feet and put the miners to work. The administration should give the industry and miners protection against the low-priced crude oil that is being shipped into this country from Mexico, South America, and other countries. It should give them protection against unfair competition on account of hydroelectric power. It is unfair to require the taxpayers of the Nation as a whole to give a bounty to the users of hydroelectric power in competition with coal, and it is likewise unfair to have no restrictions on natural gas and place such heavy restrictions on coal and the miners.

THE COMMISSION ATTEMPTS TOO MUCH

Congress is limited in its powers to the regulation of interstate commerce and intrastate commerce where it is in such quantities as to depress and retard interstate commerce. This Commission has declared that all soft-coal mines in Kentucky and many other States are engaged in interstate commerce and come within the Guffey Coal Act. In my district as well as in others, a great many of the farms have a little coal bank on them to provide coal for the farmer and his family, and some of these sell a small quantity of coal in the neighborhood. While at home this summer, quite a number of farmers came to see me and complained time and again that persons representing the Coal Commission had called upon them and were trying to force them to adopt the coal code and place themselves under the Guffey Coal Act and were attempting to collect 191/2 percent a ton tax from these little local producers of coal. One man pointed out to me that he had sold but one load of coal in a year to his farmer neighbor, yet he was hounded about the coal code and the Guffey Coal Act and 191/2-percent tax.

We were assured by the author of the bill on the floor of the House when it was passed that these little local strictly intrastate mines would not come within the law, and in my honest opinion they do not come within the law and the Commission is exceeding the authority given it by Congress and the powers granted it by Congress under the Constitution to interfere with these little local mines. For instance, in my home county there is not a ton of coal shipped into the county from any part of Kentucky or any other State. There are several of these little local truck or wagon mines. They are all warned to join the coal code and they are presented from time to time with claims for taxes of 19½ percent of the market price of the coal. That means about 39 cents on the ton.

The great trouble with the N. R. A. and its administration was that they tried to make it apply to restaurants and pressing shops and strictly local businesses. The good effects were destroyed because the N. R. A. attempted too much. The Coal Commission has put in force the 30-day provision that no coal company can make any contract to furnish any coal for a longer period than 30 days. It has put into effect the heavy taxing provisions and other provisions greatly handicapping the coal industry, and places the coal industry at such a very great disadvantage that unless something is done oil, hydroelectric power, and natural gas will cripple this great coal industry beyond the means of recovery and will add to the great army of 100,000 or more unemployed miners.

I sincerely hope that the Commission will demonstrate its ability under the Guffey Act to help the soft-coal industry and the coal miners. It has had nearly 2 years, and unless substantial results do show in the near future there will be a real effort to repeal or modify this act and do away with this expensive Commission.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, a great many people in the United States-I dare say practically 90 percent of them-have never seen a coal mine. I dare say that 75 percent of the people of the United States have never seen a coal miner. Unfortunately, there has always been a prejudice in the minds of many people against the coal industry and the men who mine coal. Do you not know that the coal miners have contributed more than the membership of all the other unions of all kinds to the uplift of the laboring man in the world for the past 50 years? There is no question about that. I cannot give you this as an exact fact, but I think the second largest number of people employed in any industry in the United States are the coal miners. In the last week we have seen in this House a psychology that is very unfavorable to the Guffey Coal Act. Why? It is largely because the poor old coal miner and the coal industry have once more been compelled to bear the burdens of other industries. Just last week someone rose here in this House and, by amendment to the reorganization bill, took out of its purview those who come within the scope of this Bituminous Coal Commission's activities. They took them out with apparent satisfaction and nobody stood up for them or the Commission, because the time was not appropriate. But the time is appropriate now to stand up for this organization and these miners and coal producers and defend them. Certainly the Commission has made mistakes, and its greatest mistake has been its unfortunate name—the Guffey Coal Act. Probably no public man was quite so much deserving of the spanking he received in last year's elections as this man Guffey. He and his political manipulations are more responsible for the unfavorable attitude that many people show toward the Commission and its work than any other one thing. Clean his influence out of this situation and you have gone a long way in restoring the confidence of the people in the Commission and its purposes. Certainly there was politics in the activities of the Commission. There has been entirely too much; but for you Democrats, let me ask, Who cleaned it up? That is to the credit of the President. He cleaned it up to some extent. It was high time that it should have been cleaned. It was stinking to high heaven.

It was improperly controlled and damaged, but because it was weighted down by politics, you Democrats cannot find fault with what I say, because the President himself called the Commission, or some members of it, down before him and gave them a spanking. This straightened it out to some extent, although it is not entirely straightened out yet. He or Congress or someone else in authority must stamp out the crooked politics that has throttled the honest and conscientious efforts of those on the Commission who were honestly attempting to do a good, honest job.

The Bituminous Coal Commission has gone through one of the hardest legal tests ever put up to any department of this kind, and why do I say that? I say that the burden it took upon itself to revitalize, to rehabilitate this industry, was a new kind of a burden. It had no direct legal precedents by which it could be guided. It had to take it up in new fields and in new directions. It had to proceed as a pioneer. There were no well-defined signboards by which the Commission could travel. When the Commission in its hurry threw together the first price schedule it was no great wonder that it ran counter to the courts.

Many good lawyers had taken positions for and against practically every feature of the act. Many had prophesied that it would run into rough going as it proceeded on its way through the courts. I prophesied the same thing. I say that not with the spirit of "I told you so," but it did run counter to the courts, and the courts said that the rate schedule would not stand. The rate schedule had been established without full compliance with all those requirements that must be met before any such schedule can be enforced in law. What did the Commission do and what did those in charge of this program do? They did not cry or threaten about it. They recognized the power of the courts, and they tried to set their house in order. Since then they have done the best they could. It is a gigantic job, a big job. It is a big job to pioneer a new field and do something that nobody else has ever done before. I think it is generally considered that for the last 6 or 8 months this Commission has been assiduous. I think it can be said that it has been sincere in its efforts to make this law effective.

No doubt that they have been a little slow, because their task is a great one. It is a gigantic task. They want to do right, and they tell me by the 1st of June that they are going to be able to publish a new price schedule. Will it stand the test of the courts? I do not know whether it will or not, but suppose it is stricken down again, if they can by the simple experiment of trial and error, if they can by honesty and sincerity of purpose, provide a legislative plan and program that will rehabilitate one of the greatest industries of this country, why not have patience with them? The Bureau of the Budget, which is in effect the President's mouthpiece, allowed this Bureau about $700,000 more than is here recommended by the Appropriations Committee. This amendment seeks to cut off another $900,000. If this Commission is entitled to be continued, it should be provided with a reasonable budget so that it can operate reasonably. There is no use to permit our judgments to be warped by our prejudices founded upon a psychology created by untoward conditions for which the miners or the industry are not responsible. This is the time to act like statesmen and not as those who have no understanding. If this task of stabilizing this great but unfortunate industry cannot be done, let it be thus determined after a fair trial and only after a fair trial. I bespeak your intelligent consideration. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, I cannot forget—and I am sure those who were here at the time have not forgotten—the very able and excellent address delivered before this body by Hon. David J. Lewis on this subject. Mr. Lewis was a man who grew up in the mines himself and whose forebears were miners also. He had gone to Britain and to Germany to study the subject before the consideration of this bill came on this floor. We also ought to remember, as I do, the man who really pioneered in this work, the man who gathered together the facts in relation to it and presented it in the form of a bill, the man who had the very great respect of this body, not only as a man of great ability but as a student who went to the bottom of things, the man who wrote this bill. That is none other than Fred Vinson. [Applause.]

He knew what the requirements were. He formulated this law. It is well formulated. I want to call your attention, therefore, to the fact that we are not shooting into the air, but we are doing what we ought to do for this great industry. We ought to remember also that any business that is compelled to go on producing at less than cost of production hurts every other business. We ought to look at the facts about the German cartel. The same thing occurred in that country that has occurred later in our country—that is, that the coal industry was destroying itself. It was a competition of destruction, not of development. The same thing then ensued in England. The same thing ensued there. England was compelled also to follow along the line of the German cartel.

What happened? Was it a success or not? It has been and is a success in both countries. If this Commission is permitted to do its work as it should, without being hamstrung, it should bring out the same results here in our own country. I repeat to you that a business of the extent of the soft-coal industry in this country, which is compelled or permitted to go on producing at less than cost, is destroying all other business as well. We ought to consider the great number of miners who are interested. They are for this almost to a man. They want a fair chance. That is all I ask, and that is all you ask. If when we try it out and find out the short-comings of the law, if there are any, and correct those, and then try again as we should do, if it finally fails, I will be the first man to admit its failure.

But unless and until we give it the full measure of our support we ought not criticize; we ought not overlook the fact that there are 36 of the large producers, some of them in the immediate vicinity of the district represented by the gentleman who introduced this amendment. As pointed out by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Jenkins], because of their ability financially, they will be able to choke to death the smaller ones unless restrained by law. The question is, Are we going to permit them to do it? I doubt that this body will consider any such thing as that.

We ought to support this Commission. We ought to give it every dollar it asks for because we ought not to hamstring it after we put it up. It is our Commission. This body created it. We ought to be loyal to our own ideals. We ought to be loyal to those men who have committed it to our care. There ought not be a single vote against the continuation of this Commission. It ought to be encouraged. It ought to be helped. It ought to be directed in every way we can to make it a success, because if we make it a success it will solve the problems of other businesses as well as the coal business. It will help every other business in America. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, the Bituminous Coal Act which was passed 2 years ago had for its purpose the stabilizing of the coal industry and the stabilizing of employment in the coal industry. For reasons which have been many times stated here the Bituminous Coal Commission for the past year has been making a real effort to accomplish this purpose throughout the entire country. As has been made clear to you today this is a big job. The Bituminous Coal Commission has devoted as much time and as much energy to carrying out this program as it is possible to do within that time. Testimony before the committee shows that 80 percent of this work has already been accomplished. It can be completed within a short time if this Commission is permitted to continue the work it has been doing the past year. I hope every Member of this House will vote against this amendment, because if the amendment is adopted the Bituminous Coal Commission might just as well quit their work. They cannot complete the work they have set out to accomplish.

The Appropriations Committee has already reduced the Budget estimate, and in my opinion this should not have been done. Every reduction made in this appropriation will extend the time of the Commission for completing its work and will delay the coal industry as well as the many thousands of employees of this industry from the benefits of the Bituminous

There are today from twelve to thirteen million men and women walking the streets looking for work. As has been stated, the coal industry supplies employment to the greatest number of employees of any single industry in the United States. The testimony before the Appropriations Committee shows 60 percent of the price of a ton of coal is paid to labor.

If the amendment before the House should be adopted, which I sincerely hope it will not be, it would do a great injustice to the many laboring people of the country.

If the Bituminous Coal Commission can stabilize this industry and if it can stabilize the labor engaged in this industry, it will furnish employment to six or seven hundred thousand men in the United States. We should vote down this amendment and give the Coal Commission the opportunity to complete its work.

The stabilization of employment in the coal industry will do away with the haphazard intermittent employment. I mean employment for a few days or a few weeks, and then being laid off for several weeks or several months. Congress should make every effort to bring this about.

Now, I want to go to the question which was asked some time ago, and I want to read some of the testimony. been stated here that unless some provision is made for the competitors of coal, nothing can be done by this Commission. That is not the testimony before the committee. On page 605 of the hearings I read as follows:

Mr. O'Neal. My point is this: Can you get the proper control of heat producers unless we take them all instead of one? I mean by that, gas, oil, and coal. Do you think this law can be effective unless we bring in all the competitors?

Mr. Tetlow. I think it would be helpful.

Mr. O'Neal. You do think it can operate without regulating the other two successfully?

Mr. Terlow. Yes. I think it would operate more successfully, but I think it can operate as it is and bring relief.

Under existing conditions the Congress of the United States should do all in its power to assist in the employment of labor, and it is my hope that through the Bituminous Coal Commission the coal industry can be stabilized and these 600,000 or 700,000 employees in the coal industry can be given regular employment.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr.

Hook] is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, I think it is rather important here to bring out some of the facts. I have heard the statement made that the action of this Commission was going to increase the price of coal to a great degree. I understand that after a very extensive study the average increase will be about 11 cents per ton, and this 11 cents additional will go toward the protection of the grades of coal. This Coal Commission has certainly done a very wonderful job when you stop to think that they have gone into freight rates in about 150,000 destination points in the United States and about 12,000 in Canada. It is the first time it was ever attempted. It has involved the ascertaining of more than 1,000,000 individual rate quotations.

Let me read you a letter of a coal operator in answer to the Committee for the Amendment of the Coal Act in which the writer states:

ROCKY MOUNTAIN FUEL Co., Denver, Colo., February 27, 1939.

Mr. JOHN A. HOWE, Chairman, Committee for Amendment of the Coal Act,

Washington, D. C Dear Mr. Howe: Replying to your letters of February 10 and February 18 received, this company does not care to be associated with your committee and is decidedly opposed to your proposal to amend the National Bituminous Coal Act.

We believe that the act should be given a chance to function. Our position in this respect is not based on "fond hope and misleading information" as you characterize in your letter the belief of contracters helding circular views to your corn.

of operators holding similar views to our own. We have closely and continuously followed all legal and administrative efforts and developments of recent years seeking to work out an obviously necessary program of Federal regulation of the coal industry. To the best of our ability we have cooperated with such efforts.

We are fully familiar also with previous attempts to prevent the functioning of the act through attacks on its constitutionality. We note with interest that you do not now question the constitutionality of the act but consider it "unworkable, uneconomic, and tremendously costly." We are of the opinion that the delays, obstacles, and expenses you complain of are due in a large measure to the attitude and actions of those members of the coal industry who have obstructed procedure and cooperated in the attacks on the act made by strongly organized industrial consumers seeking to continue their old-time privilege of paying less than production cost for their coal cost for their coal.

cost for their coal.

Your letter of February 18 states, "Demoralized prices caused by the provisions of this act are causing losses variously estimated at from $7,000,000 to $10,000,000 a month." Inasmuch as the provisions of the act have been prevented from becoming operative, the statement that these provisions have caused demoralized prices seems to me extremely inaccurate and misleading. The industry was in the "red" before the act was passed, and you propose no remedy for the deplorable conditions which dominated the industry when there was no Federal regulation.

Our own experience shows conclusively that even the brief periods during which prices have been subject to Federal regulation our own experience shows conclusively that even the brief periods during which prices have been subject to Federal regulation in recent years have brought distinct benefits and stabilization. Certainly the experience of the industry has proved that without Federal regulation, chaos and loss prevail. We intend, therefore, to cooperate fully in restoring stabilization through Federal regulation. Very truly yours,

President and General Manager.

That letter came from the Rocky Mountain Fuel Co., of Denver, Colo.

I think someone is getting personally ambitious and hopes to use this amendment for such a purpose. I hope that the Members will go along with the committee and allow this Commission to function properly. Do not stab the organization in the back. Lend it a helping hand, and I know that the operators, the laborers, and business will rejoice in the fact that this organization will stabilize the coal industry.

Vote down this amendment.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr.

Walter] is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, the decision of the Supreme Court on the 26th of May 1935 in the Schechter case seems to have been a signal for the beginning of a pricecutting war that might have known no end. The one industry that felt this situation most was an industry that for many years had indeed been very sick. In order to meet the situation we found ourselves in at that time an attempt was made to point the way for this particular industry to get on its feet and an effort should be made to solve the many problems with which it was confronted. Under N. R. A. a great step toward the stabilization of this industry had been taken. Now, step by step, it has been demonstrated that this act ultimately will bring at least a semblance of order into this chaotic industry. It seems to me that it would indeed be unfair after all of the preliminary work that has been done, after all of the steps that have been taken that should bring about better conditions to hamstring this agency right at the point when they are able to go ahead and accomplish real results.

It seems to me that cutting this amount off the appropriation can mean only one thing; that is, the curtailment of a program that the administration of the agency feels is necessary in order to bring about the results that we felt would be accomplished when the Guffey Coal Act was passed. It is indeed a foolish thing at this time to seriously interfere with the operation of this Commission after all the preliminary steps have been taken.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, it is probably nothing new in legislative history that what was designed to be meat turned out to be poison, and this appears to be the case with respect to the regulation of the coal industry. With high hope I was one of those who supported the Coal Conservation Act of 1935 and the act of 1937. It appeared that some regulation was absolutely necessary to bring order out of chaos and place the bituminous coal industry on a profitable basis. Now it appears that the Bituminous Coal Commission, which was designed to nurse the industry back to health, turns out to be the lord high executioner. This was virtually admitted by Chairman Tetlow, of the Coal Commission, in the course of the hearings when he stated that unless competitive fuels are regulated there may ultimately be nothing to regulate.

Nor is this the fault of the Bituminous Coal Commission. It was created by Congress to regulate only the coal industry and to establish a structure of minimum prices. It has no authority over competitive fuels. The result is that the Coal Commission finds itself in the position of holding the dog while competitive fuels cut off the tail a portion at a time. Thus the Commission is mandated by law to establish minimum prices in the hope of placing the coal industry on a paying basis only to discover that the market for coal is being usurped by electrical energy, oil, and natural gas, none of which are subject to rate and price regulation and all of which can play at will in progressively destroying the market for coal. Truly it is a grim and ghastly business. A brief examination will make the picture quite clear.

In the field of electrical energy the Bonneville Dam, the Grand Coulee Dam, the Boulder Canyon Dam, and the Tennessee Valley Authority will spend nearly a billion dollars of public funds for the creation of an electrical giant which will displace millions upon millions of tons of coal. Every one of these agencies is so created that it can establish its own rates without regard to competitive fuels and take away the coal market. Meanwhile coal is to be forced into a strait jacket of minimum prices, and in addition thereto, can get its product into these markets only at the price fixed by the Bituminous Coal Commission and at freight rates set by the Interstate Commerce Commission. It is a beautiful job of execution.

In the petroleum field there is but the mildest pretense of regulation. To be sure, there is a feeble kind of regulation of pipe lines in interstate commerce and an even feebler regulation by the petroleum conservation division in the pending bill, which is designed to effectuate uniform laws among States for the conservation of petroleum resources. But, aside from that, fuel oil is in position to usurp and make inroads upon the market once enjoyed by the coal industry, and that industry can only grin and bear it as it struggles under the restrictions of minimum prices. It is another beautiful job of execution.

In the natural-gas field the condition is even more aggravated and indefensible. In theory the Natural Gas Act of 1938 confers upon the Federal Power Commission the authority to regulate the natural-gas industry in commerce. But what about the joker that slipped into that act, which provides that the Federal Power Commission shall be without authority to suspend rates, charges, and classifications with respect to natural gas which is used only for industrial purposes? Under the operations of that act, natural gas has been offered to a Denver industry for 31/2 cents per thousand cubic feet when the domestic rate is $1.90 per thousand cubic feet. This means that the domestic rate is 54 times higher than the rate offered on industrial natural gas. In Illinois and Missouri 76,000,000,000 cubic feet of natural gas were sold in 1937 at an average rate of 18.4 cents per thousand cubic feet, whereas in Iowa 26,000,000,000 cubic feet were sold at an average rate of 14.4 cents. This odd situation prevails in spite of the fact that the natural gas used in Iowa must be piped from Texas, while Missouri has at least 140 gasproducing wells of its own. All this obtains with a free and untrammeled hand, displacing the market for coal, while the coal industry languishes in the toils of rigid freight rates made by one Government agency and in the toils of a minimum-price structure to be established by another Government agency. It is a beautiful job of execution.

In Chicago, under the terms of the so-called forbearance agreement, a contract was made to supply natural gas to an industry at 7½ cents per thousand cubic feet as against a domestic rate of $1.84. If this same ratio applied to coal, it would mean that industrial coal would sell for $1.57 per ton, whereas the domestic consumer would pay $36.80 per ton. Truly, it is an amazing situation. Not even the Acting Chairman of the Federal Power Commission could tell when questioned by me in the course of the hearings on the independent offices appropriation bill on December 12, 1938, just how that joker crept into the law. On page 174 of the hearings you will find this answer from Mr. Seavey in response to my question about it:

Mr. Seavey. My opinion in that matter is that the restriction on our control over industrial rates was made because in the southern fields they have very low industrial rates in order to promote the use of gas for industrial purposes, and there is just a possibility that those rates being so low would become a burden upon other users of gas, and the only way I can figure it out is that the interests in Congress believed that there should be no dampening effect upon the promotion of the use of gas for industrial purposes.

The statement speaks for itself, but I am curious to know "what interests in Congress believed there should be no dampening effect upon the promotion of the use of natural gas for industrial purposes." It is another beautiful job of execution on the coal industry, and that industry can only labor in the toils of rigid freight rates and minimum prices and watch its markets disappear under the impact of competitive fuel.

Nor does the coal industry find much comfort in the State Department or in the Committee for Reciprocity Information. There is pending at this moment a proposed reciprocal trade agreement with Venezuela under which the present negligible duty on fuel oil and crude oil may be frozen at its present level or even lowered. The present duty is one-half cent per gallon, or 21 cents per barrel, as compared with the British duty of $1.26 per barrel. In 1937, 23,186,916 barrels of crude oil were imported from Venezuela alone, and total imports from all sources were more than 57,000,000 barrels a year. This imported oil displaces millions of tons of coal and means a loss of millions in miners' wages and in freight revenues to the railroads. Meanwhile, bituminous coal can only wriggle in its strait jacket and watch the progressive execution take place.

If the proposed seven regional T. V. A.'s are ever authorized by Congress, it will mean the creation of other compettors for coal with full authority to torpedo and destroy the coal industry at will.

It is all so unfair and indefensible to hog-tie the coal industry with freight rates and price restrictions and permit competitive fuels, subsidized by public funds to roam at will in search of markets, and at rates which are not subject to competitive regulation.

There must be a remedy for all this. There is a remedy. It is high time to recognize this competition in fuels, not only from the standpoint of competition and conservation of our resources but from the standpoint of equity as well. The answer seems to lie in the creation of a national fuel and power commission, with a board of directors sufficiently large to give representation to every competitive fuel and to the labor interests involved. Such a commission could well take over the complete regulation and direction of all types of fuel and power and place the matter on an equitable basis. It could and should take over all Government ventures in the power field, including Bonneville, T. V. A., Grand Coulee, Fort Peck, Boulder Canyon Dam, and any other power developments by the United States. Into such a commission could be merged the activities of Rural Electrification Administration, the Federal Power Commission, the National Power Policy Commission, and the activities in this field of the National Resources Committee. Such a commission could absorb the activities of the Petroleum Conservation Division. It should and could take over the administration of the Natural Gas Act of 1938. It could take over the duties of the Bituminous Coal Commission. The existing enactments which such a commission would be called upon to administer should be amended and improved so that fuels might be recognized on a competitive basis and each one dealt with fairly and equitably. As the situation stands today, the coal industry is faced with progressive annihilation, and this fact is fully realized by the present Bituminous Coal Commission. As one step in this direction, I shall introduce a bill this week which amends the Natural Gas Act of 1938 so as to give to the coal industry as a matter of right, the opportunity to intervene in all rate hearings before the Federal Power Commission as an interested party in order to protect the interests of the industry in the face of growing competition.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH].

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, the remarks of my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. Allen] are not without merit. The statements of those who favor his amendment and those who would defeat it are based largely on logic. I trust no partisanship enters into this debate.

The comments just made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Dirksen] were certainly thought provoking when he discussed the displacement of coal by competing fuels. We cannot, also, overlook the problem arising by labor-saving devices being installed at the mines, thus displacing the workers. He spoke of the pending trade agreement with Venezuela, and the importation of crude petroleum and fuel oil to the United States from that country. In that connection I desire, for purposes of the Record, to state that on August 15, 1938, I personally appeared before the Committee for Reciprocity Information and contended:

The ½-cent import duty now imposed is certainly not sufficient to prevent the importation of fuel oil nor to slow down its importation in any manner whatsoever. I find that there were in 1937 approximately 23,187,000 barrels of crude oil imported into the United States from Venezuela. It is my further understanding that almost 50 percent of all such crude petroleum and fuel oil imported into this Nation originates from the country of Venezuela.

I further pointed out that-

We believe—I mean those miners and operators, and all those in West Virginia who are vitally interested in this subject—that 6,000,000 tons of bituminous coal, as estimated in heat value, were displaced in 1937 by oil imported from Venezuela. I call your attention to what I believe to be a fact, although we cannot put our finger definitely upon it, that a portion at least of the fuel oil that comes from the Netherland West Indies and other sections actually has its origination in Venezuela, and I know that your honorable body will look into that statement.

I close by saying that I believe that at the present time there is an unfair competition with the bituminous-coal output of this country by the importation of fuel oil largely from the country of Venezuela. I believe also that there is a displacement of bituminous coal by the importation of crude petroleum and fuel oil which is working at the present hour to the detriment of the bituminous coal industry, with the resultant bad effect upon the public welfare of the Nation. I believe that any increase in the importations of crude petroleum and fuel oil from Venezuela would simply add to that very picture, that very dark picture, which exists today in the bituminous-coal industry of the United States, not only accentuating the financial distress of the operator, not only adding to the unemployment of the miner, but also adding materially to the relief rolls and thereby bringing about an added burden to Federal and to State governments. The bituminous-coal industry is attempting itself, with the aid of the Government, through an agency created by Congress, to work out as far as possible its problems at the present time without the added unfair competitive struggle which would ensue by the increased imports of crude petroleum and fuel oil from the country of Venezuela.

I represent a congressional district in West Virginia composed of 15 counties, 9 of which are bituminous-coal-producing areas. I know of no measure for which I worked more diligently at its inception than the legislation that created the Bituminous Coal Commission. I am certain the records of this Commission clearly disclose that my correspondence with it, and personal conferences over a long period, indicate that no Member of this body has been more energetic in attempting to impress the members of the Commission itself with the dire distress and the chaotic conditions which exist and have existed in the coal industry.

In this connection may I read portions of the correspondence had during the last 6 months. Under date of August 31, 1938, I addressed the following telegram to Mr. Tetlow, of the Bituminous Coal Commission:

Am deeply distressed at plight of bituminous coal industry. Many operators in my district are actually faced with bankruptcy. Unemployment among miners is rapidly increasing. Can you now wire me approximate date when prices will be set? These people need encouraging information. It may cause them to be able to hold their properties together until aid comes.

Under date of September 3 I received a letter from Mr. Tetlow, in which he made the following statement:

The problem is a very complicated one and the Commission is making certain that every step is in accordance with the provisions of the Bituminous Coal Act of 1937, and will accord to everyone the protection which is guaranteed by our Constitution.

I can assure you, however, that prices will be established as soon as possible consistent with strict legal requirements.

I addressed a further letter to him, dated September 13, 1938, which was in answer to his letter of September 3, in which I again prodded the Commission, and among other assertions, I stated:

There is a growing unrest and discouragement among operators and miners with the seeming lack of progress which is being made in the establishment of minimum prices for the bituminous coal industry. As one of those who spoke and voted for the measure which created the National Bituminous Coal Commission, I have felt that the benefits of the legislation should be forthcoming in view of the fact of assessments and taxes which are being collected from the industry with no resulting assistance.

I received a reply from him under date of September 30, 1938, and I quote a part of that communication:

Although we are cognizant of the appalling conditions existing in the various coal-producing areas of the country, we feel it would be utter folly to short-cut legal requirements and establish a schedule of minimum prices which ultimately could be destroyed by interests inimical to this law and to the industry. The chaos which would result to the producers and employees if such an event occurred would surely be much worse than that which now prevails.

Mr. Chairman, in 1937 it is said the bituminous coal industry showed a loss of approximately $37,000,000. In 1938 the industry is reputed to have sustained a loss of approximately $78,000,000. Today an operator in northern West Virginia pays a tax on coal mined of about 12 cents a ton in various forms to Federal and State Governments. Only 1 cent of this tax goes to the Coal Commission and one-half cent to the district board. Of course, even these two payments, plus other taxes, places a heavy burden on the operators. I sympathize with their plight, and they know of my efforts to be helpful, even to the extent of White House conferences, in the hope that the burden might be eased.

Without any disparagement on my colleague from Pennsylvania, or those who join with him, I think it would be absolutely and obviously wrong at this late date, when the Commission is about ready to set prices, thereby giving this law an opportunity to succeed, for the Congress of the United States to take any action which would deny the agency the necessary funds to carry forward the work of the Commission in establishing minimum prices so benefits may accrue to the operators, employment may be increased, and some degree of stabilization take place.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman honestly believe, in his considered opinion, that any human commission can administer 500,000 different individual prices in just one area?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I say to the gentleman I am ready to give this final opportunity to the Commission to put the prices into effect and see if the law will actually work. [Applause.] I want no act of mine to be construed as hindering the coal industry as it tries to come back in the ring after being down for the count of nine. It may be that the act will not function. It was written into the law of the land. We are responsible, and we must not stop at this point.

It is my fervent hope that when prices are set and the act functions that resultant benefits will justify my judgment. If failure ensues, then I shall unhesitatingly join those persons who will stop what we are now attempting and follow another course. [Applause.]

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, being from Pennsylvania, where probably our greatest opportunity to give men work has been in the bituminous and the anthracite mines of our State, where a few years ago we employed 800,000 miners and today employ less than 400,000 men in the mines, and knowing that what is most vital to our American happiness and contentment is jobs, I may say that if the $900,000 we are spending on this Commission would increase the number of jobs for miners or aid or assist the miners in any way, I certainly would not want to do anything that would interfere with the Commission, but I believe the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania bears out the fact that it is at least $900,000 just wasted.

Let us see the amount of money we have spent on this Commission. It is over $8,150,000. We certainly should have accomplished something in 3 years with this amount of money, but when the representatives of the Commission before our committee admitted that the Commission did not and has not been able to accomplish anything for the benefit of the bituminous coal industry, then I believe it is about time Congress wakes up. I feel confident we can cut $900,-000 from the appropriation for this Commission without interfering one iota with its operation because the Bituminous Coal Commission has been made a dumping ground for political job holders. There are more political job holders in the Bituminous Coal Commission than in any other one body in Washington, based on the amount of money expended. This is absolutely so. The Commission can get rid of these political hangers-on and still continue to do its work.

As was stated by the gentleman from Illinois, it is up to you as Members of Congress to try in some manner to aid the coal industry, and you are not going to do it when you permit this Commission to handle only bituminous coal.

Let me show you how much oil has been imported in the last 11 months of 1938, and I quote from page 611 of the hearings, this information being given by the Bituminous Coal Commission:

The import statistics for 1938 at present available cover the 11 months ending in November. During that period there were imported under bond for refining and export or for supplies of vessels a total of 3,135,000 barrels of crude and 16,656,000 barrels of fuel oil. In terms of heating value, this is equivalent to 719,000 and 3,820,000 net tons of coal, respectively. The extent to which such imports under bond are competitive with coal is not known.

During the same period the dutiable imports not under bond amounted to 20,239,000 barrels of crude oil and 6,440,000 barrels of

During the same period the dutiable imports not under bond amounted to 20,239,000 barrels of crude oil and 6,440,000 barrels of fuel oil. In terms of heating value, this is equivalent to 4,642,000 and 1,477,000 net tons of coal, respectively. It should be noted, however, that not all of these imports are directly competitive with coal.

Imports during 1938 appear to show an increase over 1937 for the item of crude petroleum under bond and a decrease for other items. Statistics are shown below.

If you want to help the miners of this country, and I may say the larger part of the money spent in the production of coal goes to the miners, then it seems to me we ought to protect our shores from importations of oil from foreign countries. We will create more opportunity for labor per dollar expended in that way than in any other way I know of by the Commission.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Would it not also help the miners and help relieve distress in the bituminous-coal industry if we could get the New Deal out of subsidizing the hydroelectric business?

Mr. RICH. I will admit that the increasing rate at which we are going into hydroelectric power will put thousands and thousands of men out of jobs; there is no mistake about that. It is a New Deal hobby, and a job-wrecking procedure, and a Government-in-business New Deal philosophy.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Is it not unfair to the coal miners, who contributed $500,000 through Lewis to the New Deal, to have the New Deal lower the tariff on imported and competing oil and also put the Government in the electrical business, thus destroying the coal miners' jobs forever and ever?

Mr. RICH. I believe the gentleman is about right. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, coming as I do from central Pennsylvania, where we have bituminous-coal fields, I would consider myself guilty of neglect if I did not stand here and convey to my fellow Members the fact that we in central Pennsylvania depend upon bituminous coal for a living. During the past year the coal miners of my district have felt the effect of Government subsidies and substitutes for coal as fuel. As a result, thousands of miners are unemployed, to such an extent that 40 percent of the population of one of the counties in my district have been forced to go on relief.

We in the Twenty-third District look upon the Bituminous Coal Commission as an agency of the Government which is studying this whole question with a view to eliminating cutthroat competition, to stabilize the coal industry and put it back on its feet so jobs may be restored to the unemployed miners. We believe the Bituminous Coal Commission should be given an opportunity to complete its study. At the conclusion of its effort, after a report has been submitted to Congress, then will be the time to decide whether or not the Bituminous Coal Commission shall continue to function.

Mr. HAWKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. VAN ZANDT. I yield to the gentleman from

Mr. HAWKS. Has not the Congress already enough information to know that all these Government-subsidized outfits are ruining the industry? The Commission does not have to tell us.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. That is true. The coal industry is suffering as a consequence of Government-subsidized competition. Now, however, the Government has an opportunity to aid the coal industry through this study of the Bituminous Coal Commission. Opinion among the miners, producers, and consumers is divided as to whether the findings of the Commission actually will aid the coal industry, but the Commission certainly should be allowed to complete its efforts in that direction.

If Congress should lop off $900,000 from the $2,900,000 provided for the Commission, it would cripple the Commission and probably nullify the effectiveness of its final efforts. That is false economy, not real economy.

After the Bituminous Coal Commission has made its report, which is scheduled for June 1, we then can judge the value of this agency. The Commission already has been hampered in its work by a series of Supreme Court decisions and we should not place more obstacles in its way.

The condition of the coal miners of my district is desperate and if this Commission offers a possibility of helping them, I believe we should give it every opportunity to do so. I stand before you today to plead the cause of the miners in my district and to ask for the full appropriation for the Coal Commission. A vote against the pending amendment is a vote for something that may help the coal miners. I say they are entitled to any aid we can give them.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. NORRELL. Mr. Chairman, I cannot let this opportunity pass by without getting the record straight with reference to my stand upon this amendment.

The Congress, whether it knew it or not, when it passed this bill, did follow in the footsteps of every coal-producing country on the earth. Practically all coal-producing countries have had to pass some similar legislation. You did this in trying to solve the problem of the coal industry at a time when that industry was prostrate.

Now, Mr. Chairman, with these things in mind, may I say that the Coal Commission has not acted because of the fact it has not had an opportunity to act. The decision that removed the last obstacle placed in its path was rendered by the Supreme Court of the United States in January of this year. The last obstacle has been removed and the Commission is now ready to proceed, and I predict that if you permit it to proceed, you will find it is going to do the job.

Mr. Chairman, it will expire automatically soon enough. I say to you that the people who are opposing this Commission are not opposing it because the law is unworkable, they are opposing it because the law is workable, and they know that now there is no other obstacle that can be put in the path of the Commission.

Mr. Chairman, I may not have contributed anything to the cause, but I say to you that if you are going to adopt this amendment, you ought to abolish the Commission. You ought to give it a chance to do something or you simply ought to be statesmen enough to come in here and pass a bill abolishing the Commission.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NORRELL. With the very greatest pleasure, sir.

Mr. RICH. Do you know that we have now over 1,337 employees in the Bituminous Coal Commission and one of them is a German who is not naturalized? We have too many employees up there now.

Mr. NORRELL. That question is not germane to the issue. [Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LEWIS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this amendment because it will tie the hands of the National Bituminous Coal Commission and prevent the Commission from accomplishing the purpose for which it was createdthat is, the salvation of the coal industry. It is generally admitted that the fixing of prices for coal is one of the chief means by which it is hoped this salvation will be accomplished. Millions have been spent by the Commission in exhaustive investigations in preparation for a general fixing of coal prices. The Commission will very shortly announce the schedule of prices. If its hands are tied now by this amendment, not only will the millions that have been heretofore appropriated for and spent by the Commission be lost, but the chance to relieve the distress of this great industry, to revive it, and to give steady employment to the tens of thousands of coal miners will be lost. I ask you to vote against the amendment.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Chairman, in concluding this argument, I may say that I approach this subject absolutely openminded and absolutely free from any personal interest. My congressional district and my section of the State of Washington produce not a single pound of coal. We do have hydroelectric energy in prospect and some in production. I am not going to be distracted by getting into a controversy between coal and hydroelectric energy, but I do think we should look at this impartially and decide it squarely upon the case as it is made here. The committee gave it the best consideration it could, considering the limited time at our disposal, and I am frank to say to you had the Coal Commission appeared before our committee that had this matter up for consideration a week later, or had the decision of the Supreme Court been rendered a week earlier, the full amount of $3,500,000 would have been in this bill, because they would have made out a complete justification.

The facts are that the Coal Commission, whatever its faults may be-and I grant that their staff was far from perfect—is a new creature. It is not for us here to attempt to say that the creation of the Coal Commission was wise or foolish, the fact remains that this Congress brought it into being. The coal people apparently wanted it, and soon after it came into existence it issued an order fixing coal prices in various sections of the United States. This order was taken to the Supreme Court of the United States and the entire work of the Commission was undone on a question of procedure. Then attempting to proceed in conformity with the ruling of the Supreme Court, they again have gathered statistics and other material facts, and in so doing sent an order to every coal producer in America, 15,000 of them, with instructions to give cost production. The coal producers gave them this information. Then they took into consideration the second problem they have, which is the cost in a particular community and the type and character of coal there produced. This was a colossal undertaking. This work has been accomplished.

Then they started on the third step, and that is where they are now in their activities. This work is that of actually fixing prices after public hearings; but when they announced they would hold public hearings in order to conform with adjudicated procedure coal producers, several in number—and this is the litigation I want to refer to, decided on the 30th of January of this year—announced they would not permit the Commission to allow the confidential information they gave them on cost-production to be used in any public hearings. These producers brought injunction proceedings, went through every one of the courts, and finally the Supreme Court held, on January 30 of this year, that the injunction was ill-advised and that the Commission can now proceed for the first time in the matter of fixing prices.

You are now in this position: Either say—and do not say it in an appropriation measure, but say it boldly, as we should under the Constitution in a legislative measure—that we are going to strike this piece of legislation off the statute books, but do not take the unfair and what seems to munjust position of cutting appropriations so that you starve the Commission with their work now almost completed. Allow them money to proceed. [Applause.]

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. LEAVY. Yes; I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SNYDER. Is it not true that for 50 years the cutthroat business in the coal industry, bituminous as well as anthracite, almost ruined not only the operators but the miners as well, and now is the most inopportune time of all to refuse to give this Commission an opportunity to function.

Mr. LEAVY. I think it would be a calamity to try to starve them to death. Whatever the troubles in the great coal industry may be, certainly we would only add to that grief were we now to vote to deprive this great agency from at least being permitted to carry through with its gigantic efforts of 2 years, since it came into being. It appears that at least 95 percent of the operators and miners have faith that this Commission will help them. The Supreme Court of the United States has upheld the work of Congress in enacting this law, and we are just on the threshhold of proving what can be done.

Even though some Members of the coal regions have been severe and unreasonable about hydroelectric power that means so much in my region, I would not stoop to the level where my judgment rested upon either partisanship or personality

Mr. RICH. If we had given them $500,000 each year for the last 3 years, we would have accomplished a great deal more for the coal industry than by having spent $9,000,000.

Mr. LEAVY. Oh, last year was the first time we had them before us. We gave them $3,250,000. Now that all of the underbrush has been cleared out of the way and procedure made plain to them and the industry with its 15,000 operators waiting for the green signal, why try to starve them to death? [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Allen of Pennsylvania) there were—ayes 80, noes 99.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read through the item for the Bonneville project.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of submitting a unanimous-consent request: That the next two items—that is, the Bonneville project and the United States Housing Authority—go over until tomorrow, so that we might proceed tonight with one or two other items.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma intend to include the paragraph on the United States Housing Authority?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Yes. I suggest, however, that it be read.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to object. What is the purpose? How long will we run tonight?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Not much longer. Just until about 5 o'clock.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to object. If we read these other paragraphs, would it not be possible to prevent separate consideration for amendment tomorrow under the 5-minute rule? I would be willing to let them go on along and be read, provided we can be protected in that respect so that the paragraphs may be considered separately tomorrow under the 5-minute rule.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the modified request, as he understands it. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that the paragraphs relating to the Bonneville project and the United States Housing Authority be passed over at this time, and that the Clerk read, beginning with the item under "The General Land Office," and that we return to these paragraphs tomorrow for debate under the 5-minute rule.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Binding records: For personal services in the District of Columbia, purchase and maintenance of equipment, and all other expenses requisite for and incidental to the establishment, operation, and maintenance of a branch of the Government Printing Office in the Interior Building, to bind, rebind, and repair books of record in the General Land Office, to be expended under the supervision of the Public Printer, $10,000.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do this to inform the Committee of the cost of binding the records for the departments. The enormous cost of it was brought out before the committee, and the complaint made by the various departments of the Government when they go to the Printing Office and ask for prices for rebinding. It seems to me that the Government Printing Office-and I am a member of the Joint Committee on Printing-should take some recognition of the fact that the various departments of the Government complain of their enormous costs, and I hope the Joint Committee on Printing and the Government Printing Office will see wherein they are not in line in price with other printing and binding submitted by printing plants throughout the country. The enormous cost has come to be a burden to the departments, so far as the Printing Office is concerned, and there seems to be something rotten in Denmark, and we ought to try to correct it. Whose fault is it? It seems to me that an investigation of costs should be analyzed by the Joint Committee on Printing to see why the departments of the Government so strenuously object to high cost of the Government Printing Office.

The Clerk read as follows:

Surveying public lands: For surveys and resurveys of public lands, examination of surveys heretofore made and reported to be defective or fraudulent, inspecting mineral deposits, coal fields, and timber districts, making fragmentary surveys, and such other surveys or examinations as may be required for identification of lands for purposes of evidence in any suit or proceeding in behalf of the United States, under the supervision of the Commissioner of the General Land Office and direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $1,000,000, including not to exceed $5,000 for the purchase, exchange, operation, and maintenance of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles: Provided, That not to exceed $5,000 of this appropriation may be expended for salaries of employees of the field surveying service temporarily detailed to the General Land Office: Provided further, That not to exceed $10,000 of this appropriation may be used for the survey, classification, and sale of the lands and timber of the so-called Oregon & California Raliroad lands and the Coos Bay Wagon Road lands: Provided further, That this appropriation may be expended for surveys made under the supervision of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, but when expended for surveys that would not otherwise be chargeable hereto it shall be reimbursed from the applicable appropriation, fund, or special deposit.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order Surveying public lands: For surveys and resurveys of public

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. DITTER. I direct the attention of the Chair to such part of the paragraph on page 17, beginning in line 11, reading as follows:

Provided further, That not to exceed $10,000 of this appropriation may be used for the survey, classification, and sale of the lands and timber of the so-called Oregon & California Railroad lands and the Coos Bay Wagon Road lands.

I make the point of order that that is legislation on an appropriation bill, and therefore I make a point of order against the entire paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, this appropriation is undoubtedly authorized under title 43, paragraph 2. which I shall read:

The Commissioner of the General Land Office shall perform, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, all executive duties appertaining to the surveying and sale of public lands of the United States, or in any wise respecting such public lands, and also such as relate to private claims of land and the issuing of patents for all grants under the authority of the Government-

And so forth. I submit this provision simply limits the amount that may be used for this purpose.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. I call the attention of the gentleman from Oklahoma and also the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER] to the fact that the language contained in this appropriation bill is the same language that is contained in the Oregon and California land-grant bill of the Seventy-fifth Congress, and that the appropriation could be written in no other way.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Rich: On page 17, line 6, strike out "$1,000,000" and insert "$500,000."

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, we are spending a million dollars a year for the surveying of public lands. Heretofore $500,000 was a great sum for that purpose. Five hundred thousand dollars today is a great sum for the purpose of surveying public lands. If you will look over the records of lands that have been surveyed, you will find that 2 or 3 years afterwards the markers that have been placed have been changed and the lands had to be resurveyed. Now we are going to find ourselves in the condition, in about 4 or 5 years, after the expenditure of a million dollars a year for surveying public lands, we will have to do the work over again that were previously surveyed. The markers will be disturbed and the lands will be required by the Department to have additional surveys made. A waste of public funds.

I think we are going too fast on this project and we ought to save $500,000 a year in the surveying of public lands. No one will lose and all will profit.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to my colleague from New York. Mr. FITZPATRICK. Is it not a fact that the Land Department is one department of the Government that turns more money into the United States than they spend?

Mr. RICH. All I have heard today from that side of the aisle is about money that this department and that department is returning to the Treasury because of the work they have been doing. If they have been spending at the rate of $2,000,000,000 a year faster than they are getting it in, Mr. Chairman, I ask you where in the name of common sense is the money coming from that these men on that side of the aisle have been talking about?

Mr. Chairman, tell me where and why we are $20,000,-000,000 in the red? Why, it is just the most ridiculous and absurd thing that I could imagine to make such statements. All they talk about is receiving money into the Treasury. Show me where it is. I have been looking for it for 6 years of New Deal spending—it is not in the Federal Treasury.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. In the hearings did not Commissioner Johnson so testify, that they turned in so many hundred thousand dollars to the Treasury of the United States from the land office, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania complimented him on turning in that money.

Mr. RICH. I could not help complimenting anybody that turns in any money to the Federal Treasury, Mr. Chairman. [Laughter and applause.] But when I look at this sad-looking statement of the Federal Treasury, and I see where they have gone $2,396,000,000 in the red since the first of July, it causes me to weep. How those Members on that side can get up and say we are getting in money when we have gone in the red in the last 6 years $20,000,000,000 is beyond me. It is a shame. It is a bad, bad shame that we have to resort to such tactics, as to say we are getting money to balance the Budget when we are wrecking the Treasury. Mr. Chairman, some of these days they will all be sad over there. Their children and their children's children will be sad, and we will be the ones who are ruined, because we were trying to ruin this Nation. Let us try to economize to the tune of $500,000. [Applause.]

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield.

Mr. DITTER. Does the gentleman feel that the interest of the Interior Department would best be served if the Committee do rise at this time?

Mr. RICH. I think the best interest of the Interior Department, the best interest of the Government, and the best interest of everything would be served if we would go home at once. [Laughter and applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, in order that the gentleman from Pennsylvania may not have to weep too much on our shoulders, and in keeping with the previous agreement, I now move that the Committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Buck, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 4852, the Interior Department appropriation bill, 1940, had come to no resolution thereon.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. Bender asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. SECCOMBE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an address by the Honorable Felix Hinkle, of Canton, Ohio.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. I ask the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON] if it is the intention of the majority to proceed with the Interior bill tomorrow, or do we have something else?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I may say to the gentleman from New York that after Calendar Wednesday business has been disposed of-and I understand there is just one bill from the Committee on the Judiciary to be considered-we will continue with the Interior Department appropriation bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, if the gentle-man from New York will yield, does the gentleman from Oklahoma know what the judiciary bill is?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I have not that information. I understand, however, it will not take very long.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is advised, for the information of the gentleman from Massachusetts, that it is the so-called pocket-veto bill.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL, 1940

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members who have spoken on the Interior Department bill may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their own remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the House of the following titles, which were thereupon signed by the Speaker:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 15, 1939

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Lord God of heaven and earth, we praise Thee for Him who revealed the divine fatherhood of man. As we remember that He is the humanized heart of the Infinite One, may we banish fear, defeat, and despair. We pray that we may be tireless in leading others to be more courageous, more hopeful, and more joyous; may we know that the great failure of life is self-surrender. As Thou dost require us to be true and faithful, clothe us with the vestments of justice and consecrated activity. Heavenly Father, in a world of partial glimpses and broken lights, guard us against the blind forces that would destroy the foundations of democracy. May we be inspired with the radiant visions of the ideal in government and with zealous yearning for all that is fair, lovely, and of good report. We pray for our President, our Speaker, and the Congress that the affairs of state may be administered wisely and that the bonds of peace and cooperation may grow stronger between us and the peoples of all lands. Through Christ our Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on the bill H. R. 3840. and to include a speech of the president of the Army and Navy Bandmasters' Association, and the resolution thereon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SHANLEY]?

There was no objection.

Mr. EATON of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and to revise and extend my own remarks by inserting at this point a brief statement by the faculty of the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. EATON]?

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object. let me say to the gentleman from New Jersey that I have already inserted that statement in the RECORD.

Mr. EATON of New Jersey. Is it in the Appendix?

Mr. RANKIN. It is a statement made by Dr. Sampey?

Mr. EATON of New Jersey. Yes. Mr. RANKIN. It went in the body of the RECORD.

Mr. EATON of New Jersey. I am delighted to know that. I am in sympathy with the gentleman from Mississippi in his effort to try to keep the United States Government from interfering with religious liberty in this country.

Mr. RANKIN. That is exactly what I am trying to do.

Religious liberty in this country must be preserved.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] object to the request?

Mr. RANKIN. No. I was explaining to the gentleman from New Jersey that I had already inserted the statement in the RECORD.

Mr. EATON of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I think it would be a good thing to put it in again as coming from New Jersey.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, if it is in there once, I am going to object. Once is enough.

Mr. EATON of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I am sorry the gentleman objects, because I would like to have a doublebarrelled shot at this attempt to have the Government interfere with the churches of the country.

Mr. RANKIN. I wonder if the gentleman from Pennsylvania has read the statement?

Mr. RICH. Anything that has been put in the RECORD once during the last 2 or 3 weeks is enough, and I object.

Mr. VREELAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a resolution by the Assembly of the State of New Jersey.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. VREELAND]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. Rogers]?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, 20 years ago today, on March 15, 1919, in the Cirque de Paris, in Paris, France, a caucus of veterans of the World War was held and the American Legion was born.

I feel that it is most fitting that we should take note of this anniversary and pay our tribute to this great organization made up as it is of nearly 1,000,000 American veterans of the World War.

Since that caucus of 20 years ago the American Legion has become a bulwark of strength in every endeavor toward a better and stronger America. As was natural, the Legion's first concern was the care of the disabled and the rehabilitation of the demobilized war veterans. From the start every form of service was given to the veterans by the Legion through a National Service Bureau, which operated through a system of State service bureaus and down to the workers in the individual posts. Thousands of men today owe their present stability to the care given their cases by the American Legion in the early days after the war. As an organization it has always been foremost in the fight to obtain justice for disabled veterans, in securing adequate hospital care, and the proper adjudication of their claims.

As a member of the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation since 1925, and long before that while working at Walter Reed Hospital and other hospitals of the country, I have had an opportunity to see the constructive suggestions and accomplishments of the Legion Legislative Bureau. Every member of that committee knows how thorough and how conscientious are the American Legion representatives in presenting facts in support of legislation. Col. John Thomas Taylor and Capt. Watson Miller have devoted all of their time since the armistice to this important work. It has been most helpful in working out our program for the relief of World War veterans.

It has also been my good fortune to have been in a position to observe and appreciate the fine work the American Legion representatives have done in presenting the claims of individual veterans to the Veterans' Administration. Some idea of the magnitude of this task—which is done without a cent of cost to the veterans—may be gained from figures taken from the report to the 1938 Los Angeles convention. It shows receipt of 102,617 letters; preparation and distribution of 138,488 letters; interviews with more than 24,793 persons; review of more than 32,172 claims; presentation of thousands of appeal cases; 615 visits to hospitals for conferences; securing for veterans and their dependents the sum of $3,032,919.05 in recoveries of various types.

One of the first committees set up by the American Legion was its Americanism commission. This organization has been most active in combating anti-American tendencies, the education and Americanization of newly created citizens, and in spreading the ideals of true Americanism. Every one of us know of the great success attained along these lines.

In speaking of the accomplishments of the American Legion in its 20 years of existence, great credit should be given to the American Legion Auxiliary. At the present time this auxiliary has almost a half million members. It has been especially active in the fields of child welfare, rehabilitation of disabled veterans, community service, disaster relief activities, national defense, and world peace. It has made a most notable contribution to accident prevention and safety on our highways.

In the troubled times through which the world is now passing it is most reassuring to realize that we have an organization of this kind, an organization with the highest of American ideals, standing ready to throw its weight behind any effort for the well-being and maintenance of our country. To any person in this country who has aspirations to be a dictator, or who leans toward communism or has any subversive tendency, I commend a careful reading and close study of the preamble of the Constitution of the American Legion. For so long a time as 1,000,000 American World War veterans subscribe to the ideals contained in that preamble, our country is safe. I would like to read it here. It so typifies what the American Legion means and will continue to mean in the future to all of us:

For God and country we associate ourselves together for the following purposes: To uphold and defend the Constitution of the United States of America; to maintain law and order; to foster and perpetuate a 100-percent Americanism; to preserve the memories and incidents of our association in the Great War; to inculcate a sense of individual obligation to the community, State, and Nation; to combat the autocracy of both the classes and the masses; to make right the master of might; to promote peace and good will on earth; to safeguard and transmit to posterity the principles of justice, freedom, and democracy; to consecrate and sanctify our comradeship by our devotion to mutual helpfulness.

[Applause.]

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

The SPEAKER. Today is Calendar Wednesday. The Clerk will call the committees, REPEAL CERTAIN ACTS OF CONGRESS

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas (when the Committee on the Judiciary was called). Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the Judiciary, I call up the bill (H. R. 3233) to repeal certain acts of Congress. I wonder if we may have some arrangement by which we could save some time by considering the bill in the Committee of the Whole instead of in the House? I would not feel justified in asking the Members to pass this bill with an explanation of, say, 5 minutes, but if I could have 15 minutes by unanimous consent I think it would be sufficient.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the bill he calls up shall be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. The gentleman under that agreement asks unanimous consent to proceed for 15 minutes. Is there objection?

ceed for 15 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I do not see the members of the Judiciary Committee present. I wonder if the gentleman would not go ahead with his 15-minute address, and by that time the ranking Republican will be on the floor. I presume there will be no objection to the gentleman's request. There is no objection as far as I know.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I may say I should be very pleased to do that. At the moment the committee is engaged in a rather important matter. The members will be here in a very few minutes, I assume. This bill has the unanimous support of the committee and there is no objection to it. I am just trying to save the time of the House, that is all.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I am not trying to avoid that, but I should like to have my ranking Member here if I can.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I would, too. We do business that way.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I would suggest the gentleman make his address and submit his request later.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to proceed for 15 minutes on the bill he has called up. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, this is an unusual bill. It will take only a moment to read the bill, so I shall read it:

That all laws which resulted from bills and joint resolutions which, prior to the beginning of the Seventy-sixth Congress, were presented to the President less than 10 calendar days (Sundays excepted) prior to an adjournment (other than a final adjournment at the end of a Congress) of the House of Congress in which the same originated, and were pocket vetoed by him, are hereby repealed as of the date of their enactment.

The purpose of this bill is to get out of the picture and out of question all pocket-vetoed bills. There is a difference of opinion among lawyers, and a difference of opinion, I believe I may say, among members of the Supreme Court, with reference to at least some aspects of the pocket-veto power which has been exercised by the President of the United States since the organization of the Government.

The Committee on the Judiciary, may I say with all respect, has never believed this power obtains. I do not mean to say they have never believed it, but certainly not since our examination of the question.

The matter was considered in the Supreme Court in 1929 in what is known as the Pocket Veto case. A representative of the Committee on the Judiciary appeared as a friend of the Court and insisted that there could be constructive delivery of a pocket-vetoed bill at any time prior to the termination of the last session of a Congress. The Court did not agree with our views. Last year, in the Wright case (302 U. S. 583), the Court held there could be constructive delivery of a pocket-vetoed bill during a session of the Congress while the House of origin was not in session.

May I make this explanation—and it is a very interesting one—to you who have been studying the development of our system of government. The practice of the pocket veto grew, curiously enough, out of a failure on the part of the early Congresses to distinguish the constitutiona! difference between the Parliament, called into existence by the summons of the King and dissolved by being prorogued by the King, and a Congress called into existence by our Constitution and dissolved at the limit of its existence as fixed in the Constitution. There were many members of the Constitutional Convention in these first Congresses. This is one of many facts which tend to establish that that Convention did not create the Constitution. It was the product of the centuries. The constitution on the other side was as much our Constitution as it was the constitution of the people on that side of the ocean, so when we wrote our Constitution, in the main we wrote into the written Constitution the provisions of our old Constitution, the provisions around which the battles of the Revolution were fought. We did not revolt and fight to get a constitution. We territorially seceded and fought to keep a constitution. I do not mean to go too far back. However, if you will examine it you will find it a matter of not only very curious interest but important interest.

At any rate, during the first 29 years of our congressional operation we reintroduced all our undisposed-of bills at the beginning of the second session under the belief that the termination of the first session terminated the bills. This was true in Great Britain for the reason I have stated. It was not true in this country for the reason I have stated.

After we had been operating about 29 years evidently Members of Congress began to inquire into the matter, and they arrived at the conclusion that we did not have to introduce our bills at the beginning of the second session because neither the adjournment or intervening time between the first and second sessions did anything to pending legislation. It was not until about 1848, however, that the arrangement was completed under which we now operate, namely, that everything remains in statu quo between the sessions except those bills not opposed by the President and therefore requiring a second consideration by the Houses of Congress.

During the period of our governmental operation up to 1929 there were 119 pocket-vetoed bills which, in many, at least, would be affected by the proposed legislation. One of the difficulties encountered in submitting this question to the Supreme Court in 1929 was these 119 bills as laws, whichever they were, which a determination favorable to our position in theory, at least, would vitalize. There was also the further embarrassment that neither the House nor the Senate had designated an agent to receive those objected-to bills.

The last decision, to which I have referred, the one last year, presents a very interesting situation, or rather, develops an interesting situation, because Mr. Chief Justice Hughes, in writing the majority opinion, held clearly that there can be constructive delivery to the House of origin when that House is not in session either at the time of delivery to the agent of that House or at any time prior to the expiration of the 10 days allowed the President in which to return objected-to bills. I shall state the facts in that case as briefly as I can.

Instead of being returned to the Senate in session the bill was returned by messenger from the President to the Secretary of the Senate and was not delivered by the Secretary of the Senate to the Senate until the expiration of the 10 days provided in the Constitution for the return of bills. The Chief Justice and a majority of the Court held that to be constitutional delivery. So that is the picture. I have not attempted, as you readily will appreciate, to give all the details that make up the picture, but you can fill them in.

The Committee on the Judiciary, as I say, has never believed there is any constitutional reason why unfinished business of the legislative branches of the Government which is unfinished merely because of the necessity to take a second vote, which arises out of the fact the President has submitted objections to the legislation, should not remain in status quo as all other unfinished business does. In other words, it is our position—and I say this with all respect to the Court—that these bills are merely unfinished business retain the same vitality that all other unfinished business retains until the end of the Congress which initiates it. We realize we did not do our full duty in removing unnecessary questions of public policy and dangers of confusion before the 1929 adjudication. We do not presume to guess whether the Supreme Court will ever consider this pocket-veto matter again or not, but this bill will clarify the situation if there should be another consideration.

We know that when we come back at the beginning of a second session we find everything to have remained exactly in status quo except these pocket-vetoed bills, which only require a second vote. The interim between the two sessions of Congress does not at all affect the vitality or the status of any unfinished legislation. No human being looking in upon the first day of a second session, insofar as our relationship toward legislation is concerned, could discover anything to indicate we had been in adjournment more than the intervening night between 2 days. The Supreme Court has now held that there can be constructive delivery during a session. Anyway, we would like to get the question of what would happen if the Supreme Court should continue in the direction in which it has started and should remove this one single exception to the fact that unfinished legislation remains exactly in status quo until the end of the Congress. We would like to get these bills out of the way, and the bill I have just read to you we are certain would get those pocketvetoed bills out of the way and would remove any complica-

This is about all I want to say about the bill; but as a matter of interest to those of you who are students of government and of the facts with regard to our own Government, it may be interesting, and it is certainly instructive, to note that during this same period to which I have referred, the first year of our independent Government, when we were following the British precedents, having none of our own, the practice of considering, under the American constitutional system, that an impeachment is a criminal prosecution also grew up. I take some little pride in the fact that the Committee on the Judiciary, during the period I have been connected with it, have finally convinced, I believe, the Members of Congress and the bar and, I believe, the bench, that under the American constitutional system impeachment is an ouster suit and not a criminal action. Thus we have two important governmental practices which may be definitely traced to the following, in the first instance, of British precedents which, because of fundamental differences, were without rational applicability. Now, unless someone would like to ask me some questions-

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. I agree with the gentleman thoroughly on his proposition to clarify the situation by the passage of a measure of this kind, but I am wondering whether or not the passage of this measure would in any way commit us to the proposition that the President has a right to pocket-veto a bill at the adjournment of a midterm session.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. We think not. If my friend will read the provisions of the bill—

Mr. RANKIN. I have not read the bill, I will say to the gentleman, frankly.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. What we do is this: We just say we do not believe there are any, but if there are any we are getting rid of them.

Mr. RANKIN. I agree with the gentleman that the matter ought to be clarified, because I can understand the confusion it would bring about if the Supreme Court were to decide that these vetoes are invalid, which I think they are; but I do not want to be committed to the proposition that the President has a right to pocket-veto a bill on the adjournment of a midterm session so long as the same Congress is still alive. For instance, in the Seventy-sixth Congress, if we were to adjourn today with a bill on the President's desk, I do not believe the President would have a right to pocket-veto that bill so we could not vote on the veto when we come back at the next session of the same Congress.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. May I say to the gentleman, in order to make it perfectly clear, this is a part of the position which the Committee on the Judiciary has held for 15 years at least, and has no relationship to the present political

Mr. RANKIN. This question never did arise until within the last 15 or 20 years.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes, it did; but not in as direct a situation as we have it now.

Mr. RANKIN. The first time this question arose that I remember anything about, I think, was during President Coolidge's administration, when a bill was pocket-vetoed at a midterm adjournment. I took the position then he did not have the right to do it, and I think if the Supreme Court were to pass on it now it would probably hold that the bill became a law.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. MOTT. Is it the purpose of the gentleman's bill to raise a constitutional question which the Court may decide, or merely to get rid of these pocket-vetoed bills?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. The purpose of this bill is to eliminate any embarrassment which might result from the possibility of reviving bills which have long since been considered as dead, and to make it possible for the Court to consider the issue de novo, I may say, without any embarrassment as to contingent consequences.

Mr. MOTT. Is the question now before the Court in a suit? Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. No; we are trying to clear the way if it comes back up there.

Mr. MOTT. Is this bill a part of the program of the gentleman's committee to get this question before the courts at some future time?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I would not like to say that, but it is part of our program that if the question does come up the Court will be able to face it without the embarrassment I have referred to. I think it is a duty that the House of Representatives owes to clear the slate before the question reaches the Court again.

Mr. MOTT. And the gentleman thinks the repeal of these bills would be advantageous to the contention of the committee that the President had no right to pocket-veto a bill.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I would not like to state that we introduced this bill to try to influence a decision of the Court. We have introduced this bill for the purpose of clearing the slate. Here we have 114 bills that have been pocketvetoed. We owe it to the Court, if we believe that that power could never have been constitutionally exercised, and we owe it to the country to remove any possible confusion if the Court should decide the other way.

Mr. MOTT. I know the gentleman has made great study of the matter, but could not that be better presented and could not our position be made even more clear if we would take one of these pocket-vetoed bills and proceed to pass it over the President's veto?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. No.

Mr. MOTT. Would not that bring the matter into better light?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. No.

Mr. RANKIN. It is too late now, because another Congress has intervened.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all laws which resulted from bills and joint resolutions which, prior to the beginning of the Seventy-sixth Congress, were presented to the President less than 10 calendar days (Sundays excepted) prior to an adjournment (other than a final adjournment at the end of a Congress) of the House of Congress in which the same originated, and were pocket-vetoed by him, are hereby repealed as of the date of their enactment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ELECTION CONTEST-SMITH VERSUS POLK

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the Clerk, which was read:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

March 15, 1939.

The SPEAKER

The SPEAKER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.
SR: I have the honor to inform the House of Representatives that in the Sixth Congressional District of the State of Ohio at the election held November 8, 1938, Hon. James G. Polk was certified as having been duly elected as Representative in the Seventy-sixth Congress and his certificate of election in due form of law was called in the effect. sixth Congress and his certificate of election in due form of law was filed in this office. His right to the seat was questioned by another candidate, Hon. Emory F. Smith, who served notice upon the returned Member of his purpose to contest the election. During the time allowed by law for the taking of testimony, the Clerk of the House received a letter dated March 4, 1939, by the contestant, Emory F. Smith, withdrawing the contest and asking that it be dismissed. This notice of withdrawal will be transmitted to the Committee on Elections to which this case shall be referred.

Yours respectfully,

South Trimble,

Clerk of the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. The communication, together with the accompanying papers, is referred to the Committee on Elections No. 3, and ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL DEFENSE

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, if anything were still needed to emphasize the wisdom of our defense program, yesterday's events in Europe more than supplied us. Whether we like it or not, it is obvious that we are living in a world temporarily gone mad. I say "temporarily" hopefully.

I for one cannot look upon what has happened to Czechoslovakia without wishing that it were otherwise. No matter what the objective historians of the future may tell us, those of us who live today know that we are engaged in a struggle in which ideals of freedom, of free press, of free church, and free people are challenged as they have never been challenged in any generation.

Here in America it is our duty to do everything we can to defend the principles for which Czechoslovakia has been destroyed. If the Hitler march toward the east is to reestablish the doctrine that might makes right, we in America must work harder than ever to prove that only justice and tolerance can be the saviors of mankind.

This Congress has taken steps to prepare our Nation for physical resistance to every possible threat which may attack our shores, but there is still another danger against which it is our task also to arm our people-the danger of propaganda. It is our job in the next few years to show the world that a free people can solve its economic problems without surrendering its liberty. It is our job to show the world that we can use the tremendous forces at our disposal to rebuild our American society on a strong and fair basis.

I call upon our Government and this Congress to join in the effort to combat propaganda from every foreign source, be it Nazi, Fascist, or Communist. I call upon the national administration to meet the challenge of dictatorship by reversing its policies and doing everything it can to restore the economic safety of our people by stimulating business confidence through acts as well as words. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks by including a portion of a speech I made recently at the departmental auditorium in Washington, part of a program fostered by the National Forest Service of the Department of the Interior, on the subject of the Territory of Hawaii.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the Delegate from Hawaii?

There was no objection.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks by including an editorial from the Philadelphia Record.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that further business in order under Calendar Wednesday be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered. There was no objection.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL, 1940

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 4852) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 4852, with Mr. Buck in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. When the Committee rose yesterday there was pending an amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, which the Clerk will report for the information of the Committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Rich: On page 17, line 6, strike out "$1,000,000" and insert "$500,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Chairman, after consultation and, I believe, agreement with the gentleman from Ohio-

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Will the gentleman withhold that for a moment?

Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Upon completion of the General Land Office provision, which has just been taken care of, it was my understanding that the Committee was then to return to the question of amendments of the Bonneville Dam

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. That is correct.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. If the gentleman will withhold that for just a moment, I will make a statement, following which that amendment can be presented. Is that agreeable?

Mr. SCRUGHAM. That is agreeable.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, it is my understanding that, rather than continue reading the bill, we are now to act upon the provisions of the bill covering the Bonneville proposition, which were read last night, but held over for amendment today under the 5-minute rule, following which the next order of business is to be the same consideration for the United States Housing Authority.

The CHAIRMAN. It is the understanding of the Chair. and the Chair thinks this is in the interest of orderly procedure, that we will read through the subdivision headed "General Land Office," and then return to the Bonneville project.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. That is entirely agreeable.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Revested Oregon & California Railroad and reconveyed Coos Bay Wagon Road grant lands, Oregon: For carrying out the provisions of title I of the act entitled "An act relating to the revested Oregon & California Railroad and reconveyed Coos Bay Wagon Road grant lands situated in the State of Oregon," approved August 28, 1937 (50 Stat. 874), including fire protection and patrol on these and adjacent and intermingled public lands, through cooperative agreements with Federal, State, and county agencies, or otherwise, and including travel and other necessary expenses, and including not to exceed $5,000 for personal services in the District of Columbia, and not to exceed $2,000 for the purchase, exchange, operation, and maintenance of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, $150,000: Provided, That such expenditures shall be reimbursed from the 25 percent referred to in section c, title II, of the act approved August 28, 1937, of the special fund designated the "Oregon & California land-grant fund."

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Rich: On page 20, line 3, after the ord "vehicle", strike out "$150,000" and insert "$75,000."

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, we are now considering cutting out $75,000 for the Coos Bay Wagon Road grant lands in Oregon and for the purpose of motor-propelled passengercarrying vehicles and lumbering in Oregon and Washington.

I want to say to the Congress that this $75,000 could be very interesting and essential to the Members of the House of Representatives who want to save any money for the Federal Government. I cannot help but call your attention to the fact that since July 1 you have gone in the red $2,406,-197,675. That means $9,473,219 each day. That means $394,717 each hour. That means $6,578.61 a minute since Now, if you men cannot see where we are headed for by giving you these figures, let me call your attention to this: There are 435 Members of the House and 96 Senators. The total salaries that they receive is $533,000. You are going in the red $6,578.61 a minute. Every 82 minutes you go in the red as much as it costs to pay for the salaries of every Member of Congress, and that includes both the Members of the House and the Senate—a deplorable situation for a lot of men who are running this Government. Every 82 minutes you are going in the red as much as it costs the taxpayers of this country to pay your salaries.

Let me present it in another way; let me go one step further: The President of the United States receives a salary of $75,000 a year. Every 11 minutes and 43 seconds you go in the red as much as it costs to pay his salary for a year

If you think what the Congress is doing in the matter of spending money is wise handling of public moneys, you continue in this policy on your own responsibility, for your actions will be weighed and considered by your constituents back home at the next election. I care not whether you be a Republican or a Democrat, do not say I did not warn you, and my warnings are not uttered in any spirit of disparagement or with any feelings of enmity or jealousy; but, Mr. Chairman, just as surely as the sun will rise tomorrow morning we shall have to account to the people back home, and rightfully so, for this extravagance. If you love that American flag, if you love the Constitution of our country, if you have any sense of respect at all for yourselves or for our Nation, then for God's sake do your duty. You cannot continue this way. The day of reckoning will come only too soon, and then you will be held responsible. What are you going to do? Are you going to permit these exorbitant expenses of government to go on, or are you going to begin to economize? I warn you now; do your duty. [Applause.]

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the item to which the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania is directed appears upon the top of page 18 and the bottom of page 17 of the bill. It is an appropriation out of the Oregon and California landgrant fund, and not out of the Treasury of the United States. The purpose of this item is to protect 2,500,000 acres of Government-owned timber, comprising the Oregon and California land grants, from fire; and from this appropriation there is also provided the money for the entire administration of those lands, including surveys, reclassifications, and everything else which is required under existing law for the administration of this great Federal forest upon a sustained-

Mr. Chairman, I am sometimes at a loss to know just how to take my friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH]. Under all usual and ordinary circumstances he is one of the finest, friendliest, most intelligent, and altogether delightful men I know. When he takes his place on the floor of the House and talks on a subject about which he knows something no Member makes a more intelligent, more informative, or more effective speech than the distinguished Member who has just left the floor. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania would confine his remarks to those things which he has really studied, with which he is actually familiar and in connection with which he has acquired some knowledge, no Member would be more effective in debate than he. In fact, upon those subjects I rank him among the foremost debaters

The gentleman from Pennsylvania, unfortunately, however, does not always confine his remarks to those subjects, but instead he sometimes wanders far afield and insists upon talking about something in which he has no real interest, with which he has no familiarity, of which he has made no study, and upon which, consequently, he has no knowledge. Unfortunately this subject is one of them. Upon this subject the gentleman has simply neglected to inform himself.

In the last Congress an act was passed putting the vast Oregon and California timber area, one of the most extensive and valuable in the United States, upon a sustained-yield basis under the direction of the Department of the Interior. Under this bill the forest must be self-sustaining. Not one cent of the cost of its administration and operation comes out of the General Treasury of the United States as a Federal contribution to that cost. Under the act setting up this sustained-yield management system the Department of the Interior is allowed 25 percent of the revenues from the sale of the timber for administration purposes, including fire protection. The revenues from the forest must pay all of the administrative expenses, including fire protection. Before the passage of the new Oregon and California Grant Land Act last session, putting this area upon a sustained-yield basis, the Forest Service did the work of fire protection. They were allowed as an actual contribution from the Treasury each year $80,000 for this purpose alone, and under the former law they had the right to go as much above that figure as might be necessary properly to protect this area from fire.

This great forest, belonging to the people and bringing in an annual revenue to the people, must be properly protected from fire or the people will lose it. Last year, out of a total appropriation or allotment of $125,000 for the administration of these lands, about $80,000 was used for fire protection. It was found that this was not enough, because it is not as much as was spent under the former regime by the Forest Service for fire protection. When Mr. Johnson, the Commissioner of Public Lands, appeared before the committee he gave it as his opinion that $175,000 should be set aside for the Department to use for administrative purposes, including fire protection. The committee cut this amount by $25,000 and the item before us is $150,000.

It will require this much or more properly to administer these lands and to protect them from fire for the next fiscal year. Let me repeat that none of this money so appropriated is really taken from the Treasury. It is appropriated, of course, but it is chargeable to the 25-percent revenue which comes to the Interior Department from the sale of timber, and this entire appropriation is reimbursable from that timbersale fund, so not a single cent comes out of the general tax revenues of the United States. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was rejected. The Clerk read as follows:

Range improvements on public lands outside of grazing districts tange improvements on public lands outside of grazing districts (receipt limitation): For construction, purchase, and maintenance of range improvements on the public lands subject to grazing leases under the provisions of section 15 and pursuant to the provisions of section 10 of the act of June 28, 1934 (48 Stat. 1269), as amended by the act of June 26, 1936 (49 Stat. 1976), $60,000: Provided, That expenditures hereunder shall not exceed 25 percent of all moneys received under the provisions of section 15 of said act during the fiscal years 1939 and 1940.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, may I say to the members of the Committee that I have the very highest respect for the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. Mott], but may I say to him that there is duplication in this $150,000 by having the Interior Department set up an organization in that Department for forestry work, which places the Oregon-Washington timberlands under the jurisdiction of that Department so far as having the timber harvested, and so forth, when there is a Forest Service already set up in the Department of Agriculture. It seems to me most ridiculous to have duplication of effort in these two Departments. The gentleman from Oregon made the statement that I did not know what I was talking about. May I say to him the only way you can ever get some of these things changed in these Government departments is get up here and point out the duplication of Government operation and waste. I am giving the Members of Congress information in an effort to have segregated the duties and do away with duplications in the Government. I want these brought into one body, under one supervision, and under one overhead, so that it can be handled on a sound, economical, and good basis.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. I want to compliment the gentleman for his statement and to say to him that is exactly what we wanted to do last week when we were considering the reorganization bill. It will give the President the opportunity to put 14 agencies handling public lands under control of one. How much did the gentleman help us in that effort?

Mr. RICH. May I say to the gentleman from Missouri the reason I did not vote for that bill was because it was put in the hands of the President. You will never accomplish anything by putting this power in his hands. If you had put the word "Vice" ahead of the word "President," so that it would have read "Vice President," something might have been accomplished. But I guarantee you new dealers that the New Deal head is not going to do anything. He had the power for 2 years to consolidate departments and did nothing but make more departments. He will do the same thing this time, I am afraid. If after 2 years he did not accomplish anything, he will never do anything. He did not do anything, and 2 years is long enough. That is the reason I do not want to give him any more power. [Applause.]

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman found out a minute ago that the Congress will not do anything.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I like the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Rich] very much, but the trouble is he lacks consistency. He said last week he was afraid to put this power in the hands of the President. What is he trying to do now? I ask him that question.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman is asking me?

Mr. BULWINKLE. Yes.

Mr. RICH. I will tell the gentleman. The Democratic platform of 1932 advocated a drastic cut in Government expenditures.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Will the gentleman answer the question?

Mr. RICH. Yes.

Mr. BULWINKLE. What is the gentleman trying to do this week?

Mr. RICH. I am trying to cut down Government expenses. Mr. BULWINKLE. All right.

Mr. RICH. I want the new dealers on that side to realize that they cannot go on and wreck this Nation, which they are trying to do.

Mr. BULWINKLE. The gentleman has not as yet answered the question.

Mr. RICH. If you do not do something, we are going to be wrecked. You on that side will wreck this Nation, and nothing under heaven can stop it.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Is the gentleman through?

Mr. RICH. I am trying to do my duty.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Now, sit down and let me talk a while. Mr. RICH. The gentleman asked me a question.

Mr. BULWINKLE. And the gentleman has not answered the question. He is doing like he always does. He never answers the question.

Mr. RICH. Yes; but you never do anything on that side. The gentleman has voted for everything since he has been here. He has not tried to economize one dollar.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, I do not yield any further. The gentleman shows again he does not know what he is talking about, because when he makes a statement like that it clearly shows he does not know.

The gentleman realizes that last week he had an opportunity to aid in cutting down Government expenses, but the gentleman then saw fit, on account of partisanship, to vote against that proposition. He is now attempting on this bill in a feeble way to embarrass the administration, which he cannot do.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

I want to give the House some information with reference to the history of consolidation. I remember very distinctly many years ago when this same question rose, the then Secretary of the Interior came before the Committee on Territories, of which I was a member, and asked to have these forests transferred to the Department of the Interior. That gentleman's name was Albert B. Fall. Do you remember him? He did not get the national forests, but unfortunately he finally got Teapot Dome. You will remember that also.

I am not raising this question to irritate the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who represents the leadership on the Republican side. I am very fond of him. There is not a man in this House for whose integrity I have a higher regard, although we do not agree on economic questions. Let me tell you where the Republican side is falling down. You have not offered anything in the world of a constructive nature since you have been here. I mean that; I am not criticizing you, you have probably done the best you could. But what is your program? You say we are in bad shape.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Rich], I believe, has offered his only solution, and that is to reduce expenses, when he knows we could not possibly balance the Budget on the present price levels. If you were to force a cut in Government expenses now to where the present revenues would meet expenses, you would almost bring about a revolution in this country.

But there is a remedy; I pointed it out to the gentleman on yesterday and I will point it out to him again today. The remedy is a reasonable controlled expansion of the currency, not through the Federal Reserve System but through the Treasury Department, done by the Congress and the President, as the Constitution provides, so these international bankers who now control the Federal Reserve System cannot have the money retired and bring on another depression.

Mr. BOLLES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. RANKIN. I am sorry, I have only 5 minutes.

You are either going to do that or you are going to keep on until you break into a wild and uncontrolled inflation, such as they had in Germany and such as they had in several other European countries. So I appeal to you Members of Congress, whether you be Democrats or Republicans, to think seriously of this proposition of expanding the currency against the gold reserve we now have to raise commodity prices to their normal level and start business moving, and at the same time enable us to build up the national income to where we can balance the Budget and keep it balanced.

If you have another remedy, I should like to know it. I am looking for one. I am going to be frank with you; I am disturbed, just as every honest American is disturbed today. This is the one remedy I can find, and the only one, in my opinion, that has been suggested that will balance the Budget and restore prosperity to the American people.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I cannot yield.

I repeat what I said on yesterday, you cannot balance the Budget and restore prosperity by cutting down expenses now. We have passed that point. Neither can you restore the prosperity of the American people by borrowing money from the rich and giving it to the poor, for the great masses of the people to pay back with interest in years to come. I appeal to my distinguished friend to concentrate his mental faculties on the question of a reasonable way out of our difficulties. That is what the American people want. They do not care so much whether the Democrats or the Republicans are running this country as they do whether or not prosperity is restored.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. Does not the gentleman believe it would be a wise thing for America to preserve the American market for the American farmers, the American laborers, and the American businessmen, since it is the best market in all the world?

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman now is advocating a high protective tariff, the very thing that brought on all this trouble. A protective tariff is nothing in God's world but a tax on one man for the benefit of another. You robbed the American people during the palmy days when you were in power during the twenties. The tariff took from the American people $4,000,000,000 a year over and above the benefits they derived from it.

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. RANKIN. No; I decline to yield.

What did you do with it? You poured it into the pockets of the beneficiaries of that law, made the rich richer and the poor poorer until the country almost collapsed.

The Clerk read down to and including line 4 on page 21 of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the unanimous-consent agreement entered into on yesterday we now return to page 12.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Are we going to the Bonneville provision now?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has so stated.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. I have an amendment to offer to that paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

BONNEVILLE PROJECT

Bonneville Project

For operation and maintenance of the Bonneville project, Oregon, in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to authorize the completion, maintenance, and operation of the Bonneville project, for navigation, and for other purposes," approved August 20, 1937, including maintenance and operation of transmission lines, communicating systems, and substations, purchase and exchange, maintenance and operation of automobiles, purchase of stationery and office supplies, purchase of equipment and other supplies, rent, traveling expenses, telegraph and telephone expenses, printing and binding, and all other necessary expenses, and including not to exceed $8,200 for personal services in the District of Columbia, $400,000.

For construction, purchase, and improvement of transmission lines, substations, and facilities and structures appurtenant thereto, and the purchase of easements and rights-of-way and improvements thereon, including personal services incident to the foregoing, in carrying out the provisions of an act entitled "An act to authorize the completion, maintenance, and operation of the Bonneville project, for navigation, and for other purposes," approved August 20, 1937, to be immediately available, $13,000,000.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Whrre of Ohio: On page 12, line 25, after the word "available", strike out "$13,000,000" and insert "$6,000,000."

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of making a correction on another section of the bill, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I want to know if the gentleman is going to yield for a question or two?

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. I will yield if I have time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I wonder if we could not agree on 30 minutes of debate on this one item?

The CHAIRMAN. We must first dispose of the unanimous-consent request submitted by the gentleman from Ohio to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I want to know if the gentleman is going to submit to a question?

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. If I have time in my second 5 minutes, I will yield. I shall use the first 5 minutes to correct a situation in which the majority members of the committee are very much interested.

> LXXXIV--175

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 30 minutes.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I object, Mr. Chairman. Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I modify my request and ask that 40 minutes be allowed.

Mr. RICH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, 14 Members are standing.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I should think all of them would not want 5 minutes apiece.

Mr. RICH. How do we know?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Then, Mr. Chairman, I again modify my request and ask that 50 minutes be allowed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that all debate on the paragraph relating to the Bonneville project and all amendments thereto close in 50 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MOTT. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I should like to know how many Members want time to speak on this subject, and also whether in the 50 minutes there will be time to give each Member who wants to speak at least 5 minutes. This question is a very important one to many of us.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. May I ascertain from the Chair how many Members rose? Does the Chair have the names of all Members who rose?

The CHAIRMAN. The Parliamentarian informs me he has the names of 11 Members who rose, including one member of the committee.

Mr. RICH. Reserving the right to object-and I shall object—let us go on for a few moments. Every Member who is standing is one who is interested in this project.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Then, Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be concluded in 1 hour.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, on yesterday I introduced an amendment to the first paragraph of this bill, on page 2, which eliminated an item of expense amounting to $36,740 in the office of the Secretary of the Interior for their Division of Information.

This motion was offered on the basis of the testimony presented in the hearings. I would like to call your attention to page 22 of the hearings on this bill, where it is stated:

Mr. White. How many people are there engaged in that publicity work?

Mr. Burlew. We asked last year for 21 people, many of whom were already in the Interior Department. There was $14,000 in salaries transferred from the regular Interior items to help make out the total which we asked for. That would be $14,000 transferred for seven positions from the Department of the Interior and $36,740 in new positions. That would make a total of 21 positions.

Mr. White. Thirty-six thousand seven hundred and forty dollars transferred.

for new positions?

Mr. Burlew. That is correct. Of course, that includes a supervisor of illustrations; several photographers, in fact, clerks and stenographers and messengers—

And so forth

Then, a little bit further down on the same page you will find where I asked him the question: "A total of how many are engaged in that work now?" And Mr. Burlew said, "21," and then I asked him: "At an expense of approximately $50,000?" And he said: "Yes." And I said: "With a new item of expense of $36,740?" And Mr. Burlew said: "That is right."

So you can see from that testimony that my amendment was based upon the testimony exactly as presented in the

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Not just now; let me complete my statement.

Yesterday afternoon, after the members of this committee saw fit to go along and adopt that amendment, Mr. Burlew called me to say, with commendable frankness, that he had made a mistake. Even though it is not my error, I do not want, if I can help it, the Members of this House to find it necessary to proceed on the basis of incorrect information, no matter who is responsible for it. [Applause.]

I feel that I would not be giving proper recognition to my obligations to you if I did not cite the fact that this error does exist. I would rather have your confidence than any temporary advantage for my amendment under these circumstances. In contrast to the testimony appearing in the hearings, here are the facts: The new appropriation does not call for any new expense in the publicity division of the Department of the Interior. In other words, the expense last year was $50,900, and exactly the same amount is included in the bill this year. Mr. Burlew merely misspoke. Even so, I think some of their publicity activities are excessive. However, that would not justify me in letting you believe that the $36,740 cut out by my amendment was new expense, as was stated by the Department in the hearings, when the corrected information reveals that no new expense was involved.

Now, I have two purposes in mind. One is to correct the testimony of the hearings by stating that the appropriation for the publicity division last year was $50,900 and the same amount was sought in the pending bill. The other purpose is to work out a reasonable reduction based upon the corrected information. I have consulted with the majority members of the Appropriations Committee. We have agreed upon a cut of 10 percent. This amounts to a saving of $5,090 as compared with the amount they actually received last year.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman vield?

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order for 1 minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Utah?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Chairman, in the matter of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WHITE], on page 2, line 6, of the bill, I ask unanimous consent that the amount inserted by said amendment be stricken out and the sum of $549,630 be inserted in lieu thereof.

This is in line with our understanding, I think.

Mr. RICH. I think any time we make a mistake, we ought

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nevada asks unanimous consent that the amount inserted yesterday as an amendment, on page 2, line 6, be stricken out and the amount of $549,630 be inserted in lieu thereof. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. SIROVICH. The gentleman has made a very sincere statement to correct an error. I would like to make this observation: Mr. E. K. Burlew is a distinguished career man who has worked his way from the humblest position up to First Assistant Secretary of the Interior. He is one of the most conscientious, trustworthy, lovable, and indefatigable workers, not only in the Department of the Interior but one of the finest workers that can be found in any agency of the Government of the United States.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. I have been struck very favorably by his conscientious manner in acknowledging this mistake and bringing it to my attention.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we come to the matter of the amendment which has been offered for a cut of $7,000,000 on the project at Bonneville.

I want to discuss this proposal without the tinge of partisanship that is so much in evidence. Secondly, let me repeat my statement of last Friday to the effect that I am not raising the question of whether or not Bonneville and Grand Coulee are wise enterprises. Those projects are already created by law and now it is merely a matter of what appropriations they will receive this year. I am solely raising the question of whether Congress is providing too much money and too fast for its proper use on a sound, economic basis, which takes into consideration the immediate needs of the Bonneville and Grand Coulee area and also the national needs for less Government expense, for reemployment, and for real recovery. If you will join me in the spirit by which I am trying to approach this problem I will try to prove the case I am presenting to you.

It is based on three contentions. First, these projects do duplicate existing lines, notwithstanding everything that has been said on that point. I ask you to merely refer to the maps in the hearings, beginning on page 43. Compare the existing lines with the lines proposed for Bonneville and Grand Coulee when they are completed and judge for yourself.

Second, aside from the matter of duplication, are they getting money too fast for its economical, sound, commonsense use? Here again I ask for your unbiased judgment on the basis of the facts which show that they received $17,000,000 last year. How does that compare with the amount the Bonneville administrators told Congress they needed last year? They asked Congress for $6,000,000. After every consideration Congress concluded that their request was too high. Congress reduced the amount to $3,500,-000. Just the same they threw the opinion of Congress out the window, and likewise their own request for six millions. and they went to P. W. A. and W. P. A., where they got about 14 million more for the year than they told Congress they required. And yet they are back here again this year asking for $13,000,000 more.

In this same connection there is another very important factor. When June 30, 1939, arrives Bonneville will still have an unexpended balance on hand amounting to $3,100,-000-money from the extra windfall last year that has not yet been used. On the same date the unexpended balance for Grand Coulee will amount to $7,000,000. The Department of the Interior is the authority for these figures.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes more.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. O Mr. Chairman, if that is granted I think the same privilege should be granted to others on the other side. I object. I could talk for an hour. I want to reply and I want time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time has been fixed at 1 hour, additional to the time allotted to the gentleman from Ohio. and that time is supposed to be divided between gentlemen on their feet at the time the vote was taken.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I think I am the victim of my own fault in yielding so much time when I began. I would like to discuss the matter for 3 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman may make a request for unanimous consent, if he so desires.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio may be granted 3 additional minutes, not to be taken out of the hour previously allotted.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. I thank the distinguished gentleman from Nevada, who is one of the most able Members of this Congress, for his kindness. I appreciate it very much.

My final point is a comparison between the T. V. A. area and the combined Bonneville and Grand Coulee area. The completed T. V. A. project is designed to produce about 1,400,000 kilowatts of "juice." The population of the area served by T. V. A. is in excess of 13,000,000 people. That gives you an idea of the potentialities of that field for consumption. In contrast, the population of the Bonneville-Grand Coulee area is approximately 2,000,000; and yet these projects call for the production of 1,600,000 kilowatts. By this comparison you can see that Bonneville and Grand Coulee have only one-sixth as much population, and yet they ask enough money under the entire program to furnish a greater amount of power.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has again expired.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I rise in favor of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, yesterday members of both political parties in this House took the floor and admitted that the bituminous-coal industry was in a very bad condition. The pending amendment, if adopted and incorporated into law, will be pretty good medicine to help revive this sick bituminous-coal industry. I call upon you Democratic and Republican Members from coal-producing districts to support the pending amendment. Now is the time to act. The people in your districts expect and are entitled to something besides mere talk and weeping and wailing about the serious condition of the bituminous-coal industry. You cannot serve two masters. You must choose between serving the bituminous-coal interests and Government hydroelectric interests.

Mr. Chairman, I am particularly pleased to find that one of the great New Deal leaders in this House has again confessed this afternoon. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Rankin] told us a few moments ago that the international bankers now control the Federal Reserve System. I agree with the gentleman. I ask him to join with us in breaking the strangle hold of the international bankers, who not only control the Federal Reserve System but control the administrative branch of the Federal Government. The New Deal administration is responsible for this control.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Yes; I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. The international bankers have controlled the Federal Reserve System from the beginning.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Well, I am talking about the present. I am not talking about past history. The gentleman confessed that the international bankers control the Federal Reserve System. A majority of the Federal Reserve Board members are New Deal appointees. So do not try to blame the Republicans for this international bankers control.

I want to call upon the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN]. I observe that he is now sitting on the Republican side of the House. I hope he stays with us and joins with us in breaking the New Deal international banker control of the Federal Reserve System. I also call upon him to help us break the international bankers' control of the administrative branch of the Federal Government, which is headed by none other than an ex-international banker, your New Deal President, President Roosevelt. Mr. Roosevelt, a former director of the International Germanic Trust Co., a former president of the United European Investors, Ltd., a Canadian corporation speculating in German marks during the German inflation, who, with Sir Robert Rowland Appleby, president of the British Empire Chamber of Commerce, was also associated in international banking activities. Mr. Roosevelt was chairman of the organization committee of the Federal International Banking Co., a corporation organized for the selling of foreign securities and bonds to the American people. Sir Robert Rowland Appleby was also a big shot in this corporation. Your Treasury is also controlled by an international banker-minded new dealer, Secretary Morgenthau, who is the son of an international banker, and who married the favorite niece of Lehman brothers, who are among the most prominent international bankers in America.

Barney Baruch, your New Deal unofficial president, is also an international banker.

I welcome the gentleman's presence on the Republican side today, and I hope that he and other Jeffersonian Democrats will join with us and drive the international money changers from the citadels of government in Washington.

Let us have more action and less talk. Let us drive the money changers from the temple of our Government and not into it. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin yields back 1 minute.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Mr. Chairman, you have read in the morning paper of the passing of Bonneville Administrator J. D. Ross, and may, in voting this money, well ask into whose hands this great project may fall. We of the Northwest confidently expect that Mr. Ross' successor will be a competent engineer, experienced in public power development and control. We have within transmission distance of the Bonneville project the two most successful power plants in America, publicly developed and publicly owned. They have been so successfully operated and financed that they have paid off indebtedness rapidly while giving the lowest electric rates in the country. I refer to the plants at Tacoma, Wash., and Eugene, Oreg. Some one of the engineers responsible for such remarkably successful managerial and engineering operations might be willing to serve the country at Bonneville.

Do not for a moment think that Bonneville project will become a political football nor an experiment insofar as administrators are concerned.

J. D. Ross was an ardent, effective, and sincere advocate of public ownership and control of the essential public utilities. As such he made a real contribution to our social welfare.

In reply to our colleague from Ohio, I want to inform him that in the Northwest today we have over 4,000,000 people, instead of 2,000,000, within the boundaries of the Bonneville transmission, the fastest growing section of the United States. There is no question about the power being taken up and the market for it. As I have repeatedly stated in this House, the use of electric power depends upon the price. With the price at seventeen and one-half dollars per kilowatt-year, as fixed by the Bonneville administration, that power will all be taken up as quickly as we can deliver it to the distributors. Is it sensible to build a dam and put in the electrical facilities for generating power and then not build the transmission lines to take the power to market?

The total amount of income from that property when we are able to develop all of it will bring to the Treasury of the United States $7,500,000 a year. The facilities now installed will bring $1,300,000. We cannot sell the electric energy until we build the lines to where the market is.

The whole attempt to defeat this appropriation is in the interests of the private utilities that want to control that market. Will there be duplication of lines? No. There is scarcely a mile of duplication in that line which we are now building, the 220,000-volt lines and the 110,000-volt lines, within the Bonneville district. There is a little high voltage between Seattle and Skagit, but nowhere that Bonneville can use it. Even day before yesterday the Bonneville administration bought a line with steel towers, 66,000 volts, and they found they could use it by stepping up the voltage to 110 and rebuilding a part of the line. The Bonneville administration purchased the line from a private utility.

Do not cripple our project by cutting the appropriation at this time. The statement is made that all we wanted last year was $3,500,000. We asked for $6,000,000, but we knew we needed double that amount.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio rose.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. I do not yield to the gentleman, not for a word. The gentleman spoke a few days ago and made so many incorrect statements about the Northwest I know he cannot at this time make any contribution of value. I invite the gentleman to come to Oregon and Washington and be my guest so we can show him what we have in the Northwest. I ask unanimous consent to insert as part of my remarks a table of figures on Bonneville costs.

Joint facilities

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. I ask unanimous consent to include in my remarks figures furnished yesterday by one of the engineers of the Bonneville plant showing its cost.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will have to obtain permission in the House for the insertion of any extraneous material.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. Morr] for 5 minutes.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, my friend, the gentleman from Ohio, has spoken with sincere conviction and, apparently, after such study of this subject as he thought it properly required. The fact is, nevertheless, that we find him in a situation very much like that of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, in that in offering an amendment to cut the appropriation for Bonneville in two he has been talking today upon a subject with which he is not sufficiently familiar.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOTT. I yield to my able friend from Ohio.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Does the gentleman contend that after sitting in hearings day in and day out, and studying those hearings, listening to all the testimony, that such a person does not know what he is talking about?

Mr. MOTT. I was about to answer that, judging from my friend's remarks in debate, I was sorry to say that that was my opinion. But I will not say that. I have too great respect for the gentleman's sincerity and his ability. But I will repeat that, in my opinion, and in spite of what study he has made, the gentleman has not sufficiently informed himself upon this subject to warrant his assuming responsibility for an amendment such as he has offered—an amendment which, if adopted, would be disastrous to the Bonneville program and policy, which has already been given the overwhelming approval of the Congress.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Will the gentleman point out any misstatement I made in debate?

Mr. MOTT. I will certainly try to. That is the purpose for which I have taken the floor.

The fact is, Mr. Chairman, that the Bonneville project is unlike any other project in the United States or in the world. It is essentially a navigation project and one of the greatest navigation projects in the world. At Bonneville we have a dam 80 feet high, 150 miles from the sea, on the Columbia River. The bottom of the dam, although 150 miles from the sea, is at tidewater.

There are ocean-ship locks in that dam. Oceangoing vessels from all parts of the world not only ascend the Columbia River in a 35-foot channel to Bonneville Dam, but they go through the Bonneville locks and proceed for 80 miles farther into eastern Oregon, up into the heart of the wheat and the wool and the cattle country; beyond and through one of the greatest ranges of mountains in the United States, the Cascades.

It is, as I say, a navigation project. On account of the great height of the dam, however, and on account of the fact that this dam is built in a river which in volume of water is the second largest on this continent, it was deemed by the Congress to be wise and proper to install at the dam a power plant, which naturally produces a great deal of hydroelectric energy; and so as an incident to this navigation project the power was harnessed and is being distributed under one of the most sensible, best-considered, and businesslike programs that has ever been put into effect. We were fortunate enough from the beginning to have as the head of the Bonneville authority Mr. J. D. Ross, a man beloved by everyone in the Pacific Northwest and one of its greatest hydroelectric engineers. Unfortunately he died at the Rochester hospital yesterday. In his death we have suffered a great loss. The work he has done, however, and the policy he created for Bonneville will continue to endure.

The power generated at this dam must, of course, be distributed to the markets where the power is to be sold. Otherwise the entire investment in the power project will be wasted. The program provides that the rates shall be fixed so that they will return to the Government of the United States 3½ percent per annum upon its power investment, and that the entire cost of the Bonneville power project, as distinguished from the navigation project, will be amortized within a period of 40 years.

The Government for reasons you already know has made a large investment in the Bonneville power project, with the understanding that the cost would include sufficient money to build the transmission lines which were comprehended in the original scheme, and to extend them out into the great markets that are already waiting and which are anxious to take this power. Until we can begin selling the power to the customers who are waiting for it, the Government, of course, will not get any reimbursement; and the longer we delay completing the transmission end of our program the longer it will be before the Government begins to be reimbursed. Could we have gotten the transmission and sale of power under way last year-which was impossible because it was too big a project and because sufficient money was not available—the Government now would be receiving its regular 31/2 percent per year upon its investment. To make this possible is the purpose, and the only purpose, of this appropriation.

Let us proceed to complete the Bonneville project so that the Government may begin receiving its returns upon this sound business investment, and so that this great project may serve the interests of the people as it was intended to serve them. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Rankin] for 3 minutes.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I join the distinguished gentleman from Oregon [Mr. Pierce] in paying tribute to my friend, J. D. Ross, who passed away on yesterday. His name will live long in the hearts of the people of the Pacific Northwest. I know of no man who has passed away in recent years whose loss will be more greatly felt.

I want to answer one or two questions on this proposition of power lines for Bonneville. In the first place, as to this talk of duplication, there is not a really high-powered line in that territory except in three places: There is a high-power line from Skagit down to Seattle, one from Cushman down to Tacoma, and there is one to the west from Spokane.

Outside of that there are no lines that can be used for the purpose of transmitting this vast amount of Bonneville power to the points of delivery.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I cannot yield now. If that map shows to the contrary it is wrong. The gentleman should not read a red map. [Laughter.] Get a real map. He talks about the market for power. I am surprised at the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. White] saying that there are only two and a half million people within the distribution radius of this plant. The radius for Bonneville power will not be limited to 150 or 200 miles. In the last conversation Mr. Ross had with me in my office a few weeks ago, he said it would only be a short time until they would be able to transmit the power for 500 or 1,000 miles to reach all of you people in that great northwestern country, where it is so badly needed.

The gentleman talks about surplus power. It was stated here that they use 1,600,000 horsepower now, and that this would be doubled. If you were using the power you ought to use now you could absorb all the power generated at Bonneville, to say nothing of the necessity for this line from Bonneville up to Grand Coulee.

The consumption in the States of Oregon and Washington is boosted on account of the low prices at Tacoma, Seattle, and Eugene. The average consumption there is about 100 kilowatt-hours per month. However, outside of that immediate area, in Idaho and adjoining territory, it is only about 50 kilowatt-hours per month, while last month in my home town of Tupelo, Miss., where we are using electricity for the purposes for which it was created, we used 215 kilowatt-hours per month on an average. When you people out in that country get to using power for the purpose for which it was created you will absorb this load, and the people in the States to the west will get the benefit of Bonneville and Grand Coulee for all time to come. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ANGELL] for 5 minutes.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Chairman, Bonneville happens to be in my congressional district, and therefore I am quite familiar with it. In fact, I was born not a great distance from the Columbia River. I have been familiar with the situation existing there during all of my life.

As has been stated before, Bonneville is not just an ordinary project so far as the production of power is concerned. Power is purely incidental to the main project itself.

An examination of the hearings held by the committee will show that of the total costs expended—joint purposes—for power and other developments on the river in connection with this project—that is, navigation and flood control—only 32½ percent was allocated to the power portion of the project. Less than $12,000,000 out of a total expenditure of $53,000,000 was allocated to power development. Of course, the cost of the transmission lines themselves is an item in addition to that, but this was all charged to the power development.

Under the law passed by the Congress, the cost of the project, together with interest at the rate of $3\frac{1}{2}$ percent per annum, will be repaid to the Federal Government in the course of 40 years. I may say also that interest has been computed on the money spent during the course of the construction of this project. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, this is really a self-supporting project, insofar as power is concerned, and the money so expended will be returned to the Treasury of the United States.

The question arises with reference to the amount we will spend for the transmission lines, which is really the only point at issue today. When the project was completed, unfortunately no provision had been made for transmission lines.

The plant is located a considerable distance from the field in which this energy will be used. Portland is some 40 miles away, but that city is only one of many places in this great territory. There is territory some 300 miles surrounding the project in all directions which will ultimately consume the energy.

In my opinion, the Congress was not farsighted because of its failure to provide the necessary revenue for the transmission lines to be completed by the time the project was completed. Mr. Ross, who was selected as administrator of the project, was a man of great experience, covering many years with this type of work. He requested that additional funds be provided by the Congress for the building of these transmission lines, but the request was denied.

Last year there was an appropriation made by the Congress, and then an additional allotment was made through the good offices of the President of the United States of $10,750,000 from W. P. A. for this item. The gentleman from Ohio has stated that a considerable portion of that money remains unexpended; however, if he will examine the record, he will find this money is all earmarked and has been set aside for various contracts, many of which have been let. One was let yesterday. These contracts, when finally let, will take up every single dollar of the funds already appropriated for building a portion of this chain of transmission lines.

An additional sum of $13,000,000, included in this appropriation bill, will be necessary, if we are to extend those lines so that the users in my district and the other districts surrounding the project may have an opportunity to have electrical energy. It would certainly seem useless to build a project of this sort, then provide no funds for the transmission of the product so that it may be sold. Considerable criticism was made in the hearings that none of this power is now being sold. That is practically true. None of it is being sold, except a very small portion, because there are no transmission lines connecting this plant with the trade area in which it could be sold. That is why this money is needed.

If you want to lock up this plant and put a "for sale" sign on it, then vote down the appropriation and give it no money; but, on the other hand, if you want the money already expended to be returned to the Federal Treasury with interest, if you want to create a sound investment which will pay interest at the rate of $3\frac{1}{2}$ percent, then vote for the appropriation.

Mr. Chairman, the Bonneville project will not compete with private industry, because the law passed by the Congress provides that the power must be sold at wholesale. It is sold at wholesale, and the private utilities have an equal right with any other user to buy this product, except public bodies have a preferential right to buy 50 percent of the energy until 1941.

Mr. Chairman, in considering the appropriations for the Bonneville project carried in H. R. 4852, Union Calendar No. 58, as reported by the Committee on Appropriations, it is pertinent to consider briefly a history of this development.

In 1914 the Reclamation Bureau of the Department of the Interior investigated the possibilities of developing the Columbia River. Two years later the State engineer of Oregon urged the development of the Bonneville site as a national-defense measure. He pointed out that this development would not only be effective in times of war in the manufacture of nitrates, but during peacetimes it could be devoted to the manufacture of fertilizers greatly needed in the agricultural areas of the Northwest. In addition it would make possible the development of this great waterway, the Columbia River, for navigation and would also provide the flood control of the waters pouring down through the Columbia gorge from the great Columbia River watershed.

The Bonneville Dam is situated in the heart of the Cascade Range, where the Columbia River cuts through these mountains, being some 40 miles east of Portland. The Rivers and Harbors Act of 1925-Public Law No. 585, Sixty-eighth Congress, approved March 3, 1925-directed the Secretary of War, through the Corps of Engineers, United States Army, to investigate and report to the Congress the cost and feasibility of power developments on the navigable streams and their tributaries, with the purpose in view of preparing plans for the improvement of these waterways for navigation, flood control, irrigation, and economic development of water power. Pursuant to this authorization, the Secretary of War, on April 12, 1926, submitted to the Congress his report—House Document 308, first session, Sixty-ninth Congress. The report, among others, covered the Columbia River and its principal tributaries.

The Rivers and Harbors Act of 1927—Public Law No. 560, Sixty-ninth Congress, approved January 21, 1927—directed the Secretary of War to make the necessary surveys in accordance with the recommendations of House Document 308 of the Sixty-ninth Congress. Pursuant to this authorization, the Secretary of War, through the Corps of Engineers, United States Army, proceeded to make requisite surveys, examinations, and investigations to formulate—

The general plans for the most effective improvement of the Columbia River for the purpose of navigation, and the prosecution of such improvement in combination with the most efficient development of the potential water power, the control of floods, and the needs of irrigation.

This report of the Secretary of War was submitted to the House on March 29, 1932—House Document 103, first session, Seventy-third Congress. The conclusions of the Corps of Engineers were that the Columbia River and its tributaries were capable of being developed into the greatest system of low-cost hydroelectric power in the United States in connection with the development of these harbors for navigation, flood control, and irrigation.

As a result of these investigations, and pursuant to the recommendations of the Secretary of War, as set forth in House Document 103, Seventy-third Congress, first session, the construction of the first dam by the United States Government on the Columbia River at Bonneville was initiated September 30, 1933, under the direction and supervision of the Corps of Engineers, United States Army, and was designated "Public Works Project No. 28." The entire project, consisting of the dam at Bonneville, the ship locks, fishways, and power plant, were designed and constructed under the direction and supervision of the Corps of Engineers of the United States Army, being formally authorized by Congress in the Rivers and Harbors Act of 1935, Public, No. 409, Seventy-fourth Congress, approved August 30, 1935. Later, in the Seventy-fifth Congress, an act, Public, 329, was approved August 20, 1937, providing for the completion of the Bonneville project. The act, among other things, provided:

That for the purpose of improving navigation on the Columbia River, and for other purposes incidental thereto, the dam, locks, power plant, and appurtenant works now under construction at Bonneville, Oreg., and North Bonneville, Wash. (hereinafter called Bonneville project); shall be completed, maintained, and operated under the direction of the Secretary of War and the supervision of the Chief of Engineers, subject to the provisions of this act relating to the powers and duties of the Bonneville power administrator * * *

The administrative act of the Bonneville project (Public, 329, 75th Cong., H. R. 7642, approved August 20, 1937) contains the following policy provisions:

(1) Section 2A: The administrator shall make all arrangements for the sale and disposition of surplus energy generated at Bonneville.

(2) Section 2B: The administrator is directed to provide, construct, operate, and improve electric transmission lines, substations, facilities, and structures appurtenant thereto, for the purpose of transmitting electric energy to potential markets, and for the purpose of interchange and interconnection with other Federal projects and publicly owned systems. These lines are to be built to encourage the widest possible use of surplus power and to provide reasonable outlets for this power.

(3) Section 4A: The Bonneville project shall be operated for the benefit of the general public, particularly domestic and rural customers.

(4) Section 4D: Public bodies and cooperatives shall be given preferential status.

(5) Section 5A: Subject to the provisions of the act and approved rate schedules, the administrator shall negotiate and contract for the wholesale disposition of surplus energy, either for resale or direct consumption to public bodies, cooperatives, and private agencies or persons. This section authorizes the Administrator to sell either to public or private agencies. Under this provision, the matter of distribution rests entirely with the people served.

(6) Section 5B: The administrator is authorized to contract with public or private agencies for the mutual exchange of power and for providing emergency or break-down service. Contracts shall contain stipulations covering resale rates, to insure that such rates are reasonable and non-discriminatory, and effectuate the purposes of the act.

(7) Section 6: Rates shall be subject to confirmation by the Power Commission and shall be fixed with a view to encouraging the widest possible diversified use of electric energy at reasonable and nondiscriminatory rates.

(8) Section 7: Rate schedules shall be drawn to recover for the Federal Treasury the full cost of producing and transmitting such energy, including interest, and the amortization of the capital investment, over a reasonable period of years. The administrator has set the amortization period as 40 years and the interest rate of 3½ percent. This interest rate is approximately 1 percent higher than the long-time average interest rate, and about 1 percent higher than the private utilities are paying to R. E. A. for loans covering rural line extensions.

(9) Section 9A: The administrator shall keep complete and accurate accounts of all operations in line with the requirements of the Federal Water Power Act.

(10) Section 9C: The administrator, in December of each year, shall file with the Congress a financial statement and a complete report, covering the transmission and sale of electric energy during the preceding governmental fiscal year.

In line with the requirements of the Federal Water Power Act of 1920, the appropriation request of the Bonneville project has been divided between operation and construction. The operation budget for the fiscal year 1940 is $400,000, and is detailed on page 91 of the hearings before the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations covering the Interior Department, Seventy-sixth Congress, January 1939.

The construction projects approved by the Bureau of the Budget for the fiscal year 1940 are detailed on page 93 of the Interior hearings, and amount to $14,000,000. The following items apply to Oregon:

 Substation completion at Oregon City, Salem, Pasco, Pendleton, Albany, Eugene, and Portland.

(2) Feeder lines from existing and proposed substations to take the marketing load from the substations to the bulk points of use at Oregon City, Salem, Albany, Eugene, Umatilla, Pendleton, Bonneville, The Dalles, St. Johns, and Portland.

(3) New transmission and transformation facilities into the Umatilla and Pendleton area, the Dalles area, and a transmission line from Vancouver, Wash., to St. Johns, Oreg. Also included is a transmission line from in and around Portland to Astoria. This line will reach the recently authorized naval station at Tongue Point. None of these items, the administrator states, represents any duplicating or displacement of facilities. He states that the existing facilities of the private companies do not have any reserve capacity, and are far short of the capacity required to take the Bonneville load to its market.

The Federal Power Commission has surveyed the existing capacities of the Northwest and finds that the Portland area will be deficient in capacity under any pick-up of conditions. The national power survey of the Federal Power Commission shows that in the Northwest there is about 260,000 kilowatts of present nondependable capacity, which amounts to 20 percent or 25 percent of the existing installed capacity. This survey lists the age and condition of the existing installations. Applying to such lists the commonly accepted rules applicable to the business, it can be seen that by the time the Bonneville plant can be completed, around 1945, 400,000 kilowatts of installed capacity, or about 80 percent of the ultimate Bonneville installation, will fall into the nondependable classification. There is not sufficient generating capacity in the Northwest to handle any normal load increases or to take care of load increases necessary for the national defense.

The construction appropriation requested for the fiscal year 1940 represents nothing new. What is set out in the appropriation request has all been authorized by the Administrative Act of 1937. To defeat such an appropriation would put the project in the position where it could not earn a return to the Federal Treasury on funds already expended on the project. Critics of the appropriation do not take into account this eventuality.

Under the administrative act the people have the right to choose how they will be served. A large part of the State of Washington has elected to be served by public power. In the State of Oregon, to date both public and private plants have applied for Bonneville energy. The public plant at Eugene, which has the lowest rates in America and perhaps the best and cleanest financial structure, has applied for Bonneville current and will shortly execute a contract. The Northwestern Electric Co., serving a part of Portland, is now taking up to the capacity limits of its transmission line, 5,000 to 12,000 kilowatts of current. The Portland General Electric Co. has applied for 20,000 kilowatts of prime power and 80,000 kilowatts of secondary power, which amount should be greatly increased by the time the Bonneville plant can be completed to its full capacity.

As I have stated, the hydroelectric plant in connection with the Bonneville project is a part only of the entire development. Navigation and flood control, it is obvious, constitute the major part of the project. Under the provisions of the law authorizing the construction of these works it was provided that the costs should be segregated and that portion properly chargeable to power development should be allocated to such development. In making this allocation of costs the Federal Power Commission, among other things, said in its report of February 8, 1938:

report of February 8, 1938:

The Bonneville project on the Columbia River, Oreg.-Wash., including the dam, ship lock, power plant, and appurtenant works, for the purpose of improving navigation on said river and for other purposes incidental thereto, is now substantially completed; and said power plant, hereinafter called the initial power development, will be ready for commercial operation on or about June 30, 1938, and will produce surplus electric energy as a byproduct of said navigation improvement, which will give the Federal Government opportunities to promote the public welfare by increasing the benefits derived from works for navigation through provision of a dependable supply of electric energy to potential consumers.

The actual cost incurred by the United States to and including October 31, 1937, for the construction of said Bonneville project was $44,130,859.93, exclusive of interest during the construction period; and on the basis of said actual cost and of estimates of costs necessary to complete said project, including said initial power development with installed capacity of 86,400 killowatts, the aggregate cost of said project, exclusive of interest during the construction period, when said initial power development is completed on or about June 30, 1938, will be approximately $51,892,000.

The cost to the United States for the use of money during the 50-month period from November 1, 1933, to December 31, 1937, representing the principal period of construction, was 1.54271 percent, this being the weighted average rate of interest paid on all money borrowed by the United States during said 50-month period, including both long- and short-term financing.

Including interest at 1.54271 percent during the construction borrowed by the United States during said 50-month period, including both long- and short-term financing.

Including interest at 1.54271 percent during the construction period, the cost of Bonneville project facilities to June 30, 1938, will be approximately as follows: Facilities solely for navigation purposes, $5,517,600; facilities solely for power purposes, $9,180,500; facilities having joint value for the purposes of navigation and power development, including fishways, which are a joint responsibility, $38,490,700; the estimated total cost of all Bonneville project facilities to June 30, 1938, including interest during construction, being $53,188,800. being $53,188,800

Having fixed the costs of the entire project as of June 30, 1938, at $53,188,800, which includes interest on the funds used during the construction period, as shown by the quotation from the Federal Power Commission, it was determined that $5,517,600 of this aggregate total represents facilities used solely for navigation purposes. Initial facilities useful solely for power purposes were fixed at $9,180,500, which was allocated to the power development. The costs allocated to the dam, fishways, and appurtenant works were fixed at $38,490,700, which it was determined covered values useful for both navigation, flood control, and power production. In apportioning the costs provided by the statute the Federal Power Commission fixed 32.5 percent of the total cost of these facilities having joint value to power development. At the present time 2 of the 10 generators included in the project plans have been completed and installed, constituting onefifth of the total possible power development under the project. By reason of this, the Commission allocated one-fifth of the power-development costs to the project as now completed, or the sum of $2,501,900. This sum, together with the amount determined to be the cost of the facilities used solely for power, namely, $9,180,500, makes a total of $11,682,400, which the Commission allocated as the total cost for the initial power development.

It is patent, however, that as future units are added to the power development there will be allocated to the costs of the power development the proper proportion of the facilities jointly used for power and other purposes. These findings of the Federal Power Commission provide the formula for the ascertaining and allocating these costs to the power project as the additional units of the 10 contemplated are added from time to time.

It was the intent of Congress that the rate structure for electric energy should be based upon these costs properly chargeable and allocated to power development, and should be fixed for such amounts that the Government will be reimbursed within a reasonable time for the cost of the project. including costs for transmitting and sale of surplus energy produced at Bonneville, including interest. These rate schedules have now been made and promulgated for the sale of power at wholesale only, and so designed to repay this in 40 years, together with interest at 31/2 percent per annum, which is 1 percent greater than the present average cost of money which the Government borrows. The rates were fixed only after public hearings were held in various places in Oregon, Washington, and Idaho and conferences with groups of citizens and public officials interested in this matter. Representatives of private utilities, municipalities, power districts, civic, commercial, and farm groups presented their views. The administrator states that over 30,000 questionnaires were sent to officials and organizations throughout the Northwest. The administrator also states in his first annual report, dated December 31 1938:

The great majority of citizens appearing at the hearings favored a uniform wholesale rate for electricity throughout the entire transmission area. Four out of five replies to the questionnaires favored such a rate policy. By a 2-to-1 ratio, Northwest residents expressed approval of the authority vested in the Administrator to control by contract the resale rates for Bonneville power.

As a result of these investigations, studies, and hearings, it was determined that power from Bonneville Dam should be sold at wholesale in a new measuring unit, namely, the kilowatt-year, the base rate being for primary power $17.50 for the kilowatt-year—that is, the right to use continuously through 1 complete calendar year 1 kilowatt. There being 8,760 hours in a year, a kilowatt-year would mean 8,760 kilowatts pursuant to this rate schedule. The desirability of such a rate from the standpoint both of the Government producing the power and the users is apparent. The Columbia River is fed by waters from the whole watershed of the Columbia River Basin, and is a continuous flow throughout the year, increased somewhat during flood periods. The productive capacity, with the exception of some diminution during flood periods, is practically uniform, and it will at once be observed that if the Government can develop a continuous use of the power larger revenues will be received by the Government, even though the rate is greatly reduced. By fixing such a rate, it is believed, as shown by experiences in other districts, the public will be encouraged to and will very much augment its use of electric energy. By taking advantage of this low rate, it will be economical for users to avail themselves of power throughout the 24-hour period of the day and night for various farm and domestic and power uses, such as irrigation, refrigeration, cooking, water heating, mechanical electrical contrivances, house heating, and various other uses which are rapidly being developed by new electrical utilities.

The following is a summary of the wholesale rates established:

Transmission system:		*** **
Primary power
Secondary power
Optional rate	kilowatt-hour	1/2 cent
(Special development rate for 2-year customers whose demands are less than	period for small
At site rates:
Primary power	_kilowatt-year	$14.50
Secondary power (At site power is available to pure	hasers building	$9.50 their own lines for use within 15 mile	s of the dam.)

Mr. Ross, in his testimony, also detailed these rates, both wholesale and the objective rate, for homes and farms serviced by public-utility districts—page 98, part I, of the hearings before the committee.

A simple computation discloses that this rate of $17.50 per kilowatt-year for continuous use gives a fixed rate of 2 mills per kilowatt. If the energy is used only one-half a day, or 12 hours, the rate would be 4 mills; and if used only 8 hours of the 24-hour period, the rate would be 6 mills. As stated, these are wholesale rates. The power is to be disposed of by the Government at wholesale, either to public bodies or private utilities, with preference and priority, however, as provided by the act, to public bodies and cooperatives. In order to preserve this preferential status, 50 percent of the available energy is reserved until January 1, 1941, for such groups. Pending their availing themselves of this preference, however, power will be disposed of temporarily to other applicants.

Section 5, paragraph A, of Public, 329, Seventy-fifth Congress, approved August 30, 1937, provides:

Contracts entered into with any utility engaged in the sale of electric energy to the general public shall contain such terms and conditions, including among other things stipulations concerning resale, and resale rates by any such utility as the Administrator may deem necessary, desirable, or appropriate to effectuate the purposes of this act and to insure that resale by such utility to the ultimate consumer shall be at rates which are reasonable and nondiscriminatory.

The Commission is continuing its studies for the determination of resale rates which it will approve through contracts in order to comply with the provisions of the Bonneville Act. These studies have not been completed, but the administrator states in his first annual report:

This objective rate which, it is believed, will not only be met but will be exceeded, is as follows:

Cents per kilowatt-hour

First 50 kilowatt-hours a month	21/2
Next 150 kilowatt-hours a month	2
Next 100 kilowatt-hours a month	1
Next 1,700 kilowatt-hours a month	1/2
Next 1,700 kilowatt-hours a month Excess above 2,000 kilowatt-hours a month Minimum monthly bill. 50 cents per meter.	3/4

The administrator confirmed these rates in his testimony in the hearings before the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, his testimony being set forth on page 97 of part I of the report of these hearings.

As I have shown, the development of power in connection with the Bonneville project is a byproduct and is a minor accomplishment in connection with the whole development. This is disclosed by the Federal Power Commission in its allocation of costs where only 32.5 of the costs of joint facilities are allocated to power; the remainder, over two-thirds, being chargeable to navigation, flood control, and other facilities.

It was not the intent or purpose of the Congress and is not the plan of the administrator, that this power development shall put out of business other utility projects now being maintained by private or public utilities. The Government determined that power should not be sold at retail, but only at wholesale, and although preference was given under the terms of the act to public bodies and cooperatives, private utilities as well were encouraged to make use of this power. The rates charged are the same both to the public and to private utilities. The costs, as shown by the rates fixed by the administrator, are such that the utility companies can afford to take Bonneville power rather than generate it themselves, particularly with respect to power needed by them that cannot be produced under their existing facilities.

Mr. Ross, at the hearing, testified as follows—part I, pages 95 and 96 of the hearings:

Mr. Fitzpatrick. After the whole thing is completed, will you have a market then for all of the electric power that you can make?

Mr. Ross. Yes; I think as fast as we can get it to market there will be a demand for more than the installation.

Will be a demand for more than the installation.

Mr. Fitzpatrick. Without putting other independent lines out of Mr. Ross. Yes, sir. We are not counting on putting out other lines. What we do want is the increase in use, and there is not a single plant being projected in the region there, so that every-body—companies, districts, everybody—looks toward the Bonneville as the source of their power.

Confirmation of this policy of the administrator was disclosed by a news item appearing in the Portland Oregonian on March 7, 1939, which I quote:

WOODBURN, March 6.—City Recorder George Beach said Monday a Bonneville representative who conferred with him over the week end advised that the city of Woodburn should acquire facilities here of the Portland General Electric Co. if Bonneville power were sought, for the Bonneville project would not put in power here in opposition to another utility. In the event Woodburn should seek power from Bonneville, three appraisals would be made—one by a State agency, another by Bonneville engineers, and a third by Federal engineers independent of Bonneville—to form the basis for valuation. Beach said the project representatives have been invited to discuss the program before the city council at its session Tuesday night.

It is unfortunate, Mr. Chairman, that plans were not made and necessary appropriations provided for the construction of transmission lines affording the means to carry the power from the Bonneville project to the market, with the view of completing the transmission lines by the time the plant was completed, and the power ready for distribution. However, the power project was completed during the year 1938, no provision was theretofore made in time to have available transmission lines. Some criticism was made against the project at the hearings, and some on the floor during this debate, that the Bonneville power is not being marketed. The answer, of course, is that without transmission lines it is impossible to sell the power. The only transmission line connecting with Bonneville is that of the Northwest Electric Co., which furnished power during the construction of the project, and this company is now taking power over its line from the Bonneville Dam on a temporary basis. The reports of the administrator, however, are that applications for power have been made and contracts are pending which will more than absorb all of the power available for sale. two generators now installed produce 86,400 kilowatts. There are two more generators in process of installation totaling 104,000 kilowatts. To complete this will require approximately 2 years. The total 10 units which ultimately may be installed, according to present plans of the project, will produce 504,000 kilowatts.

The administrator testified before the committee—part I of the hearings, page 94—that he had contract applications for 312,000 kilowatts; from public districts formed in Washington under existing laws, he had applications for 202,431 kilowatts, and in Oregon 13,011 kilowatts, which was in addition to the requests from the cities of Eugene, Canby, and Cascade Locks, aggregating about 9,000 kilowatts; and that there were reservation power applications from agencies now in the process of being formed, totaling 60,735 kilowatts. He estimated that in 1944 the requirements for public districts with applications now on file would total 442,162 kilo-These applications and requirements were from public bodies. He also stated that Portland General Electric Co. had applied for 20,000 kilowatts of primary power, and would like to secure up to 80,000 kilowatts of excess power, some of it seasonal and some secondary, and that he was at the present time selling on a fluctuating load basis to the Pacific Power & Light Co. up to 12,000 kilowatts.

There are no power developments now in process of erection within this territory. Much of the existing power facilities are being removed from a dependable classification by obsolescence. The national power survey of 1934 of the Federal Power Commission shows the age of hydro and steam plants with their capacities in the Pacific Northwest. Although it is 5 years old, there has been little, if any, development in the territory since that time, aside from the Bonneville and Grand Coulee projects.

This table is significant, and is as follows:

Date of installation	Ну	iro	Steam
Date of installation	Kilowatts	Percent	Kilowatts	Percent

Surveys and studies recently made by the United States Geological Survey and Federal Power Commission show the generating capacity of utility plants in Oregon, Washington, and Idaho for the years 1920, 1929, 1934, and 1937, as follows:

Year	Kilowatts	Kilowatts	Total, all
	of hydro	of steam	kinds
1920	442, 740	148, 671	591, 571
1929	910, 731	272, 025	1, 184, 216
1934	1, 111, 294	363, 100	1, 428, 118
1937	1, 222, 039	389, 580	1, 616, 563

From the study of these tables it is noted that in 1937 the total capacity of the existing plants in these three States, most of it trade territory of Bonneville and Grand Coulee, is 1,616,563 kilowatts, but that in 1934, according to the Federal Power Commission, 21.7 percent was nondependable by reason of age and obsolescence, and it is estimated that by 1945 there will be a total of 400,000 kilowatts nondependable, or approximately 80 percent of the total capacity of the Bonneville plant.

Mr. Ross' testimony disclosed that the demand for electrical power in this Northwest territory, as shown by his experience covering his connections with the power industry, extending over some 20 years, would be doubled at least every 10 years. In fact, his experience showed that in some cases it doubled in $5\frac{1}{2}$ years, and that under existing conditions of the depression the increase is 12.85 percent per year—hearings, part I, page 105. Mr. Ross stated:

I can tell you this, that out there there were about 1,600,000 kilowatts, in the Northwest, in those three States. In 5½ years normally that would have doubled. So that in 5½ years normally they would have picked up both Bonneville and Coulee, 1,000,000 of firm kilowatts in Coulee and 500,000 in Bonneville. That is an answer to the question of the necessity of power for the market, it seems to me. And if there is a 10-percent annual increase there, some day it is going to tax us.

Mr. Ross further testified that the total available production possible under the present plans of Bonneville and Grand Coulee is approximately 1,500,000 kilowatts per year, being 500,000 for Bonneville and 1,000,000 for Grand Coulee However, installation of the necessary units for the production of this maximum load have not been provided for by the Congress, and with the present program of the installation of additional units from time to time being carried out, a great many years will be taken in the process of completing the two projects. The time stated in the hearings was 10 years. The only completed units now producing are the two units at Bonneville of 86,400 capacity, and it will be 2 years more, as I have before stated, before the two additional units at Bonneville will be available, adding an additional 104,000 kilowatts.

The increased demands for electricity will more than absorb this increase of supply from Bonneville and Grand Coulee. Experience has taught that with the lowering of the cost of electrical energy the demand rapidly increases.

The following table taken from the administrator's first annual report, page 13, is significant:

Locality	Average number of kilowatt- hours per customer	Average revenue per customer	Average revenue per kilowatt- hour
Province of Manitoba City of Tacoma. Province of Ontario. City light—Seattle. Private utility—Seattle. Bonneville area. United States.	3, 835 1, 554 1, 619 1, 050 933 1, 001 675	$37. 83 26. 46 27. 75 29. 88 30. 99 31. 72 33. 12	Cents 0. 99 1. 70 1. 71 2. 84 3. 12 3. 17 4. 91

This shows the cheaper the rate the larger the average consumption. The market for the power will arise from the obsolescence of existing operating plants and facilities and the demand in the ordinary course of events for additional power as the territory serviced by Bonneville develops, which, as shown by Mr. Ross, will at least increase the demands for power by 10 percent a year. This is borne out by tabulation prepared by the Federal Power Commission reports, page 116 of the hearings, as it shows for the 9 years—from 1920 to and including 1929—preceding the depression there was an increase of over 13.5 percent a year on the average.

The tabulation is as follows:

This use for power covers a wide variety of demands. territory is an agricultural country. That portion lying east of the Cascade Mountains is semiarid. It is of a character as to soil-content formation and inherent characteristics as to make it available for profitable agricultural use if water is furnished during certain portions of the growing season. The water is available in the great Columbia storage basin back of the Bonneville Dam. It is a continuous uniform supply of pure water. With cheap electrical power, the water and the broad acres in the Columbia River Basin may be properly brought together. In addition, there is need over all of this area for domestic and industrial rural service of cheap electric power. The city of Portland is some 40 miles distant from Bonneville. It has a population around 350,000. It and the contiguous territory is now supplied with numerous manufacturing plants having to do with the forest industry and utilization of forest products and other industrial enterprises. There are many natural deposits of minerals in Oregon, Washington, and Idaho awaiting development and requiring only cheap power. Other manufacturing plants will find desirable locations in the vicinity of these developments, where cheap power may be obtained. In addition to these requirements, navigation transportation and national defense will require, as normal conditions return, the use of substantial portions of this power. Mr. Ross' position seems sound that the available power from the development of the Bonneville project as units are added from time to time, with returning normal conditions, will not only be absorbed, but additional energy will have to be made available or there will be a scarcity of power resources.

There was recommended in the Budget $400,000 for the operation and maintenance of the Bonneville project; and for the construction, purchase, and construction of transmission lines, $14,000,000. The Committee on Appropriations cut this latter Budget recommendation to $13,000,000.

The Congress, in the Interior Appropriation Act, 1939, appropriated $3,500,000 for the initial transmission-lines construction program. In addition, $10,750,000 was allotted by the Public Works Administration on August 18, 1938, for supplementary transmission lines. I am advised the only existing transmission lines adjacent to Bonneville plant are a single line east and a single line west, with nominal capacities of 13,000 kilowatts and 25,000 kilowatts, with Bonneville available capacities of around 7,000 and 12,000 kilowatts. Good commercial practice to insure uninterrupted service to important loads lies in providing duplicate facilities.

The moneys heretofore made available above referred to for transmission lines, namely, $14,250,000, the bulk of which was made available about 6 months ago, was allocated by the administrator and is now being expended for the prosecution of this work. None of it, of course, is available for the projects covered by the appropriation under consideration.

The $32,908.88 obligation on appropriation 148/90614 was incurred during the month of June 1938 in connection with location surveys of a 2-circuit, 220-kilovolt transmission line between the Bonneville plant and Vancouver, Wash., and the building of a transmission line to Cascade Locks, Oreg. The unobligated balance of $3,467,091.12 on this appropriation will be used in the fiscal year 1939 in constructing the Bonneville-Vancouver transmission lines, with substations and 110-kilovolt feeder lines to be built and purchased and connected with the Bonneville and Vancouver substations.

Following the close of the fiscal year 1938 the Administrator of Public Works, with the approval of the President, allotted $10.750.000 for the construction of transmission lines from the dam to Grand Coulee and to The Dalles, and from Vancouver to Eugene, Oreg., and to Aberdeen, Wash. These funds were allotted under the provisions of the Work Relief and Public Works Appropriation Act of 1938, approved June 21, 1938, title II of which authorized funds for Federal construction projects. These Public Works Administration funds became available on August 18, 1938.

The lines covered by the allotment are as follows:

Project OP-752-05-169, construction of 110-kilovolt sin- gle-circuit wood H-type transmission line, with sub- stations, Bonneville to The Dalles	569,000

transmission line, with substations, West Vancouver to Eugene, Oreg	2, 820, 000
Total allotment	10, 750, 000

This allotment represents sums to be expended during the fiscal year 1939 and until June 30, 1940. The facilities represented by the lines described above will be used to transmit power to several centers of population in Oregon and Wash-The circuit to Grand Coulee will not only serve as an intertie between the two projects but it will also supply power to the intervening region and develop a market to the north and south of Coulee. These lines will be used for the transmission of the energy available from the two generators now installed at Bonneville Dam and those additional units provided by the appropriation carried in the War Department Civil Appropriation Act-Public, Number 591, Seventyfifth Congress—approved June 11, 1938. This initial network will be supplemented by other lines to serve the communities which already have applied for Columbia River power and to supply energy to other markets which can be developed as rapidly as transmission facilities are made available to them.

The testimony at the hearing before the Appropriations Committee discloses the utilization of these funds. Mr. Ross and Mr. Carey, chief engineer for the project, testified-part I of the hearings, page 113:

Mr. Rich. With reference to your $14,000,000 plan, to what distance have you constructed lines?

Mr. Ross. We got the bulk of that about 6 months ago, and we have a progress chart here.

Mr. Carey. Mr. Ross has made reference to what we have done with the money we have. Our plans for the $14,000,000 calls for the lines to Coulee, which is 232 miles, two lines from Bonneville to Vancouver, a line into Raymond, and a line into Aberdeen—all told, 640 circuit miles. This money was made available to the Bonneville project around August 1 of this year. From that day we started organizing building and engineering crews to undertake this construction program. We have now completed our specifications, and have purchased practically all of the conductor required, and a large portion of the conductor has been delivered on the job, amounting in round figures to 1,921 miles of conductor.

Mr. Rich. Is that copper?

Mr. Carey. Copper and aluminum; about an equal tonnage be-

Mr. Carry. Copper and aluminum; about an equal tonnage be-tween the two—aluminum for the high-voltage line and copper on the 110 kilowatt.

Mr. Ross. Two thousand five hundred tons of each

Mr. Carey. Of the insulators, approximately 300,000 units have been purchased and most of them have been delivered. Of the steel towers, 16,000 tons have been contracted for; they have been fabricated and tested, and some have been delivered, and the towers are now under way. Six thousand five hundred poles have been purchased and another 6,000 are coming. Just as fast as we can get the specifications out the rest will be purchased.

The $13,000,000 covered by the present bill will be used, insofar as it will go, in constructing transmission lines and service equipment for marketing power of the Bonneville project, as follows:

Item 3 represents new business service feeder lines from existing and proposed substations to reach potential load areas.

Item 4 represents new 110-kilowatt and lower transmission lines to reach irrigation, industrial, rural, residential, and commercial markets.

Item 5 covers building and shops at Vancouver substation to handle transmission and substation equipment, and to house electrical central equipment.

Item 6 covers necessary electrical and mechanical equipment for measurement and control of transmitted energy, and mobile plant which may be shifted to different power locations and cannot be charged to any specific job under the required legal accounting practice.

The supplies, materials, administrative, legal, right-of-way, and engineering items represent temporary nonrecurring overhead on construction items 1 to 7, inclusive.

The Bonneville Act specifically prescribed a continuing fund of $500,000 to be set up in the Treasury out of the receipts from the sale of Bonneville power to cover emergency expenses arising out of the hazards of operation and to insure continuous service.

These transmission lines are not planned to duplicate existing facilities. I asked Mr. Alvey, of the Administrator's engineering staff, to inform me on this, and he advised me as

There has been no duplication of existing transmission lines under the Bonneville project. The capacity status of existing transmission lines in the States of Washington and Oregon has been mission lines in the States of Washington and Oregon has been covered by two independent neutral sources, namely: The University of Washington and the Federal Power Commission. The University of Washington fact-finding memorandum has been published as Bulletin No. 99 of the Engineering Experiment Station. The Power Commission study covering rates and market was made at the request of the President. This study has not been published but I present, for the inspection of the committee a photostat of the Commission's map, showing nominal capacities of existing transmission lines—nominal capacities as shown are not the limiting capacities available to Bonneville current. Such available capacity will be considerably less, due to inherent characteristics of the line, reserve requirements, and the fact the line is already serving customers consuming capacity. For example, on the Federal Power Commission's map, the nominal capacity of the existing line from Bonneville to Cammas to Vancouver is shown as 25,000 kilowatts. This line is now tied into the Bonneville plant and the maximum plant output over this line has been around 12,000 kilowatts or 50 percent of the designated nominal capacity. Again the nominal capacity of the single line from Salem to Eugene, Oreg., is shown as 15,000 kilowatts. This line ties together two independent systems and it is common knowledge that the systems will not operate together when the load on the line exceeds around 10,000 kilowatts or 66 percent of the nominal capacity.

From the beginning of our Republic the Pacific Northwest territory has been a land of promise and of opportunity. From the turn of the last century, when President Jefferson sent Lewis and Clark on their memorable journey of exploration of the Columbia River and the unknown lands in the far West, it has continued to be the goal of the pioneer. The poet referred to it as, "Where rolls the Oregon, and hears no sound save its own dashings." The covered wagon ox team trek across the continent in the middle of the last century, bound for the Oregon country and the California gold fields, was the greatest in history. We owe to the indomitable courage, fortitude, and patriotism of these hardy pioneers that this great land of opportunity was saved to the United States instead of falling into the hands of a foreigrafpower. How fortunate we are today, in formulating our plans for national defense, that this great western country flies the Stars and Stripes, and our western boundary is the Pacific Ocean.

The great Columbia River watershed is rich in natural resources, minerals, forest products, fertile agricultural land, and vast quantities of water power. The Columbia River, one of the great arteries of commerce in the United States, has always dominated the region. In the early days it was the only means of commerce in this area. As time passed the railroads came, then the broad hard-surfaced roads, Cascade Locks, and Celilo Canal, improving transportation on the river, and at last the United Airways, charting its course through the gorge cut by the river across the The development of the Bonneville project for navigation and flood control and hydroelectric power is the last great advance in utilizing this great river in the interest of advancing civilization. The electric energy generated by the power project will afford the means to improve the river for navigation, furnish water for the irrigation of the great stretches of territory, both north and south of the river, east of the Cascade Mountains, and electrical power for domestic and commercial use.

The treacherous rapids, with their hidden, submerged rocks at the Cascades above Bonneville and at Celilo, were barriers to the advance of the pioneers, and exacted the toll of many lives. Now, with the advance of engineering skill and science, these very obstacles in the great river, by the ingenuity of man, have been turned to his use. The invisible giant of hydroelectric power, which, throughout the centuries, has been allowed to waste itself in the rush of the river to the sea, has been conquered and is now harnessed forever to do man's bidding in carrying his commerce, pulling his loads, turning the wheels of industry, tilling and irrigating his fields, lighting his homes, shops, and cities, and removing the drudgery of life.

This huge project now having been completed, we are at the threshold of the realization of these benefits from the improvement. There only remains the furnishing of the transmission lines and facilities to release this wealth of power to the waiting public. Without these transmission facilities the power project cannot be used. It must lie dormant and the electric energy be allowed to go to waste until these lines are constructed connecting the power plant with the market. Cheap power at the generating plant avails nothing. Bringing this energy to the ends of the transmission lines in the consuming areas is necessary. This appropriation will supply this need. The funds advanced by the Federal Government, including all costs for the power project with interest at 3½ percent, will be returned to the Government in 40 years.

From these considerations, Mr. Chairman, I sincerely believe that it is obvious that the Bonneville Dam project is one undertaking by the Federal Government of which we may well be proud. It has come about through orderly processes, covering a period of years going back long before the depression. After complete and accurate studies and surveys were made by the Board of Engineers of the War Department, definite plans were formulated by this Board approving the project both from engineering and feasible economic standpoints. I think we all recognize that this Board of Engineers is one which operates throughout the years with the highest degree of efficiency, free entirely from political considerations, and possessed of engineering skill and ability surpassed by no group of engineers similarly engaged. Furthermore, the power project is a self-liquidating one, amortized on the basis of 40 years with 3.5-percent interest. The administrator has stated that revenues from the sale of power from the 2 units now installed will, at the rates promulgated, produce $1,300,000 annually, and some $8,000,000 when all 10 units are installed. Upkeep and maintenance will be exceptionally small, by view of the fact that the uniform continuous flow of the river through the permanent works now completed, will make available in undiminishing quantities this huge volume of electrical energy for ages to come. The goal to be achieved is the disposition of this power by the Government to the citizens of this area at a price commensurate with the cost of the project, plus accruing interest, maintenance, and upkeep. The rates established by the administrator will accomplish this result, and, as shown, power may be supplied to the retail user from the distributing agencies buying wholesale from the Government at a price that will result in great savings to the people. These rates recommended by the administrator, ranging from 21/2 cents per kilowatt-hour for the first 50 hours to three-fourths of a cent for quantities in excess of 2,000 kilowatts per month, is an exceptionally low rate. The average residential rate in Oregon and Washington is 2.6 cents with the consumption of 1,350 kilowatt-hours compared with the national average figures for the same service 4.39 cents per kilowatt-hour, with the consumption of 793 kilowatt hours. Furthermore, the private utilities may purchase this power at the wholesale rate from the Government, and distribute it through their existing facilities at reasonable profits, and still maintain the retail rates fixed by the Government. The Bonneville plant is now completed and standing practically idle. The huge volume of energy-producing water is flowing over the dam. There are no facilities for marketing the power. The transmission lines and the marketing equipment are an absolute necessity if the Government is to capitalize on this investment. If the people of the district are to be given the opportunity to secure this power at a reasonable rate, these facilities should be provided at the earliest possible time. The funds provided in the bill under consideration will furnish these facilities and will bring back into Government coffers moneys accruing from the investment through the sale of electrical energy which is now being wasted.

If the appropriation requested is denied or is cut down or materially reduced, it will mean the Bonneville power project will be denied the right to function and the people of the territory serviced will be denied the right of securing this electrical energy now in production and ready for distribution.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California for 4 minutes.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, a comparison was made by one of the previous speakers between the region served by Bonneville and the T. V. A. region. I wish to point out a couple of very important differences. The Bonneville region is probably a thousand miles from the closest deposit of coal and the closest fields of oil. The northwest part of this country is dependent entirely upon hydroelectric power for usable power. Second, it is also true that people from every part of this Nation are pouring into that section of the country—into the Northwest and into my own State of California—by the thousands. We seek to make provision so our States will be able to meet this great problem which has come to us.

I look forward into the future to a time when electric energy will be so cheap that every family in America can afford to have it in its home and every industry in America can have power at half what it costs today. [Applause.] I am convinced that when that time comes the prosperity of this Nation will be greatly increased. Such a development is not necessarily in conflict with the prosperity of the coal industry for the reason that you can generate electric energy at the mine mouth with coal quite as well as you can generate it with water power.

As far as the Bonneville proposition is concerned, I just want to show you what might be a very good reason for being in opposition to the construction of these transmission lines. Here is a great Government power project, a project conceived with the idea that falling water, after all, is a gift of God to all the American people and should be so used. If, however, it is possible to prevent getting that power to the market, if it is possible to prevent its being transmitted to a place where it can be consumed, then the financial showing of this project may be hurt at least temporarily. If that should happen, then we will have Members coming into this House and telling us that the Bonneville project is not paying its way as it was supposed to do. Therefore, unless you are definitely against the development of a project of this kind for the benefit of the whole American people you have to vote down the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio, for it is necessary in the interest of good government and in the interest of good financial administration that these transmission lines be constructed in order to assure a market for the abundance of power at Bonneville Dam.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Does the gentleman see any reason why the Federal Government should construct transmission lines from Bonneville into the States of Washington and Oregon, when in the gentleman's own State his own people built the lines in from Boulder Dam?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I have no objection to the people of Washington and Oregon benefiting from a policy of the Government which may go more directly to a solution of this problem than was the case in California.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Why do not the people of the Northwestern States show the interest the people in California showed?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I believe we are benefiting tremendously by what was done at Boulder Dam, but there are some things about the matter which might have been handled better had the present administration been in power at that time. I do not want to get into a controversy about that except to say that, as a Californian, I am eager to see something done which will be to the welfare and benefit of the people of another section of the country, for I am convinced that this Nation is one nation and that what benefits the people of the Tennessee Valley, or the people of the Northwest, or any other section of this country, also benefits the people in my own district and myself. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURDOCK] for 4 minutes.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, I do not really need 4 minutes, because the gentleman from California [Mr. Voorhis] has just said what has been going through my mind. I should like to say "amen" to that speech by saying just this: All through American history there has been a battle, apparently a political or economic conflict, between the East and the West. Some in the older and more settled portions of our country have feared the rising West. There was a time when the West was just beyond the Allegheny Mountains. I believe you will agree with me that the generous colonial policy toward the great West of our forefathers in the Original Thirteen Colonies and States was a good one. The founders in the Original Thirteen States made it possible for 35 children to be born to this family of States and to be admitted as a part of this Union. The great Ordinance of 1787 and the Constitution of the United States, formulated that year, contained statesmanlike and liberal provisions for the birth of these new Commonwealths.

Today we are asking you, the eastern community, to show the same liberality of spirit and the same statesmanship in economic matters that our forefathers showed in civil and constitutional matters in helping the development of the West. That is a new country out there. I am in that little-known part of it way off down yonder in the corner, the least known part of it, perhaps, but I agree with the gentleman from California that the development of these great resources which God has given us in the Northwest will react to the benefit of the entire Nation. For that reason I am in favor of the orderly development of hydroelectric power throughout the West, where we have no coal and very little if any oil. In my State it was once thought we were producing too much electric power but now we find we cannot produce enough.

Not only do we need hydroelectric power in the West, but also as far as agricultural products are concerned I may say I find in my own State that the mining camps of Arizona have to import butter, eggs, flour, and all the necessary foods from outside our borders. We do not produce enough food. Therefore, there is no competition with the eastern dommunity with regard to the production of power or the production of agricultural products.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts, if I have any more time.

Mr. GIFFORD. I want to respond for the East that we did help in the development of the West. We loaned you billions of dollars to build up your West. Now, you want us to borrow money and give it to you. We usually parted willingly with the money when we had it, but now you are asking us to give you borrowed money. Are you not going a little too far?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. This is reimbursable; it is not a gift. I believe that just as the railroad development that occurred after the War between the States in the late sixties and seventies helped develop the wealth of the entire country, so today, by building dams and producing hydroelectric power and developing irrigation projects, you are doing the same thing. It is part of a Nation-wide constructive piece of statesmanship.

Mr. GIFFORD. Is that the gentleman's answer to my question?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I should be pleased to yield. Mr. GIFFORD. Oh, no; wait a minute.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. GIFFORD. The gentleman is an authority on money. Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. In regard to borrowing the money, I say that sometimes a businessman finds it necessary to borrow money to carry on his business when it reaches a certain stage rather than let the thing collapse.

Mr. GIFFORD. We can drink ourselves sober, as I have said before. If this is borrowed money, the question is, Shall we borrow these funds and continue this period of spending?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. As a parent I have borrowed money to educate my children in their formative years.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I just want to exhibit this map showing the duplication of power lines, and I call your attention to the fact that they now have power lines built over a large portion of the territory. They also have $3,000,000 yet to expend, which, with the $6,000,000, would complete many of the power lines which would be duplications of existing power lines that the people of Washington and Oregon have constructed with their private capital. Now the Government wishes to destroy them.

I also wish to call your attention to a statement made by Arthur Krock in the New York Times of March 7:

The President said that for about a year and a half the utility people had known and understood and accepted the fact that there was to be no further expansion of federally sponsored hydroelectric power developments. The President reemphasized his statement that the administration had no intention of further expanding its program of federally subsidized electric-power projects.

program of federally subsidized electric-power projects.

If this could be understood to mean—which it was generally taken to mean—that no additional moneys are to be used for such purposes, then it should cancel a current administration request for $14,000,000 to finance further construction of transmission lines from the Bonneville Dam.

Now, I wish to say to my good friend from the Northwest that I am not here to fight the Northwest or the Southwest or the Southeast; but when you have appropriated more money than will be necessary to sell all the power that you can develop with the two generators now installed at Bonneville, and with the two generators on contract which will not be installed for 2 years, and it will not be necessary to take this total amount of money to complete this line, then I cannot see for the life of me why you want to spend $14,000,000 when $6,000,000 will do the work and take care of all the power you can develop.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for just one question?

Mr. RICH. I cannot yield right now.

In this northwest territory you consume 1,800,000 kilowatts. You have that territory all covered now. Certainly you do not need this power, because that territory is already served, and they furnish power for 2.48 cents per kilowatt-hour, which is 50 percent of the average cost of electricity over the country as a whole. They are serving the people in that locality. Ninety-four percent of all the residents of cities and suburban areas are taken care of and 50 percent of the farms. If this was going to hinder or hold up or hamstring anybody, inasmuch as they are now building this dam and power project, I question very much whether I would get up here and try to oppose it, but I do not think this is good, sound business. My friend, the gentleman from Mississippi, said they are going to transmit this current for 500 to 1,000 miles. The gentleman knows there is no wizard in electricity that has yet discovered a means of transmitting current that far. It just cannot be done, because nobody in the field of electricity has been able to discover a means of transporting electric current over 300 miles in a satisfactory manner and at a reasonable cost.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. Yes; for a question.

Mr. RANKIN. In the report of the Army engineers in 1930, signed by Mr. Patrick J. Hurley, Secretary of War under Mr. Hoover, it was stated by the Army engineers that they could transmit this power from Muscle Shoals 350 miles and sell it for about 4 mills a kilowatt-hour at a profit.

Mr. RICH. The situation in which we find ourselves here is that we started in this administration to establish a yard-stick at T. V. A., and it seems to me when you are going to spend seven or eight hundred million dollars for one yard-stick, you ought to be mighty careful before you add inches to a yardstick in the Northwest, where you are going to spend almost $1,000,000,000 before you get through with the two projects, Bonneville and Grand Coulee. It is going to cost you an enormous amount of money. Let us be reasonable; let us be sensible. Let us take our time about doing these things and let us not spend money foolishly. That is the thing I am interested in avoiding.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. In view of the fact we have already a well-established precedent by the State of California in the building of a transmission line running from Boulder Dam into Los Angeles, and in view of the further fact that the State of Oregon prides itself on being out of debt while the Federal Government is going into debt at the rate of $3,000,000,000 a year, is not that a more substantial reason why we should not embark upon this innovation?

Mr. RICH. Indeed, it is.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time may be extended one-half minute in order that I may ask a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of debate has been limited and the Chair cannot recognize the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman-

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. I yield.

Mr. KLEBERG. I have asked the gentleman to yield to me for the purpose of asking the proud grandfather over there [laughter and applause], the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Rich], whether or not the new addition to his family is going to be a new dealer. Does the gentleman have any advice about that?

Mr. RANKIN He is crying for light now. [Laughter.]

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas, one of the finest fellows in the House, overwhelms me. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, the question I wanted to ask my esteemed friend from Pennsylvania was whether the construction of a four-lane concrete highway was duplication when it replaced a dirt road? We have a comparable situation here with the map he has exhibited. We have a lot of little power lines with small capacity that cannot carry the load, and now we intend to build, and must build, to carry, this power to market, a high-voltage, permanent line, a means of transportation, if you please, to bring this power generated by the Government to the market, so that we can make this project reimbursable and replace the money in the Treasury that has been expended to build one of the greatest conservation projects ever set up in the United States.

This water or this power has been running altogether free to the sea during all these years and would go on in this way indefinitely. This constitutes a great waste, because it requires the use of oil or petroleum for power in this market, the supply of which we are using up at a terrific rate—oil and gas being lavishly used today that may be at a great premium for aerial transportation in the future and for the national defense. Mr. Chairman, the day may come when our children will look upon the people of this generation as the greatest wastrels in history by our lavish use of petroleum for which succeeding generations may have to depend for defense and their very existence.

I am sure when the full benefit of this conservation utility is fully realized the succeeding generation will rise up to bless a far-seeing administration that harnessed the mighty Columbia and gave them this great faculty, everlasting in its benefits.

It is a great conservation project, and to make it reimbursable, to pay this money that has been expended to construct the project back into the Treasury, it is necessary that we provide a means of transportation by building these large-capacity power lines. I do not think the gentleman has had any experience in building power lines or knows much about the transmission of electricity, but it is absolutely necessary, if we are to make this project pay, to secure the money from the sale of the energy, that we build these large transmission lines to bring the power to market, and we have in the lower Columbia Valley one of the finest undeveloped sections of the United States, and the development of that section will benefit business all over the country. I hope the amendment will be rejected.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. If we were to kill this appropriation, it would simply mean bottling this power up, and the Government would get no proceeds at all. As a matter of fact, that is exactly what this would mean. It would mean bottling this power up if we cut the appropriation down to $6,000,000, and it would cost the Government money instead of saving money.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman from Idaho has the floor.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Does the gentleman see any reason why the Federal Government should continue in this innovation of building transmission lines? Have we built them in the case of any other dam?

Mr. RANKIN. It is not an innovation.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. It was built in the T. V. A. only.

Mr. RANKIN. The power business is a monopoly on a necessity of life.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. From what other dam has the Government built transmission lines except the T. V. A.?

Mr. RANKIN. Oh, we will be building some in New England when we improve those water routes up there, in order to save the people of New England from the enormous overcharges they are now paying.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. That is not an answer to my question.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, it is my contention that this is a move to hamstring the Government's program and is mostly a move on the part of the utilities to discredit one of the greatest conservation projects ever undertaken by the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Idaho has expired.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, millions of years ago a kind Providence, in His infinite wisdom, created this wonderful earth. Then He created man and said to him: "This is yours. Develop it. Take care of it. Be fruitful and multiply and make this serve the oncoming generations as God's footstool." We are but in the dawn of this mighty development. We are intensely interested in every phase of it. We glory in being a part of it.

The forests on the bosom of old Mother Earth, majestic and stately, were good to behold. But man has also fashioned them into dwellings for shelter and into ships that ply the seven seas. The soil has given sustenance to countless multitudes since first the flight of years began. Beneath the surface is the untold wealth of minerals—the brass, the copper, the silver, the gold of ancient times, and the coal and iron and gas and oil of modern times. But the wealth from the bowels of old Mother Earth is being depleted, and in the not too distant future mankind will need some other source for power, for light, for means to provide the comforts and decencies-yes, the necessities of life. When the great Architect of the Universe threw up the mountains, His handiwork was beautiful to see: The mountains, rock-ribbed and ancient as the sun. Time and the elements have fashioned them down to pretty and enchanting hills here in the East. In the West the Rockies, the Cascades, and the Sierras still stand in their prime and pristine magnificence. They are the delight of hundreds of thousands of tourists every year—the playground of Amer-The snowcapped peaks, the laughing waterfalls, the crystal streams are a continuous delight to all who are permitted to visit them. This is as it should be. But man cannot live on invigorating climate and scenic beauty alone. Those massive ranges of the West have a potential power for economic welfare and good not yet realized by the American people.

In colonial days and at the beginning of this Republic, the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of which was so auspiciously celebrated on March 4 last, lived an American who was a scientist and philosopher as well as a statesman. With his key and kite he snatched from the air one of its mighty elements and made it possible to harness this subtle force so as to compel service to man. Through the genius of an Edison and a Steinmetz, it has entered into the plan of modern everyday life. The electric car, the radio, the electric light, the electric motor. Far more wonderful than Aladdin's magic lamp. So these everlasting hills, these majestic mountains, will not only be a thing of beauty but will serve for ages and ages to come, when the coal and gas and oil shall have been consumed, as the willing servant of mankind, the white coal of the glistening mountain streams will continue to burn on and on toward the end of time.

For ages these mountain streams came rushing down only to be seen and heard in wonderment. Now they are being harnessed to bring happiness and contentment into the homes of millions. This in nowise distracts from their beauty. Take a beautiful young Kentucky filly dashing and prancing over the bluegrass of that famous State. Does it not add to the charm and beauty of that colt as she develops into a fine mare to have her become accustomed to the bridle, the rein, the saddle, or the harness? Does it not add to her glory that she is useful to her master?

So we are taming these teeming, sparkling streams to make them useful as well as beautiful. That must have been the ultimate motive of an omnipotent Providence.

The mighty Columbia River has for ages rolled on from its source to the sea—the placid Pacific, a stream so crystal clear and beautiful that it must be seen to be appreciated. With its tributaries in Washington State alone, together with streams on the west side of the charming Cascades, it holds within its folds one-fifth of the potential water power of the United States. I am proud to say that my little county of Benton is surrounded on three sides-north, east, and southby this mighty river. For decades development of this water power energy has been contemplated. It was visioned and planned by the Republicans when they were in power. Definite and actual construction of dams was begun with the present administration. So it is clearly all partisan and nonpolitical. Appropriations for continuation of these dams have been made by succeeding Congresses as a matter of common sense and necessity. It is a national proposition, not a sectional matter.

Bonneville has been completed. Power is being generated and new generators for additional production of power are being installed. The Army engineers have done an excellent job. Countless millions are demanding electric power at reasonable rates. We of the West-yes, the people of the whole United States are dam-minded. They realize that electricity is as essential to modern life and decency and comfort as are sunshine and water and air-and all are the inalienable rights of all alike. What is needed are transmission lines. The power is being generated and more to come. The market, according to Administrator Ross, is ready for the present output and will be ready for the increased output in 2 years to come. The only way the dam can be paid for is by selling the electric power. This dam belongs to the Federal Government. Its output should belong to the Federal Government, to distribute to its people-the real sovereigns in these United States. I have but two objections to private companies having anything to do with this distribution. They restrict their patronage to the select few-the Government, as in the post-office agency, gives it to all alike. Secondly, the rates are too high and too variable. In one city in the Fourth Congressional District of Washington the people pay 15 cents per kilowatt because there is no competition; in Tacoma, less than 200 miles distant, under municipal ownership, they pay less than 2 cents per kilowatt.

I cannot conceive of Members here today voting to discontinue this great project now in face of the necessity of appropriations to construct transmission lines to dispose of this electricity so as to pay for the construction of the dam.

The power companies are doing their utmost to defeat this appropriation. They did their utmost to defeat necessary legislation in our State legislature which would make it possible for public-utility districts to utilize the power developed at Bonneville. But before the new units are ready at Bonneville the people of the State of Washington will have an opportunity to speak at the polls in 1940. Judging by past performances, the people will speak in no uncertain terms. They will elect a Governor and a legislature in definite sympathy with the people of the State on the power question and the more reason for this appropriation to build transmission lines to reach the remotest parts of the Northwest,

The onward march of progress is as resistless as the tides and depends not on the influence of power companies or the whims of vacillating legislators. The onward march of time is as resistless as the law of gravity which slowly but surely brings these waters from their icy mountain recesses down over the rocky canyon beds to generate the power that has become the great giant, the subtle but willing servant, the magnificent masterpiece of the human mind.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mason] was one of the gentlemen on his feet when the time for debate was fixed. If the gentleman from Illinois is present, the Chair will recognize him. Also the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Dingell] was on his feet asking recognition, and if he is in the Chamber, the Chair will recognize him.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, they are both in committee. The CHAIRMAN. Then the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Washington [Mr. Leavy] for 5 minutes.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Chairman, I intend only to state a few of the salient facts in reference to this Bonneville item and ask that you then draw your own conclusions from them. I expect to base my statement on the record of the hearings before our subcommittee, of which both the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Rich] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WHITE] are members, and in which hearing they participated. On page 93 of the hearings there is a break-down of every proposed line that is being built and for which this appropriation is needed to carry on the work. If the gentlemen will read further in those hearings, they will find that that work is already in progress throughout the States of Washington and Oregon. It is true they had something over $14,000,000 for this fiscal year, and that it is going to take $35,000,000 to build these distribution lines that reach all over Washington, Oregon, a great part of Idaho, and into Montana. Again, if you will examine the record, you will find that there is not a single instance of duplication. I made that statement the other day, and I repeat it. There is not a private utility line in that region that has the capacity to carry the load it would have to carry to serve either Bonneville or Coulee; and if you read further in the record you will find that, had the Government been wise enough a year earlier to have adopted a policy of looking to the distribution of power when it came in, they would now be collecting a million dollars a year instead of just one-fourth of that for the sale of power. In other words, we are generating at this moment 86,000 kilowatts of electricity at Bonneville, and the record shows applications have been made for 400,000 kilowatts, and the only possible way to reach anybody who wants the power is over a little 12,000-volt line. The rest of it is going to waste.

The act provides that this money, and every dollar spent in the building of the dams, less navigation and flood control, shall be repaid to the Federal Treasury with $3\frac{1}{2}$ percent interest. You cannot have it repaid if you deny us the agencies to reach the market.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. LEAVY. Yes.

Mr. SIROVICH. In other words, if this project were deprived of the $7,000,000 it ought to receive, it would prevent the transmission of electricity already generated, but which needs transmission lines to bring it to all the people.

Mr. LEAVY. That is exactly the situation. It is no longer a question of the wisdom of Bonneville. Let me correct my colleagues from Pennsylvania and Ohio. The total combined cost—and you can search the evidence from the very beginning of both those great projects and you may use the orator's license to exaggerate—still you will find the total combined cost of Bonneville and Grand Coulee is not even half the sum stated; and we will not see completion for a quarter of a century hence, and that involves 1,200,000 acres of land, making homes in that great region for half a million people who are now looking for jobs.

Mr. Chairman, I have repeatedly in my remarks today and those made a few days ago made reference to the hearings that were held on January 26 of this year by our committee, wherein the Honorable J. D. Ross, Administrator of the Bonneville project, appeared before us and justified in a most able and convincing manner the appropriations that he sought.

The newspapers of this Nation this morning carried an Associated Press dispatch announcing the sudden and unexpected death of J. D. Ross, Administrator of the Bonneville project, who was one of the best friends that the movement for a wide and cheap use of the electricity by the common people of America ever had. With us in the Northwest the name of J. D. Ross symbolized justice, fairness, intelligence, patience, and perseverance in the long struggle of 30 years to preserve, develop, and utilize for all the people, not alone of that region but for the Nation as a whole, the untold energy available in our rivers in their onward rush from our snow-clad mountain ranges down to the sea.

To every Member of this Congress in both the House and Senate from the Northwest States of Washington, Oregon, and Idaho, the passing of a great and good man, such as our friend, that we familiarly called "J. D.," is an irreparable loss. I feel that it is no exaggeration to say that he gave his life to his country in order that its citizens, both rich and poor, might more fully enjoy those magical blessings that come with a liberal use of cheap electric energy.

The great Seattle city-owned municipal system will stand through all time as a monument to the work of this noble character, and wisely and well has he laid the ground work for Bonneville and Grand Coulee, assuring the never-ending flow of unseen power into the homes of those who now live in that region and those who are to come hereafter. For years after those of us here, Members of this body today, have gone to our final reward, the name of J. D. Ross will be synonymous with a bountiful supply of cheap electricity, not alone throughout the great Northwest but throughout this great Nation. He died as he would have wished, fighting for an ideal; and I hope here today we will not vote for an amendment that would cripple and virtually strike down the structure that he has almost completed.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. LEAVY. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Is it not a fact that as we develop these reclamation projects and put people upon the farms we create potential users of electricity; and are not the farmers just as much entitled to the use of that electricity as the people living in the cities?

Mr. LEAVY. Exactly. The farmers in that region are largely without electricity because of the prohibitive costs. Only half of them can afford electricity. Every time the Government permits a farmer to go on an irrigated tract and there establish a home that farmer in turn supports two families in the cities and towns, and if you will permit the Ross yardstick of rates to prevail the use of electric energy will far more than double.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEAVY. I yield.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Is it not a fact that last year you had money for building transmission lines to a total of $17,000,000 in the two projects?

Mr. LEAVY. About $14,500,000. I have covered that, I may say to the gentleman.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. And would not the $6,000,000 permit you to build a great many more extension lines?

Mr. LEAVY. The work in that territory is now in progress, employing almost 1,000 people. The engineering has already been done. Most of the right-of-way has been contracted for; substation plans drawn; millions of dollars worth of steel towers and other necessary material contracted for; and to reduce this item as proposed would mean a tremendous loss to the Government. It is now a matter of completing this work. The surveys have been made and the work is under construction. Simply stated, it is a question of whether you want to take 3 years to do that which you should do in 1, and deny the people there the right to use the power at the low rates fixed and afford the Government the opportunity to amortize the investment it has made out there.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Did they not get three times what they asked for last year?

Mr. LEAVY. No; they did not. Last year's hearing will disclose that Mr. Ross advised the committee that it would be desirable to have large appropriations in order to hasten line construction, and we were warned by him that limited funds would mean a loss. He was much wiser than either the Budget Bureau or this committee on that point. It was after the Interior supply bill had passed that we passed the P. W. A. appropriation and Secretary Ickes, who understood this situation better than we did and who had vision enough to see the need of haste in getting these powerful lines built, ordered that the additional ten or eleven millions be allowed, and the world's greatest distribution system of electrical energy has taken shape. I urge you to give this undertaking money enough to be made useful and stand as an enduring monument through the years to the memory of the man who largely gave his life to build it for the purpose of blessing his fellow men. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WHITE].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. White of Ohio) there were ayes 58 and noes 104.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

UNITED STATES HOUSING AUTHORITY

Salaries and expenses: Not to exceed $4,500,000 of the funds of the United States Housing Authority, established by the United States Housing Act of 1937 (50 Stat. 888), as amended by the United States Housing Act amendments of 1938 (52 Stat. 820), shall be available during the fiscal year 1940 for administrative expenses of the Authority in carrying out the provisions of said acts, including personal services and rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; traveling expenses; printing and binding; procurement of supplies, equipment, and services; reproducing, photographing, and labor-saving devices and office appliances, including their repair and exchange; payment, when specifically authorized by the Administrator, of actual transportation expenses and not to exceed $10 per diem in lieu of subsistence and other expenses to persons serving, while away from their homes, without other compensation from the away from their homes, without other compensation from the United States, in an advisory capacity to the Authority; payment of the necessary traveling and other expenses of officers and employees of any agency of the Federal, State, or local governments whose services are utilized in the work of the Authority; not to whose services are utilized in the work of the Authority; not to exceed $5,000 for the purchase and exchange of lawbooks and other books of reference, periodicals, newspapers, and press clippings; not to exceed $10,000 for purchase, including exchange, hire, maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, to be used only for official purposes; not to exceed $2,500 for expenses of attendance, when specifically authorized by the Administrator, at meetings or conventions concerned with the work of the Authority; not to exceed $15,000 for the preparation, mounting, shipping, and installation of exhibits; not to exceed $25,000 for employing persons or organizations by contract or otherwise for of the Authority; not to exceed $15,000 for the preparation, mounting, shipping, and installation of exhibits; not to exceed $25,000 for employing persons or organizations, by contract or otherwise, for special reporting, engineering, technical, legal, and other services determined necessary by the Administrator without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (41 U. S. C. 5) and without regard to the civil-service laws and the Classification Act of 1923 as amended: Provided, That of the $4,500,000 hereby made available for administrative expenses of the Authority, not to exceed $1,500,000 shall be available for such expenses incurred at the site and in connection with the construction of the United States Housing Authority non-Federal projects and shall be reimbursed in the discretion of the Administrator by the public housing agencies constructing such projects and such reimbursements shall be available for administrative expenses of the Authority: Provided further, That all necessary expenses in connection with the management and operation of projects transferred to the Authority by Executive Order No. 7732 of October 27, 1937, as modified by Executive Order No. 7839 of March 12, 1938, may be considered as nonadministrative expenses for the purposes hereof, and be paid from the rents received from each transferred project: Provided further, That no part of the funds made available in this paragraph for administrative expenses of the Authority shall be used to increase the salary of any position which on the date of the approval of this act is provided for at the rate of $4,000 or more per annum, except in consequence of a reallocation of position under the Classification Act of 1923, as amended.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. The CHAIRMAN: The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. In fact, there are four points of order which I will include all in one.

On page 13, line 15, I call attention to the language which Actual transportation expenses and not to exceed $10 per diem in lieu of subsistence and other expenses to persons serving—

I call attention to the fact that that is an enlargement of the statutory limitation of $5 per day which now exists.

I presume probably the Chair would prefer to make separate rulings on the different points?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would prefer to have the gentleman from Ohio state all the points of order now.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Very well, Mr. Chairman. On page 14 I call attention to line 7, the language there reading:

Not to exceed $25,000 for employing persons or organizations, by contract or otherwise, for special reporting, engineering, technical, legal, and other services determined necessary by the Administrator, without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes.

I contend that that is an enlargement of power which makes an exemption from existing statute, section 3709 of the Revised Statutes.

The language in line 12, on page 14, reads as follows:

Without regard to the civil-service laws and the Classification

I submit that that is an exemption from the civil-service law, which is specifically contained in the original authorization of this Authority.

Then the language beginning in line 13, on page 14, the entire clause, which reads:

Provided, That of the $4,500,000 hereby made available for administrative expenses of the Authority, not to exceed $1,500,000 shall be available for such expenses incurred at the site, and in connection with the construction, of the United States Housing Authority non-Federal projects, and shall be reimbursed, in the discretion of the Administrator, by the public housing agencies constructing such projects, and such reimbursements shall be available for administrative expenses of the Authority.

That is a delegation of authority. It enlarges the scope of the existing authority under the original law, and therefore the entire paragraph should be stricken out on these points of order. This is legislation on an appropriation bill. The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Johnson] desire to be heard?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, we concede the points of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The points of order are sustained.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. Was the point of order made against the entire paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. The points of order were made against the entire paragraph.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? May I call attention to another point of order that you may want to correct if you are going to amend the paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state the point of order.

Mr. DIRKSEN. It begins on page 14, line 22.

The language reads:

That all necessary expenses in connection with the management and operation of projects transferred to the Authority by Executive Order No. 7732 * * * may be considered as nonadministrative expenses for the purposes hereof.

I am of the opinion that there is no statutory authorization for that kind of language.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make that point of Mr. DIRKSEN. I do, Mr. Chairman. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that that language also is bad, and sustains the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Johnson of Oklahoma: Page 13, line 1, in lieu of the matter stricken out insert the following:

"UNITED STATES HOUSING AUTHORITY

"Salaries and expenses: Not to exceed $4,500,000 of the funds of "Salaries and expenses: Not to exceed $4,500,000 of the funds of the United States Housing Authority, established by the United States Housing Act of 1937 (50 Stat. 888), as amended by the United States Housing Act Amendments of 1938 (52 Stat. 820), shall be available during the fiscal year 1940 for administrative expenses of the Authority in carrying out the provisions of said acts, including personal services and rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; traveling expenses; printing and binding; procurement of supplies, equipment, and services; reproducing, photographing, and labor-saving devices and office appliances, including their repair and exchange, payment of the necessary traveling and other expenses of officers and employees of any agency of the Federal, State, or local governments whose services are utilized in the work of the Authority; not to exceed $5,000 for the purchase and exchange of lawbooks and other books of reference, periodicals, newspapers, and press clippings; not to exceed $10,000 for purchase, including exchange, hire, maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, to be used only for official purposes; not to exceed $2,500 for expenses of attendance, when specifically authorized by the Administrator, at meetings or conventions concerned with the work of the Authority; not to exceed $1,500 for the preparation, mounting, shipping, and installation of exhibits: Provided, That no part of the funds made available in this paragraph for administrative expenses of the Authority shall be used to increase the salary of any position which on the date of the approval of this act is provided for at the rate of $4,000 or more per annum, except in consequence of a reallocation of position under the Classification Act of 1923, as amended."

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it. Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman states his parliamentary inquiry, will he yield for a brief question?

Mr. ROBERTSON. Yes.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Is the gentleman now referring to the $10 expense item?

Mr. ROBERTSON. No.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, I have prepared an amendment, on page 15, line 15, to add a new sentence providing that the expenditures of the Housing Commission shall be audited by the General Accounting Office. My parliamentary inquiry is whether it should be offered as an amendment to the pending amendment or as a separate amendment after action on the pending amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia may offer his amendment as an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma, if he desires.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ROBERTSON to the amendment offered by Mr. Johnson of Oklahoma: At the end of the amendment offered by Mr. Johnson of Oklahoma insert "Provided further, That all expenditures by the United States Housing Authority out of the appropriations made by this act shall be subject to audit in the General Accounting Office in the same manner and to the same extent as expenditures of the Department of the Interior" extent as expenditures of the Department of the Interior."

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, I understand this amendment is agreeable to the members of the committee handling this bill. I cannot believe any other Member of Congress would object to having the tremendous expenditures of this public agency audited just as other expenditures under this appropriation bill are by law required to be audited.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma, as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Annual contributions: For the payment of annual contributions to public housing agencies in accordance with section 10 of the United States Housing Act of 1937 (50 Stat. 888), as amended by United States Housing Act amendments of 1938 (52 Stat. 820), $5,000,000.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. White of Ohio: On page 15, line 15, after the amount "$5,000,000", insert a colon and the following proviso: "Provided, That in the use of such funds the total and final cost, including all charges assumed by the Federal Government, shall not exceed $3,500 for each family so housed."

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this amendment would constitute legislation on an appropriation bill. It amends the original act and has nothing to do with lessening the amount of money spent.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Yes, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Ohio briefly on the point of order.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, the amendment I have offered does not provide legislation, because it is simply a limitation on the use of the money instead of being an enlargement upon the use of the money set forth in this paragraph. I contend, therefore, it is not subject to a point of order.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, it is not a limitation on the total amount to be spent but on what they may spend for a particular part of the project. That has already been authorized by law at $4,000 per family unit.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WHITE] offers an amendment in the following language:

Provided. That in the use of such funds the total and final cost, including all charges assumed by the Federal Government, shall not exceed $3,500 for each family so housed.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZPATRICK] makes the point of order that this is legislation on an appropriation

The Chair has carefully examined the amendment, and to the Chair the amendment is no more than a restriction on the use of money, not new legislation.

The point of order, therefore, is overruled.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe it will be necessary to take 5 minutes to explain the amendment. It is simply based on a fundamental rule of common sense, in my opinion. The average American citizen from one end of this country to the other lives in a house of an average value of $3,000 to $3,500. Now, why should the Government compel that average citizen to build a house for a public charge that is better than the house in which he lives himself? John Q. Public has to buy his own home, and yet the slum-clearance law says he must also provide the money to build these homes for slum dwellers. Why should he be required to provide them with a better home than his own?

Mr. Chairman, I think I will rest my case right there.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Mich-

Mr. CRAWFORD. In view of the fact the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. White] has not used the full 5 minutes, I should like to ask some questions at this point. The Government figures which have recently been published by the Department of Commerce indicate that some 95,804 individual enterprises in this country employ 2,791,791 workers, to whom they paid wages amounting to $3,114,059,000 per annum, or an annual wage of only $1,116. I am now referring to factory workers who are not on relief but who hold jobs and draw wages from pay rolls, and not in the salaried class.

I am also informed by Government departments that the average cash annual income for 1938 for farm families of four persons amounted to only $959.20 per annum for the four.

Can the gentleman inform us whether or not those people to whom I have referred and who draw this low annual wage will have to contribute to this national housing program with which this section of the bill deals?

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. The answer is yes; they will have to contribute. The burden of cost falls on each and every taxpaying citizen.

Mr. CRAWFORD. In other words, these people who are thus working and paying a direct or indirect tax will have to pay for this housing program, insofar as Government contributions are made?

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. That is correct.

Mr. CRAWFORD. What does the gentleman find has been the cost per room for these dwelling units which have thus far been constructed under the National Housing Act?

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD] is a member of the Banking and Currency Committee of the House, which has considered that legislation and probably could give figures that are later than mine.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I may say to the gentleman that this being an appropriation bill, and in view of the fact we have not had any amendment to the act offered during the present session of the Congress, his appropriation committee figures would be later than the ones I have.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. I cited here last Friday some figures about which there was some argument. The fundamentals are not changed by variance in the amounts. That should not alter the merits of my amendment. Senator Tydings stated that these slum-dwelling facilities were costing $5,500 per family, which sum included the original construction cost only. He stated further that the annual contributions amounted to $12,000 more per family dwelling unit, which makes a total of $17,000.

Mr. HAWKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. HAWKS. May I ask the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Crawford] if that farm income was a cash income or a total income, because there is a considerable difference?

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is the cash annual income for a family of four.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Let me make the further point, that whether you agree with those figures or not, and it seems to me you will, I hope you will agree with the fundamental idea presented by this amendment, namely, that people who live in $3,500 homes should not be required to buy more expensive places for slum-dwelling families. Maybe I should add that while this program is designed to take care of slum dwellers, it misses that target in the final analysis, because the cost is so great and the rent is so high, despite Government subsidy, that slum families cannot afford to live in them.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr.

Mr. Chairman, the Housing Act itself places a limit of $4,000 per dwelling unit. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WHITE] wants to reduce this to $3,500. Last Friday he made a speech here in which he claimed that the average family unit under the U.S. H. A. program costs $5,520 plus $12,910 for the annual contribution, which makes a total of $18,430 per family dwelling unit. The gentleman well knows what took place at the hearings, insofar as that question was concerned. In some parts of the country the cost will be more than $3,500. However, the Housing Authority has kept this cost down. The highest has been about $3,800, which is in Buffalo. The average is approximately $3,087. The average for private buildings is about $3,685.

Mr. Chairman, if this amendment is agreed to, certain sections of the country will be prevented from getting the benefit of the Housing Act.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WHITE] also made reference to the taxpayers in his State paying for slum clearance in New York and Chicago. When the housing bill was passed the sum of $800,000,000 was authorized for slum clearance plus $28,000,000 a year as a subsidy from the Government. The $800,000,000 is to be paid in 60 years with interest at 3 percent. The United States Housing Authority borrowed this money at the rate of 1% percent. This spread between 1% percent, the present cost of money to United States Housing Authority, and 3 percent, being the interest rate paid to the Authority for money it lends, is equivalent to $9,240,000, which, deducted from the $28,000,000, leaves a net annual cost to the Federal Government of $18,760,000 to bring light, air, and happiness to the children living in the slums not only in the State of New York but throughout the country. In the gentleman's own State of Ohio an allotment of $72,038,000 has been asked for slum clearance, and the total amount earmarked for that State is $64,584,000. Twenty-two States have been allocated contributions. Read the table on page 130 of the hearings and see what your State is asking.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman

Mr. FITZPATRICK. In just a minute.

Yet the gentleman criticizes the State of New York, which contributes over 25 percent of the taxes paid to the Federal Government. The State of New York asks very little from the taxpayers of this country, but I believe that State should receive the same consideration as the other States receive throughout the country.

I should like to ask the gentleman from Ohio and other Members how they voted on the Treasury-Post Office appropriation bill when it was before the House about 2 weeks ago? I could not get the subsidy given to second-, third-, and fourth-class mail for 1939, but in 1938 it cost the taxpayers of this country for second-class mail $89,608,278.20; for thirdclass mail, $23,352,987.75; and for fourth-class mail, $16,969,-837.46, the total of all being $129,931,103.41, and there was no objection to that subsidy. The Government has contributed annually for the last 5 years an average of $274,425,000 for roads, $479,100,000 for agriculture, and $76,373,000 for aviation, and then the gentleman criticizes the city of New York and other localities throughout the country because they are trying to clear out their slums.

I want to say to the Committee that I and the other Democratic Members from the State of New York have voted for most every appropriation requested by the agricultural States. I do not feel I was elected to represent the city of New York alone, but that I was elected to represent the entire 48 States. How have I voted? I have voted for appropriations for Montana, Wyoming, Idaho, Washington, Oregon, California, New Mexico, Alabama, and Tennessee, and most every other State where I thought they needed public improvements, and will continue as a Member of this House to do so. plause.] It is unbelievable that Members should stand up here and advocate destroying a subsidy of only $18,760,000 a year to bring relief to the people in the slums, not of my city alone but of 75 different communities in the United States. [Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. FITZPATRICK. I yield to the gentleman from Wash-

Mr. LEAVY. May I ask the gentleman this: If this limitation cutting the amount per unit from $4,000 to $3,000 prevails, would that not mean by reason of the high cost of real estate in the populous eastern cities that the development of the projects in cities like Chicago, Detroit, Cleveland, Baltimore, New York, and Boston would be almost stopped?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEAVY] is correct.

Let me say to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. White] that last year there was $37,000,000 earmarked for the State of Ohio, and $16,000,000 for the State of New York outstanding.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio. Mr. WHITE of Ohio. By citing what Ohio has got from this project the gentleman is merely proving not that I oppose it because it has to do with New York but that I am willing to oppose it even when it comes to Ohio.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The gentleman did not say so last week. The gentleman mentioned New York City.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. I said "Ohio" just now. Mr. FITZPATRICK. The gentleman said he did not want the taxpayers of Ohio paying for slum clearance in New York City. That is what the gentleman said.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. I said I did not want them to pay in Podunk or in Norwalk.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I am willing to pay for slum clearance in Ohio or in any State in the Union that needs it. I have tried to help the farmers and business in every part of this country, and will continue to do so while I am a Member of this House. [Applause.]

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. The gentleman is misquoting my statement.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. We in New York pay 25 percent or over of the entire amount of taxes paid in the United States, and we ask for less than any other State in the Union. Therefore, I appeal to the Members to vote down this amendment and bring sunshine, light, and happiness to the children of the slums throughout our country. [Applause,]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I come from a city where we have two housing projects now. One project, known as the Central Cedar project, is built on a site where people lived who paid $10 to $12 a month rent. This slum clearance eliminated that section entirely and the residents of it had to move out. The people who did live in that territory moved into other sections of the city and created new problems there.

When the project was completed and ready for occupancy we found that apartments in it could not be rented for less than $25, so the people whom the project was intended to benefit were not benefited at all. They are living in other parts of the city.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I will yield in just a moment. I shall complete my statement in just another minute or so.

Frankly, those living in the project are people who are working and able to pay anywhere from $25 to $40 a month rent. Not one of the families living in the project today lived in that area before the Government removed the former residents from that section and moved them elsewhere. The people whom the project was intended to help are not being helped at all. The poor people of the community, whose condition was to be improved because of this project, find their condition has not been improved at all, while others are benefiting and taking advantage of the expenditure of your money and my money, because we are having to pay the difference between the cost of the project, the carrying charges, and the price these people are paying to live there.

All of us have a Christian philosophy and have a desire to help the poor people, but I believe it is essential that all of us understand this project is not helping the fellow we want to help. We want to help the fellow who previously lived in the slum area to live under better conditions.

Now, certainly the amendment that is offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WHITE] restricting the cost to $3,500, makes it possible for the poor fellow to live in a better surrounding so that he can pay his $10 or $12 or $15 a month and live under better conditions. What can be wrong with that? If you increase the cost of the project and you make it prohibitive for the poor fellow to live there, you are not helping the man you want to help at all. [Applause.]

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield.

Mr. KELLER. Is this in Cincinnati? Mr. BENDER. I am speaking of Cleveland.

Mr. KELLER. May this not be an unfortunate thing there and very fortunate at some other place? In other words, may not the conditions vary, which would make it a success somewhere else?

Mr. BENDER. You cannot possibly help the fellow who needs it most if you provide an expense beyond what the carrying charges will allow.

Mr. KELLER. May not that vary very greatly in different

Mr. BENDER. I believe it might.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman vield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Does the gentleman realize that the average rent paid today, after they complete a slum clearance, is $13.80 in the southern part of the country and $16.80 in the northern part, and may I also ask the gentleman this question?—How could the people live in the slum area while they were improving it? It was necessary for them to move out, and the people that they bring in are investigated. and they are people who receive a salary of from $450 to

Mr. BENDER. I do not know what the experience has been in any other part of the country.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Investigate and find out the truth.

Mr. BENDER. I am citing the circumstances in my home city, and there is not a person who lived in this so-called slum area who is living there today, because he cannot rent a place for less than $25 and his income will not warrant his paying that kind of rental.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman

Mr. BENDER. I yield.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Is not the conduct of the work and the renting of the apartments in this particular project. controlled by the local housing authority?

Mr. BENDER. I cannot keep up with all of the various agencies that control these things.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. It is the Cleveland housing authority, is it not?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I was just going to ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes on this housing matter.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to be unreasonable and I wish to give everybody an opportunity to talk, but unless we can agree on the time for debate we are not going to be able to come anywhere near getting through this evening.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 40

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, in discussing the Federal housing program and as evidence of the tremendous extravagance practiced therein, I want to call the attention of the committee to a very interesting article which appeared in the Washington Herald a few days ago in the column of Paul Mallon, which

Mr. Roosevelt may get a pointed tip on economizing from the Vice President if he can get Mr. Garner to tell about the Garner low-cost housing project.

It seems Mr. Garner, who believes in getting a dollar's worth for a dollar, has some scattered land near his home in Uvalde and decided to do some resettling and low-cost housing of his own on it.

A Government F. H. A. house was being built a mile and a half out of town for $2,700 as a demonstration. It was last summer. Garner had nothing to do. So he decided to try his hand and see what he could do.

The result was the Vice President built his houses for just about

The result was the Vice President built his houses for just about half the cost of the F. H. A. house, is renting them for less than half as much, and making 15 percent profit while F. H. A. is breaking even or losing money.

This private Garner low-cost housing project to date has completed 17 houses and several more are under way. The average cost so far has been $1,500, but chiefly because two or three tenants wanted sleeping porches, and this ran the cost of these few places up to $1,800 each, thus lifting the average. All the houses have garages and modern conveniences. garages and modern conveniences.

Mr. Garner's houses rent for $10 to $15 per month, while the F. H. A. house rents for $27.50. One tenant in a $15 house sends a check for $7.50 every 2 weeks to the Vice President and generally makes some pleasant personal reference to his "landlord."

I thought, Mr. Chairman, this would be of interest to the membership of the House, in view of the difference in cost of construction, as well as the difference in rental charge, where the construction is done by private interests.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am very much interested in this Garner private housing authority, to which the gentleman has called attention. Did I understand the gentleman to say that the cost was $1,500 per room or per family unit?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. The cost was $1,500 per house, which compares with a house which costs the Federal Government $2,750.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Does the gentleman know whether or not that includes the cost of the land?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I do not know about that; but it seems to me we need a man in charge of this housing program who has some of the same conceptions of economy that our Vice President has practiced in this instance. [Appleuse]

Mr. CRAWFORD. In looking at the hearings I find that at page 195 Mr. Straus testified that the total cost of a family unit—and I understand, although this is subject to correction, that this is where they throw a great mass of family units together, thereby materially reducing the cost—the cost per family unit is $5,484 as against the Garner $1,500 plan.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Correct.

Mr. CRAWFORD. So I think we should ask for a merger of some kind

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. We need a man of John Garner's economy concept in charge of this Housing Administration.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I think so.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I voted for this slum-clearance legislation, but from the information I have received, it is costing entirely too much, and I fear that in the end the people we intended to benefit will not be able to take advantage of the program as administered. It is only fair to state that the incident to which I have called attention was a Federal housing project and not a project under the United States Housing Act. However, it does afford a comparison of the relative difference in cost when construction is by the Federal Government and a private citizen. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Crawford] is recognized for 4 minutes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, the matter under consideration this afternoon is a part of the $16,000,000,000 housing program referred to by the President in his message of November 27, 1937, at which time in that message he said:

An average of 600,000 to 800,000 dwelling units ought to be built annually over the next 5 years. We could build over the next 5 years three or four million housing units, which, at a moderate estimate of $4,000 per unit, would mean spending from twelve to sixteen billion dollars.

I find this afternoon from the testimony on page 195 that the cost per family unit is running about $5,484, which is including the $84 unit for land, as against the President's figure of $4,000 per unit. There is one proviso in this bill that I am very much interested in, and that is on page 3, section 4, of the original act, which provides that the Administrator may, subject to the civil-service laws and the Classification Act, as amended, appoint and fix the compensation of such employees as may be necessary for the proper performance of the duties of the Authority under this act, except that without regard to the civil-service laws he may appoint such officers, attorneys, and experts, and so forth. In going through the hearings I find where Mr. Straus testified that out of a total of employees he has 897 under the civil service and 721 above the civil service.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. That illustrates what can happen when you leave the gates open in an act providing that an administrator can make his selection without regard to the civil-service law. The Administrator has the power to make this selection. Where they get the idea of designating these people as above the civil service I do not know.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I decline to yield. I cannot understand where the language comes from that puts these people above civil service. Note that peculiar language. Would the civil-service employees consider themselves below those not on civil-service rolls?

There is another statement in these hearings that interests me very much, and that is to the effect that $516,000 is to be spent for traveling in connection with these housing projects. Perhaps it would be much less expensive if we established two or three branch offices throughout the United States and eliminate some of this excessive travel expense which is necessary, apparently, to carry on these operations.

I hope the committee, in due course, will look into that

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I decline to yield. I suggest that you turn to pages 179 to 191 of the hearings and study that extraordinary list of employees who are not covered under civil service. Notice that family which has been created. Notice the salaries, the jobs, and the locations. Check and see how many of them were selected from your State. I understand there is a proviso in the civil-service law to the effect that States shall have participation. Check and see what your participation is.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. Lord] for 4 minutes.

Mr. LORD. Mr. Chairman, I rise rather to support my friend from New York [Mr. Fitzpatrick]; that is, if we are really building residence units as low as $3,000, as he suggests.

I was surprised to hear that we were building any of these units at such reasonable prices as $3,000. I suppose the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. White] had been led to believe they all cost much more, on account of some of the projects he may have visited out near Washington. I happened to call on one outside of Washington, where there are housing units that cost from $16,000 to $22,000 per unit, that are renting from $28 to $42 a month. We of New York State, of course, do not expect to build any such expensive buildings as that. I find that the average building cost is nearly double the $3,000 figure, or nearly $6,000. And in New York City I doubt if they can be constructed for even $10,000 per unit.

Of course, as far as the building units in New York City are concerned, I do not know as I quite agree with the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZPATRICK], because there will always be people coming into New York City to fill up the houses, no matter how many they construct. I think they should go out in the country, in the wide-open spaces, and build some houses, give the people a little land, and let them dig out their own living. So long as we furnish houses and maintain the occupants, we will be able to fill them.

I was surprised the other day, as I looked around in Washington, when I found some Government construction of apartments for the colored people. They were nice houses. They are out by the Anacostia River. They are nice; but the people are just boxed up, one on top of the other, four or five stories high, and they do not have enough room to dig worms to go fishing. How much better would it have been to take them out 18 or 20 miles from Washington, where the Government has some 18,000 acres of land, the majority of which they are putting to no use. Why would it not have been better to build some houses out there, instead of in the city of Washington, because if they do not have a job they have to take care of them anyway?

I visited a project down in the neighboring State of Virginia. I think the Government has done one of the wise things down there, if wisdom it be. They set aside 30 acres of land for each family; built them a nice house and barn. The expense is many thousands of dollars. They gave them a flock of chickens, a pig, two cows, a horse, and these nice buildings. Then they pay them $20 a month to run the farm. You see, the Government owns the little farms but are to sell them later. No price has been set which they are to pay, and they do not know when they are to commence paying or when they get title to the farms. The fault the people find is that they say the pay it not enough; that they cannot live on $20 a month; that they have to have more money. Our farmers in my State are not so fortunate as to have a farm furnished and a monthly payment even of $20. I do not see anything in this bill that is going to give more money to people located out like this, but I believe it would be better to build modest homes in the country, with a few acres of land, where they can raise at least a part of their living than it would be to give them expensive places in the city where we have to take care of them.

There are coming into the city of New York all the time thousands and thousands of people. No matter how many houses and apartments they build, they will all be filled before we get them ready.

As the previous speaker said, we are not giving any better houses to the poor people. After you get these new houses built the rent is so great that they cannot afford to rent them. They must go somewhere else to get some other place with lower rents, and the poor still live where they can, under conditions with little or no improvement. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts

[Mr. Luce] is recognized for 4 minutes.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, one of the most ungracious things a man can do is to say "I told you so." Yet there comes a time when it is necessary. There were members of the Committee on Banking and Currency who told the committee that this thing would happen. They told the House this thing would happen; but neither in the committee nor in the House would anybody listen. We told them that you would not do anything for the poor people of this country. told you that your law would not help clear the slums without creating other slums. We told you that no man earning less than $1,000 a year would get any benefit from this legislation. The thing has happened. I can endorse in my own locality precisely what the gentleman from Ohio told you. In my own locality there are two of these projects for the poor; allegedly for the poor. They got votes by reason of the claim that they were for the poor. In one of them only 1 of 10 of the families that formerly lived on the site now live in the new buildings. There are those living there who keep automobiles, there are Government clerks, postal employees, policemen, firemen, and others of like earning power. There is not a poor man who lives there, not a man whose income is below that of two-thirds of the people of this country. Therein is the great weakness of this law; therein is the injustice in this law, injustice not only to the poor who have been dispossessed but injustice to the well-to-do who are taxed to house people who can afford to pay for their own housing.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. LUCE. I beg the gentleman's pardon, I have not time. If you want to clear slums, if you do not want to create other slums, if you want to carry this reform where England has carried it, if you want to improve the condition of the poor, if you want the light, the air, and the cheerfulness that the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fitzpatrick] asks, you will do what the other gentleman from New York [Mr. Lord] asked, build small homes out in the country where land prices will permit, where the poor can live, where they can grow some part of their own living, where they can have light, and air and cheer, and good health. Then you will be doing something. Today you subsidize the few at the expense of the many, and you subsidize people who are fortunate enough to be able to build houses of their own if they will. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. Ford] for 4 minutes.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Chairman-

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. I yield.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Answering the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Crawford] about persons not under civil service, the United States Housing Authority took over 1,577 employees from the P. W. A. that were not under civil service. Every statement made here this afternoon by the Republican Members refer to P. W. A. projects, not to United States Housing projects, because not one of these has been completed yet. The rent will be from only $12 to $16 per month when they are completed.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Chairman, calling attention to a statement made by the distinguished gentleman from Ohio, I think he was perfectly honest in making it, but he is mistaken. The project in Cleveland that he referred to is an old P. W. A. project. It is not under the United States Housing Authority, was not built by them, because they have not built anything yet. Those buildings were erected at a time when we had a program designed to give employment and to buy materials. They paid good wages and bought materials lavishly. They put large amounts of money into those buildings, but that is not the slum clearance United States Housing project that is under consideration at this time.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman vield?

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. I am sorry, but I cannot.

Ohio has been allotted, under the United States Housing Authority, something over \$15,000,000. I find also, Mr. Chairman, that the rental rates in those Ohio projects, when they are built, will be as follows: Cincinnati, Cleveland, Toledo, Columbus, and Dayton are in the higher brackets, and the rent will be \$4.25 per room. There is one at Zanesville which will be \$3.50 per room. We have another at Warren, Ohio, which will be \$3.75 per room. This means \$15 to \$17 per month for a four-room apartment. This is the type of structure the United States Housing Authority is going to erect, and this is the range of rentals that will be charged. The reason such low rentals can be charged is because the United States Housing Authority allocates to these projects an annual subsidy of $3\frac{1}{2}$ percent of the total cost.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Hawks] for 4 minutes.

Mr. HAWKS. Mr. Chairman, I cannot stand here as did the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Luce] and say, "I told you so," because I happen to be a new Member; but I can say "amen" to what he said.

It is very easy for me, as it is for the gentleman from New York, to stand here and shed big tears over the poor people in New York City, particularly those in the slums; but it is very much easier for me to cry over the kids living on the farms in the Middle West, kids I know intimately who do not have steam heat, or hot air, who have not the advantages of bathtubs and running water, who must get up in the morning in a cold garret, go down and build a fire and wait for that fire to get going before they can get warm these cold winter mornings. All the sympathy that you fellows have been dishing out down here for the last 6 years has been going right over the heads of the people out home.

Why has none of this Federal Housing aid, why has none of these huge building projects considered the poor people on the farms in our great middle western territory instead of being confined to the cities? [Applause.] I think the answer is quite evident. There is no question in my midbut what the "big shots" operating in this field could not see any opportunity for their financial advancement in picking out one little lonesome farmer at a time in the Middle West.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWKS. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I challenge the remarks made by the gentleman on the other side a few moments ago. Turn to page 195 and you will find where Mr. Straus, the Administrator, testified that the cost of the new housing is $5,484. I am not talking about P. W. A. or W. P. A.; I am talking about his new operations set forth here.

Insofar as the civil service is concerned, if you will turn to the original act which has not been amended in the meantime you will find that my remarks relative thereto were correct and based on facts. So are my remarks with reference to the cost per family unit.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. HAWKS. I cannot yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman yield for a further observation?

Mr. HAWKS. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The National Resources Committee report of May 27, 1938, shows that there are 23,349,944 families in the United States with an income of less than $1,250 per annum. I have not been able to find where any of those 23,000,000 families can get access to the Federal housing program or the national housing program.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO].

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZPATRICK].

Mr. FITZPATRICK. May I say to the gentleman from Michigan that not one project has been completed. He was referring to the P. W. A.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, the argument made by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Hawks], whereby he sought to array the farmers of the country against the dwellers in the large cities and the wage earners of America, the argument by which he sought to keep these two important groups apart, is by no means new. It is a very, very old argument. In fact, it is shop-worn. It is the stratagem which is typical and characteristic of those who at all times have opposed anything which is progressive, anything which is humanitarian, and anything which is for the benefit of the American people.

We who come from the industrial sections say to those who come from the agricultural sections that the interests of the farmer and the worker in the city are essentially interdependent; that when the American worker in the factory receives a decent wage and lives in a decent home he is able to purchase the products of the American farmer, thereby enhancing the welfare of the American farmer and his family. The future of America rests on the unity of farmer and worker and on their mutual assistance.

However, it is the same old story. It is now used against slum clearance and Government housing. It was used against workmen's compensation laws; it was used against social-security legislation; it was used against health laws; and it has always been used by reactionaries in their effort to stem the progress of our country; array farmer versus city wage earner to defeat legislation for the benefit of the wage earner; array city wage earner versus farmer to defeat legislation for the benefit of the farmer. However, the farmer and the worker are not easily fooled any longer by this game. More and more are they becoming conscious of this old scheme by which they have been sold tickets to a lottery which is never drawn.

Mr. Chairman, those of us who have fought, and will continue to fight, for welfare legislation take the position that whenever we are presented with a proposal which will be of benefit to the farmers of this country, we will support that proposal because we recognize that the welfare of the man who works in the factory is dependent also on the welfare of the man who works in the field.

We are opposed to division. We seek national unity. Now, what is this amendment under consideration? On the surface the amendment proposes to limit the cost per housing unit to $3,500. The demagogy advanced is that it will cut down rents on these projects. Is anyone so naive as to believe that by limiting the cost per unit to $3,500, instead of to $4,000, it will in any manner affect the rent of these units? The $500 difference makes no difference whatever in the rents to be charged. It does, however, make a great difference in the program of the United States Housing Authority which is now under way. It scuttles this program. It is a body blow to genuine slum clearance. This is the real purpose behind this amendment. If you are opposed to slum clearance, stand up and say so. If you do not want Government housing, stand up and say so. If you want to abolish the housing program, stand up and say so. But do not do it by sniping. Do not do it by indirection. Do not do it by proposing this amendment, which will cripple housing.

I call upon every friend of slum clearance and Government housing to vote against the amendment.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Buck). The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SMITH] for 4 minutes.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to granting to the United States Housing Authority one more penny to pay the rent of people who are already able to pay their rent and to perpetuate one of the worst political rackets in the United States.

There is no more vicious piece of legislation on the statute books than this United States Housing Act. It reeks with deception through and through. If the people understood it they would not tolerate it for a single minute.

Plainly, it is a political racket of the first order.

I understand there is a bill up before the Ohio Legislature to abolish the housing authority of my State, and I hope it passes.

Last year, an election year, the housing authority tried to operate its racket in my own city, Marion, Ohio. A press release, early last year, by certain gentlemen who were seeking to be reelected to high public office, announced that the Federal Government was ready to make a gift to the city of Marion of a million dollars to build a slum clearance project. There was the usual political propaganda that ordinarily goes with things of this kind. Certain parties connected with the H. O. L. C. were especially busy. But the thing needed at that time in Marion more than anything else was votes. And a million dollars ought to buy a lot of votes.

Up to that time Marion was not aware that she had any slums. A slum is defined in Webster's Dictionary as:

A foul back street of a city, especially one filled with a poor, dirty, degraded and often vicious population; any low neighborhood or dark retreat; usually in the plural; as Westminster's slums are haunts of thieves.

I got the housing law and read it. I saw the evil in it. I explained it to my fellow citizens in Marion. I asked them to go slow in permitting our fair city to be blackened with one of these housing projects. Our people became aroused when they learned the truth.

Our city council voted almost unanimously to reject any housing scheme under this act for both the present and the future.

Certain areas in Marion were staked off by the parties interested in getting a housing project for Marion. The poor people of those sections called upon me as their mayor to rescue them from the clutches of what they believed to be a beast descending upon them. They asked me to help them save their homes, to keep them from being driven out into the street. This I did with the result that one little city in the United States, Marion, Ohio, threw a million-dollar political slush fund back into the faces of the politicians here in Washington.

The Housing Act pretends that these houses are built for the poorest people. That is untrue, as anyone who has made a study of the question knows. What happens is that the poorest people are driven out of the areas on to the streets and the houses become occupied by people who are already able to pay their rent.

This is what has happened in every instance where houses have been built in the so-called slum areas.

What right have we here in Congress to pass laws permitting a thing of this kind?

One of the deceptions in this housing law is that the rent paid is used to liquidate interest and capital invested. The interest and capital invested in the project is liquidated by the appropriation this bill calls for.

The Government takes away from the taxpayers, say, a million dollars, to build one of these housing projects, and then reaches into the taxpayers' pockets for another million dollars to pay it off.

But the scheme touches the bottom of perfidy in that the poor people are driven out of their homes onto the streets and then are compelled to pay taxes to help pay the rent of their more fortunate brethren who are already well able to pay their rent.

Who in this House will defend that? [Applause.]

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair cannot recognize the gentleman for that purpose at this time.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CARTER. What is the situation at this time?

The CHAIRMAN. The time on this paragraph has been limited to 40 minutes, with the understanding that those Members who were on their feet at the time the agreement was reached would be recognized.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts

[Mr. McCormack] for 2½ minutes.
Mr. McCormack. Mr. Chairman, I respect thoroughly the remarks made by the last speaker. The gentleman is frankly opposed to low-cost housing, and when the gentleman takes the floor and states frankly that he takes the position of complete opposition, even in disagreement, we respect him for his frankness. He presents a clearcut issue. The gentleman who has just spoken is not engaged in any sniping tactics. He is opposed, and he frankly states he is opposed, to low-cost housing and he gives his reasons.

Mr. Chairman, I do not agree with the gentleman. I am in favor of this program. I have seen it in operation. There is a project in my district in which there is an excess of 1.000 apartments. I deny the charge that "it is a political racket," as made by the previous speaker. I deny that that is a fair accusation to make. The project in my district has certainly been conducted with care. Of course, like everything else, it is dependent upon the administration. The man who is manager of the project in my district has been very careful in selecting those families that it was intended to serve, and we have had none of the complaints as stated by my distinguished friend from Massachusetts [Mr. Luce]. I do not *know whether there is any justification for what he said with reference to the project in Cambridge, but, speaking for the project in my own district, there are absolutely no complaints, because those in charge took care to see that the families it was intended to serve were the ones to receive favorable consideration.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. In just a moment.

I wish to make one more observation with reference to rent. The rent appears to some to be high, but the rental includes all costs-not only the basic rent, but heating, electricity, and everything else. So when we look into the factors that make up the rent we find that the basic rent that would be ordinarily charged if these other considerations of heat and electricity were not involved is such that the families intended to be served do receive the benefits Congress intended them to receive.

This program has been, in the main, a very good one. It serves a very useful purpose. These projects do not compete with homes constructed through the investment of private capital for people who are capable of paying rent for them if the managers of the projects do their duty as they should and if the projects are administered right. This comes down to the basic reason for the success of any law. The best law in the world is a bad one if administered improperly, and the poorest law you and I could draft would become a good one if administered properly.

The pending amendment is an attack on this program. I contend the program has done good work. I hope the amendment will not be agreed to. It will interfere seriously with the future operation of the program. Mr. Straus has been doing fine work. He is eliminating many inefficiencies of the past. Under his guidance the United States Housing Authority has been perfecting itself and is being administered in a manner which is highly commendable. He is a man of ability, knows his work, a man of courage and vision, ideally fitted for this humane program and its administration, and is possessed of a sound, practical mind, so essential to its success.

I now yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SIROVICH. I call to the attention of the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts that in the city of New York wherever the United States Housing Authority has built apartments there are 300 applicants for every vacant apartment.

Mr. McCORMACK. I do not know whether the figure is as high as that in Boston. I know that my friend understands the conditions that exist in New York. His observations show the importance of continuing this program without limitations such as this amendment proposes and will accomplish. However, the fact remains that we are all human beings, and imperfections are bound to exist. All I can say, speaking for the project in my district-and some groups certainly put pressure upon me to try to stop it at the outset. although I resisted the pressure—is that the chairman of the Boston Housing Authority, the members of the local authority, the manager, and those associated with them have done a wonderful job. I said to the manager when he was appointed:

I want you to make a thorough investigation. I want you to be sure that no applicant is approved if he is not entitled to go in there in accordance with the intent of the Congress. I do not care who asks you, if I ask you or anyone else asks you, I want you to say "no." I want you to make an investigation, so that after you have done your job you can present the facts to anyone—newspapers, organizations, men in public life, or individuals, anyone—and show by your investigation that those whose applications have been approved are the persons the Congress intended to be served.

That work has been ably done so far as the project in my district is concerned.

This amendment will be harmful. I hope the amendment will be defeated. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired. All time has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WHITE].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. White of Ohio) there were—ayes 98, noes 78.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I demand

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed as tellers Mr. Johnson of Oklahoma and Mr. White of Ohio.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were-ayes 107, noes 92.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

GENERAL EXPENSES

For transportation and incidental expenses of officers and clerks of the Bureau of Indian Affairs when traveling on official duty; for radio, telegraph, and telephone toll messages on business pertaining to the Indian Service sent and received by the Bureau of Indian Affairs at Washington, and for other necessary expenses of the Indian Service for which no other appropriation is available, exp. 500.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, at the suggestion of one of the distinguished minority Members, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the entire portion of the bill relating to the Bureau of Indian Affairs be dispensed with. It is my understanding there are just one or two controversial items in that entire portion.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I believe it would be very inadvisable for the House of Representatives to dispense with the reading of a portion of a general appropriation bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I may say to the gentleman that, of course, it will be printed in the RECORD. I may also say the suggestion did not come from this side of the aisle.

Mr. TABER. I believe it would be very bad to have the news go out to the country that the House of Representatives was dispensing with the reading of a portion of a general appropriation bill. I would not consent to such a practice on any general appropriation bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Of course, the gentleman understands this has been done many times in the past.

Mr. TABER. Not with my consent.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. If there is any objection, I shall withdraw my request.

Mr. TABER. I shall have to object, Mr. Chairman.

The Clerk read as follows:

For lease, purchase, construction, repair, and improvement of agency buildings, exclusive of hospital buildings, including the purchase of necessary lands for agency purposes and the installation, repair, and improvement of heating, lighting, power, and sewerage and water systems in connection therewith, $200,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be available for the construction of any building the total cost of which is in excess of $1,500.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Griswold: On page 22, line 14, after "$1,500", strike out the period and insert a colon and the following proviso: "Provided jurther, That no part of this appropriation shall be available for the tearing down or removal of any building or buildings at the Federal Indian School at Tomah, Wis."

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment in the interest of economy and the preservation of property now owned by the Federal Government. The Tomah Boarding School and Hospital represents an investment of around $500,000 of Federal funds. Because of the temporary shortage of students and because of the ability of the State public schools to absorb additional pupils, the school has been closed for the time being. In a letter from the Office of Indian Affairs on March 9, 1939, they state:

A plan has been proposed for the assignment to Indian families in need of rehabilitation of small tracts of the school farm and the utilization of salvage materials from the old boarding-school plant in the construction of suitable homes and farm buildings for these Indian families.

I do not believe this Congress wants to allow the destruction of any such valuable institution until every effort has been made to put the school to a suitable use. This amendment simply prevents the destruction of the school until adequate time and study can be made for its future use. This amendment preserves an institution the Department has, and I hope the amendment will be accepted by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, the committee has no objection to the pending amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the development, under the direction of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, of Indian arts and crafts, as authorized by the act of August 27, 1935 (49 Stat. 891), including personal services, purchase and transportation of equipment and supplies, purchase of periodicals, directories, and books of reference, purchase and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, telegraph and telephone services, cost of packing, crating, drayage, and transportation of personal effects of employees upon permanent change of station, expenses of exhibits and of attendance at meetings concerned with the development of Indian arts and crafts, traveling expenses, including payment of actual transportation expenses and not to exceed $10 per diem in lieu of subsistence and other expenses of members of the Indian Arts and Crafts Board, serving without other compensation from the United States, while absent from their homes, not to exceed $2,500 for printing and binding, and other necessary expenses, $42,500, of which not to exceed $16,000 shall be available for personal services in the District of Columbia: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used to pay any salary at a rate exceeding $7,500 per annum.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the language "not to exceed $10 per diem", in line 3, page 36.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Committee will return to page 36, line 3, and the gentleman will state his point of order.

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this changes existing law and is not authorized by law. This is an attempt to raise the per diem allowance that might be paid to these people to $10 a day, which is contrary to the statutes of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman limit his point of order to the $10 per diem, or does he make the point of order against the entire paragraph?

Mr. TABER. I just make it to the particular language reading:

And not to exceed $10 per diem in lieu of subsistence and other expenses of members of the Indian Arts and Crafts Board.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I concede the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to have a complete understanding about the language objected to.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I am not making a point of order against the language "including payment of actual transportation expenses." My point of order is made against the words "and not to exceed $10 per diem in lieu of subsistence and other expenses of members of the Indian Arts and Crafts Board, serving without other compensation from the United States, while absent from their homes."

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Rich: On page 35, line 8, after the figures "1967", strike out "$400,000" and insert "$300,000."

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, this would represent a saving of $100,000 and represents money that has been given for the Indian Bureau to purchase lands in the various States for the Indians in particular locations.

It has come to the attention of the committee that in the State of New Mexico they do not want the Indian Service to go in there and buy up any more State land. Other States have asked that they do not come into their localities and purchase additional lands for these Indian tribes. It deprives them of taxes to operate their States.

We have set up a revolving fund in the Indian Bureau and we are simply adding to that fund, and it seems to me we are adding a greater amount than is necessary because of the fact that so many States have made the statement that they do not want these lands purchased. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee how much money is in the fund at the present time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I will state to the gentleman that, in the first place, he is speaking about a different amendment and is not speaking on the paragraph to which he has offered an amendment.

Mr. RICH. On page 35?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. That is a loan fund and is not for the purchase of land at all.

Mr. RICH. That is a loan fund of the Indian Bureau to make these purchases of lands?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. No; that item is on page 26.

Mr. RICH. Is that the amount of $550,000?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. That is correct and the amount was cut $200,000 by the committee.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my amendment, but I would like to make this statement to the members of the Committee.

Many of the States are not desirous of increasing this fund, and while the committee did cut it $200,000, I question very much, if we permit it to go in this year, whether next year we ought to increase that amount at all, even though the law permits it.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I would like to ask the gentleman what his attitude would be with respect to providing that this $400,000 and the other money that is in this revolving fund for making loans to Indians may be made available to all Indians on reservations that have accepted the act of June 18, 1934, regardless of whether they have incorporated or not? There are many reservations that do not have any opportunity to get any of this money.

Mr. RICH. I will say to my colleague from South Dakota that the Indian Bureau is better able to determine whether they should be made to those Indians who comply with the act or not, and I must admit that I cannot give him an answer, because I think the Indian Bureau that we have set up for the purpose of administering the affairs of the Indians is better able to judge that, and I shall have to leave that to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Of course, the gentleman would not feel there should be any discrimination in the granting of these loans.

Mr. RICH. I do not think there should be any discrimination, but if the Secretary of the Interior and the head of the Indian Bureau believe that act should be enforced, I think we will have to accept their decision in the matter.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

There was no objection. The Clerk read as follows:

In all, $3,064,000, to be immediately available, which amount, together with the unexpended balances of funds made available under this head in the Interior Department Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1939, shall remain available until June 30, 1940: Provided, That the foregoing amounts may be used interchangeably in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, but not more than 10 percent of any specific amount shall be transferred to any other amount, and no appropriation shall be increased by more than 15 percent. more than 15 percent.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 35 for the purpose of offering an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Case of South Dakota: Page 35, line 4, strike out the words "chartered corporations in accordance with" and insert "reservations that have accepted."

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, the language of the present act limits the availability of these loans to chartered corporations on Indian reservations. That is under the act of June 18, 1934. There are many reservations that have accepted the act of 1934, have voted for it, have officers elected under it, and have constitutions, but it is impossible for them to agree to the technical details of a chartered corporation, and this amendment simply places all reservations that have accepted the act on an equal basis and makes them eligible to receive loans from the revolving loan

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. RICH. Why is it that the Indians cannot incorporate?

Why should they not incorporate?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Incorporation is not needed to establish an effective basis or status for administering the loans, but if you have reservations embracing two or three or four counties, and several thousand Indians, it is difficult for them to incorporate because it is difficult for them to understand all of the technical details of corporate law. The result is that those who are unable to understand the details of corporate organization vote against the incorporation, because of some misunderstanding. As a consequence the smaller reservations incorporate and get loans while the larger ones do not and are left out. These loans when finally made are available to the individual Indians, and the requirement of incorporation simply results in discrimination in the application and availability of the loans today.

Mr. RICH. Does the gentleman think the Indian Bureau would approve this amendment?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I have talked with individuals in the office and they have expressed sympathy for it as a solution of a very difficult problem.

Mr. RICH. Would they recommend or have they recommended it?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I cannot say that they are on record as having recommended it, but this morning I talked with one of the officials in the Indian Office who has to administer this law and he said it would solve a difficult problem if something like this could be done.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Reindeer industry, Alaska: For the purchase, in such manner as the Secretary of the Interior shall deem advisable and without regard to sections 3709 and 3744 of the Revised Statutes, of reindeer, abbatoirs, cold-storage plants, corrais, and other buildings, and communication and other equipment, owned by nonnatives in Alaska, as authorized by the act of September 1, 1937 (50 Stat. 900), $820,000; and for necessary administrative expenses in connection with such purchase and the establishment and development of the reindeer industry for the benefit of the Eskimos and other natives of Alaska, as authorized by said act, including personal services in the District of Columbia (not to exceed $2,300) and elsewhere, traveling expenses, erection, repair, and maintenance of corrals, fences, and other facilities, $250,000; in all $1,070,000, to be immediately available: Provided, That under this appropriation not exceeding an average of $4 per head shall be paid for reindeer purchased from nonnative owners: Provided further, That the foregoing limitation shall not apply to the purchase of reindeer located on Nunivak Island. regard to sections 3709 and 3744 of the Revised Statutes, of reinreindeer located on Nunivak Island.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the paragraph on the ground that it is legislation on an appropriation bill unauthorized by law. In fact, the language clearly indicates that it repeals the specific provisions of existing law as incorporated in sections 3709 and 3744 of the Revised Statutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma desire to be heard?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. No; I concede the point of

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Johnson of Oklahoma: Page 60, line

Amendment offered by Mr. Johnson of Okianoma: Page 60, line 23, insert a new paragraph, as follows:
"Reindeer industry, Alaska: For the purchase, in such manner as the Secretary of the Interior shall deem advisable, of reindeer, abbatoirs, cold-storage plants, corrals and other buildings, and communication and other equipment, owned by nonnatives in Alaska, as authorized by the act of September 1, 1937 (50 Stat. 900), $820,000; and for necessary administrative expenses in connection with such purchase and the establishment and development of the reindeer industry for the benefit of the Eskimos and other natives of Alaska, as authorized by said act, including perment of the reindeer industry for the benefit of the Eskimos and other natives of Alaska, as authorized by said act, including personal services in the District of Columbia (not to exceed $2,300) and elsewhere, traveling expenses, erection, repair, and maintenance of corrals, fences, and other facilities, $250,000; in all $1,070,000, to be immediately available: Provided, That under this appropriation not exceeding an average of $4 per head shall be paid for reindeer purchased from nonnative owners: Provided further, That the foregoing limitation shall not apply to the purchase of reindeer located on Nunivak Island."

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment on the ground that it is legislation on an appropriation bill, unauthorized by law, and it delegates to the Department additional authority which it does not now have.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma desire to be heard?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I feel that it is unnecessary to make an extended argument, as I am sure the Chair is fully advised and ready to rule. Certainly there is no question but that this item is clearly authorized by existing law. Authority will be found in the act of September 1, 1937, Fiftieth Statutes, page 900. It plainly authorizes an appropriation of $2,000,000. I call the attention of the Chair to section 16 which reads as follows:

The sum of $2,000,000 is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the use of the Secretary of the Interior in carrying out the provisions of this act.

Mr. KNUTSON. What more authority do you want? That is enough.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California is recognized.

Mr. CARTER. The opening sentence of the amendment

For the purchase in such manner as the Secretary of the Interior shall deem advisable.

Now, certainly there is nothing in the statute that gives the Secretary of the Interior that much discretion. In addition to that, Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the proviso in the amendment which reads as the proviso in the bill, which is clearly legislation. Therefore I say the point of order must be sustained against the proposed amendment.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Buck). The Chair is ready to rule. The act of September 1, 1937, on which the appropriation contained in this paragraph is based, reads in part as follows:

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to acquire, in the name of the United States, by purchase or other lawful means, including exercises of power of eminent domain, for and on behalf of the Eskimos and other natives of Alaska, reindeer, reindeer range, equipment, abattoirs, cold-storage plants, warehouses and other property, real or personal, the acquisition of which he determines to be necessary to the effectuation of the purposes of this act.

This seems to be a broad, all-inclusive grant of power. The language used in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma merely restates, in slightly different words, the authorization contained in the act of September 1, 1937.

The proviso to which the gentleman from California [Mr. CARTER] refers appears to the Chair to be nothing more than a limitation, in the strictest sense of the word.

For these reasons the Chair overrules both points of order. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Johnson] is recognized.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit a unanimous-consent request. I ask unanimous consent that this so-called reindeer item, which seems to be about the only controversial item in the Indian affairs appropriation, go over for the day, and that the remainder of the section for the Indian Service be read at this time, at the conclusion of which it is my purpose to move that the Committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON] asks unanimous consent that the consideration of the paragraph dealing with the reindeer industry go over for consideration until tomorrow; that the remainder of the paragraph under the subheading "Indian affairs" be now read; and that at the conclusion of the reading the Committee do rise. Is there objection?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I object. Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COLMER. Do I understand that if this request is granted there will be ample opportunity under the rules to discuss the matter tomorrow?

The CHAIRMAN. There has been objection to the unanimous-consent request.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Johnson].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, is the House to be heard on this amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize any Member who desires to be heard.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COLMER. What is the status of the matter now? The CHAIRMAN. The Committee has before it the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr.

Mr. COLMER. Then, if the gentleman does not desire recognition on his amendment, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. COLMER. I yield for a question.

Mr. RICH. It was the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma that we permit this item in the bill to go over until tomorrow, and I understood all Members would have an opportunity to speak on it tomorrow. That will give us an opportunity to conclude the balance of the Indian affairs matter

Mr. COLMER. Let me say to the gentleman I understood that was not agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER] objected to the request.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that it is contemplated we will have full and free debate on the reindeer raid on the Treasury, I will withdraw my objection at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin withdraws his objection.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Johnson]?

There was no objection. The Clerk read as follows:

For compensation and expenses of an attorney or attorneys employed by the Shoshone Indian Tribe under a contract approved by the Secretary of the Interior on January 30, 1939, $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, payable from funds on deposit in the Treasury to the credit of such tribe; and the amount herein appropriated shall be available for compensation earned and expenses incurred during the period covered by said contract.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

ROADS ON INDIAN RESERVATIONS

Mr. Chairman, this item for an appropriation for roads and bridges is one of the best expenditures made for Indian affairs. It makes jobs, it puts people to work, and it creates a permanent improvement that yields benefits for all time to

At this point I wish to offer my statement before the committee when it was considering this item:

The Chairman. Mr. Case, we will be glad to hear you at this time.
Mr. Case. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am appearing in behalf of the item for roads on Indian reservations and in behalf of irrigation work in the Second District of South

First, with respect to the Indian roads matter, the authorization in the Hayden-Cartwright Act originally provided $4,000,000 for the construction of roads on Indian reservations. That has since been reduced, and, as I understand, it is now proposed to put the appropriation below the reduced authorization.

The Charman, Is that the total or the amount for a year?

Mr. Case. For a year, for the whole country; and that portion of the money is to be spent on Indian reservations. There are five Indian reservations in my district, with an Indian population of approximately 25,000.

approximately 25,000.

The CHAIRMAN. What tribe is that?

Mr. CASE. The Sioux Tribe. Now, the money that is spent for the construction of roads in Indian reservations is money that saves expenditures in other ways. In the first place, under the terms of the Hayden-Cartwright Act, provision is made that the labor employed must be Indian labor, and that means that relief expenditures will be lessened by that much.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. About 10,000 Indians will be employed.

ployed.

Mr. Case. Yes. This money has to be used for Indian labor, and Mr. Case. Yes. This money has to be used for Indian labor, and when the roads are built there is a saving in the matter of school transportation and a saving in the transportation of doctors. In the Indian country it is apparently impossible for the Indian Service to have as many doctors as are required, and by the saving on account of the travel of doctors in all parts of the reservation you will save that much of the total amount of money carried in this bill. There is a great saving in the transportation of children to school when you have roads. You build fewer schools and can have better schools and bring the children to them.

A road-building program got under way in the Indian country in schools and bring the children to them.

A road-building program got under way in the Indian country in 1933 with a P. W. A. allotment of $4,000,000. The Indian Service took a nucleus of regular civil-service employees, recruited additions, and started a program for the nearly 200 reservations scattered in 24 States, meeting different problems of weather, road demands, and road-building problems in all parts of the country.

That figure was then used as a basis for the original Hayden-Cartwright authorization, made, I think, in 1934. At any rate, in only 1 year, 1936, has Congress provided the full $4,000,000. Last year it was $3,000,000, I believe, part in the regular and part in a deficiency bill. Since the original guess as to what would be needed annually, engineering estimates covering the reservations show that not four but eight million a year would be needed if the Indian Service is to hold up its end of a program properly coordinated and connected with the Bureau of Public Roads and State systems.

A $4,000,000 program only means $20,000 on the average per reservation; the proposed $2,000,000 means only $10,000. That has to buy lumber, culverts, powder, and equipment and also pay wages. It means that the Indian road program will lag behind the connecting roads at every reservation boundary.

I mentioned that Indian labor must be employed with this money, and to that extent it relieves the relief load. I want to add that the Indian Service is getting results with the money expended. With an uneven appropriation from year to year, starting from scratch and building up a road-engineering organization, in approximately 5 years of field work, there has been accomplished 4,264 miles of road at an average cost of $3,870 per mile; 1,979 miles of road surfacing, average cost $1,500 per mile; 1,167 bridges built; 1,117 bridges repaired; 10,196 culverts constructed; and 1,334 culverts repaired. culverts repaired.

The engineering supervision and overhead, I am advised, has been less than 3 percent, and 70 percent of the money spent has gone into wages.

Therefore I want to urge that special consideration be given to making the full amount of the authorization available, because it will result in a saving on account of relief, as well as a saving in other directions.

Mr. LEAVY. What amount did the Budget allow? Have you Checked that up?

The CLERK. The estimate shows $2,000,000. The authorization is $2,500,000 for the next fiscal year, and not $4,000,000.

Mr. CASE. That is under the new act. It was $4,000,000 under the old act. At least the full amount of the authorization, or the old act. At least the full amount of the authorization, or $2,500,000, should be appropriated.

Mr. Rich. Do you know how much was spent by W. P. A. and P. W. A. for those Indian roads during this last year?

Mr. Case. I cannot say. Of course, they put in some W. P. A. projects, but very little P. W. A. last year, as far as I know. Last year a total of $3,000,000 was provided for roads on Indian reservations, and appropriation of the full authorization would be $500,000 less than that

The Charrman. How much of that was spent in your district?
Mr. Case. I think approximately $105,000. There are five reservations, two of which, the Pine Ridge and Rosebud, are among the largest in the country.

The Chairman. Have you taken this up with the Bureau of Indian Affairs?

The CHAIRMAN. Did you convince them that you ought to have more money?

Mr. Case. I am perfectly willing to have it distributed according to the needs of the respective reservations.

I am glad, Mr. Chairman, that while the committee did not raise the item to the full $2,500,000, they did at least raise the Budget estimate by the quarter of a million to the $2,250,000 which we are now approving.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

The appropriations available for expenditure for the benefit of the The appropriations available for expenditure for the benefit of the natives of Alaska may be used for the payment of traveling expenses of new appointees from Seattle, Wash., to their posts of duty in Alaska, and of traveling expenses, packing, crating, and transportation (including drayage) of personal effects of employees upon permanent change of station within Alaska, under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I would not be fair to my colleague from Washington, whose Bonneville item I tried to cut down, did I not make a statement with reference to the Cheyenne and Arapahoe items here for $75,000 for a dormitory and $15,000 for employees' quarters, which was not a direct recommendation of the Indian Bureau. I must call attention also to another item for the Consolidated Ute of Colorado office building, $30,000; employees' quarters, $15,000.

Inasmuch as I find the House is in no frame of mind to cut down expenses, there will be no use in my offering an amendment to strike these items out or I certainly would do This Congress does not want to economize.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania for his kind statement. Frankly, I consider his statement a compliment, whether he so intended it or not, for the reason that one of the institutions mentioned is in the district I have the honor to represent in Oklahoma. I feel, however, that I should state for the information of the Members that our committee operating under the same rule this year that it has in the past, asked the Indian Service to present the most urgent of its many construction items. Thus the Indian Service complied as usual with the committee's request and the committee took the two or three items at the head of the list as being the most urgently needed. I invite Members to read the evidence presented at the committee hearings.

In my opening statement on the pending bill I pointed out that there are many Indian schools and hospitals that are in urgent need of new construction. The Members of this body are entitled to know that at no institution in the entire Indian Service is construction needed more than at the Concho Indian School in Oklahoma. Some of the buildings are shown by the evidence to be positively dangerous. So I am perfectly willing to accept the responsibility for a new girls' dormitory at Arapaho and Cheyenne Indian school, known as the Concho School. I trust that my constituents will read the remarks of the critical gentleman from Pennsylvania. [Applause.]

By unanimous consent, the pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Buck, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 4852, the Interior Department appropriation bill, 1940, had come to no resolution thereon.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered. Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD in connection with my remarks made in Committee of the Whole this afternoon a table furnished me by the engineers of the Bonneville project containing figures of costs.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HARTER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HARTER of New York. Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen of the House, in the message from the President yes-terday asking that Congress make a further deficiency the current fiscal year, the statement occurs:

Partly because of seasonal conditions, the volume of employment has decreased since the end of December. This includes industrial and agricultural employment. Therefore, the need for unemployment relief has increased.

I must confess that information coming to me in regard to New York State leaves me completely mystified.

On March 10 Buffalo, N. Y., papers carried a news item from the New York State capitol at Albany conveying information from the State industrial commissioner, Frieda S. Miller. This information purported to show the results of a survey made by her department. The report stated that there is a 2.1 percent increase in private employment in that State and incidentally showed the highest index in both employment and pay rolls since November 1937.

The article further goes on to say that the increase in private employment in that State for February 1939 over February 1938 is 5.1 percent and the resulting pay-roll increase is 7.6.

Having in mind recent reported assertions from the President that the $150,000,000 was still needed for W. P. A., I naturally wanted to see what the W. P. A. had done to carry out the expressed wishes of Congress to weed out the nonneedy, political, and favored from its rolls in New York State. I accordingly communicated with the office of the Administrator of the Works Progress Administration in Washington and found, to my surprise, that in face of the 5.1-percent increase in private employment from February 1938 to February 1939, those on the W. P. A. rolls in that State increased during that time from 189,899 to 216,285, or 26,386. With Congress definitely for a separation of nonneedy, political, and favored ones from the W. P. A. rolls, how can the Administration explain this 26,386 increase? Twenty thousand of this increase came from New York City alone, while the industrial county of Erie, with over 800,000 population, has an increase of only 61 persons.

Another significant point which I learned from W. P. A. was that on October 2, 1937, in continental United States there were 1,403,192 persons on W. P. A. Having in mind the New York State industrial commissioner's reputed statement that the private-employment and pay-roll index for that State in February 1939 was the highest since November 1937, I found that on February 25, 1939, there were 2,852,932 persons on W. P. A. in continental United States-more than twice as many as on October 2, 1937. One might think that other States are lagging behind New York State in increase of private employment, but that does not seem to be borne out by charts and information received by the Members of this body from time to time. What is the answer?

Is it that political appointees still have the favor on these rolls, while those needy unemployed who want to work have to accept local home relief or welfare?

Listen to these comparative figures furnished me by the Works Progress Administration showing the number of persons on W. P. A. on the various dates and in the various localities I mention:

	Erie County	Upper New York State, includ- ing Erie County	New York City	New York State total	Continental United States
Oct. 2, 1937	11, 107	52, 070	133, 848	185, 918	1, 403, 192
	8, 921	51, 568	138, 331	189, 899	2, 024, 937
	8, 982	57, 956	158, 329	216, 285	2, 852, 932

Is there any sincerity on the part of the local directors of the W. P. A. to take care of needy unemployed, is the desire still active to take care of friends and political favorites without regard to need and without regard to the fact that taxpayers resent being taxed for the sole benefit of helping political favorites under the guise that the appropriation is used solely to furnish employment to the appropriation of $150,000,000 for W. P. A. for the balance of | needy? The people are looking for concrete evidence that the economy talk is not just talk, and I am here to say that giving W. P. A. appropriations to go into the pockets of nonneedy on the W. P. A. rolls, while there are needy begging for work and small-home owners are losing their homes, is not economy.

I have my convictions concerning the handling of W. P. A. from Washington as being altogether too top heavy, and I am convinced that the one way to have the money appropriated for the needy people reach the needy people is by turning the running of the W. P. A. back to the respective States with nonpartisan boards set up to control the situation, both in the State and its political subdivisions.

The results of the grand jury investigation of W. P. A. in Erie County last fall convinces me that a State-run W. P. A., with grants from the Federal Government, and run by nonpartisan boards, is the best way of eliminating waste and politics so that the funds we appropriate will more truly do the good which we want done and which the people of this country have a right to expect to be done. Only by placing these responsibilities closer to the people-in other words, decentralizing-can these unsatisfactory and unsavory conditions be remedied.

It is my earnest hope that these and many other vexing questions concerning W. P. A. will be answered as a result of the President's current W. P. A. message.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks, and to include therein an editorial from the Muncie Press, Muncie, Ind.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Friday next, after the disposition of business on the Speaker's table and the legislative program for the day, I may address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. If the House is in session.

Mr. CONNERY. I will submit my request on the chance that the House may be in session. My subject is concerned with the contribution of the Irish people to American democracy, and I was hopeful of being permitted to deliver the address on St. Patrick's Day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

SENATE

THURSDAY, MARCH 16, 1939

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Dear Lord and Father of mankind, we thank Thee for the night wherein Thou workest Thy work unseen as men sleep and know not what it hides until the fair things of the morning are revealed. And as we greet the newborn day, confessing our sins and rededicating ourselves to Thy service, distill upon us the dews of quietness and calm, that in simple trust and deeper reverence we may be found steadfast, always abounding in the word of the Lord, for we know that our labor is not in vain in the Lord. Endue us with strength for every duty; make us patient in trial and wise with the wisdom out of whose fullness our wandering steps are guided.

Make us wise with Thyself and, if it may be, dwell in us, O blessed Father, as Thou didst dwell in Thine only begotten Son, Jesus Christ, in whom the brimming fountain of Thy presence o'erflowed in love to all mankind. We ask it in His name. Amen.

THE PALESTINE MANDATE AND THE BALFOUR DECLARATION

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, in the nature of a petition, I ask unanimous consent that the Secretary read at the desk a telegram I sent to the Secretary of State in October

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the reading of the telegram? The Chair hears none, and the clerk will read, as requested.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

PHOENIX, ARIZ., October 13, 1938.

Hon. CORDELL HULL,

Hon. Cordell Hull,

Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

Dear Mr. Secretary: The services to our country which the President and yourself rendered recently in the Central Europe crisis are of surpassing importance and are valuable beyond the range of eulogy. In the present crisis now approaching because of the rumor that Great Britain may consider withdrawing from her mandate over Palestine which mandate she assumed by the Balfour declaration, leads me to believe that the President and yourself may perform an equally important service if you would suggest to Great Britain's chancelries that any recession from or abandonment of the Palestine mandate created by the Balfour declaration would bring catastrophic results that might shatter the orderly process of nations. No event could make a more important contribution to peace and tranquility than the faithful observance of the Balfour declaration. You are probably more familiar than am I with the events that led to the promulgation of the Balfour declaration. The Jews down through the stream of human history have been faithful to their engagements and to their commitments. They have for centuries developed their culture. Their spiritual potentiality has always been manifest and most admirable. The Jewry of the world accepted the Balfour declaration in good faith and relying upon the good faith of Great Britain the world's Jewry have proceeded for more than 20 years to develop Palestine and to contribute to movements looking toward peace, progress, and serenity throughout our troubled world. Pardon me if I appear to be too insistent, but I am zealously of the opinion that it would be a distressingly cruel wrongdoing were this Balfour declaration abandoned. With gratitude for the polite attention you have always given my communications, and with esteem. attention you have always given my communications, and with

SENATOR ASHURST.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I ask that the telegram just read be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. I believe that we are not overestimating the importance of urging, in a proper and diplomatic manner, that Great Britain observe her Balfour declaration regarding Palestine.

Neither time nor the occasion warrant my discussing in intimate details the reasons why Great Britain assumed this mandate, and thus promised not only the Jewry but the entire world that she would look with favor upon a national Jewish home in Palestine. I believe, as I said in the telegram, that if Great Britain should refuse to do so, her refusal would lead to catastrophic results.

Great Britain refused to act upon the pleadings of our former Secretary of State, Mr. Stimson, who, much to his credit, urged Great Britain to join the United States in observing the nine-power pact against war. If Great Britain then had observed her compact, Japan never would have moved into China. If Great Britain now will observe her own Balfour declaration, probably an equally catastrophic result may be averted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the telegram will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to reimburse Thomas A. Ross, chief boatswain, United States Coast Guard, for loss of personal property in a fire at Nome, Alaska, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on

Senate Concurrent Memorial 2

Concurrent memorial requesting additional buildings and equipment for the veterans' administrative facility at Tucson

To the Congress of the United States and the Federal Board of Hospitalization:

Your memorialist respectfully represents:

Because of the unsurpassed climatic advantages of its location, the veterans' administrative facility at Tucson is operated primarily for the treatment of tuberculosis. The capacity and resources of the institution are constantly taxed to the limit in the hospitalization of tuberculars.

It is a fact, however, well established by competent medical authority and the testimony of thousands of patients who have experienced its benefits, that the climate of southern Arizona possesses equal therapeutic value in the treatment of arthritis, neuritis, asthma, bronchitis, sinusitis, and various other diseases. During the past year, because of the lack of adequate accommodations for their treatment, approximately 500 cases of these special types were denied hospitalization.

It is believed that every disabled veteran should have the bene-

It is believed that every disabled veteran should have the benefit of the most favorable climatic conditions and the most effective therapeutic aids indicated for his particular type of disease, to enable him to regain his health.

That the Veterans' Administration include in its budget requests an item for the construction of additional buildings at Tucson to take care of at least 200 general medical patients; that an adequate number of single rooms be provided in each ward; that each building be equipped with the most efficient dry aircooling system, and that ample facilities be provided to take care of the increased bed capacity at the hospital.

2. That the Congress of the United States give effect to this recommendation by the enactment of appropriate legislation.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent memorial of the Legislature of Arizona. which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys:

House Concurrent Memorial 1

Concurrent memorial relating to the proposed Petrified Forest National Park

To the Congress of the United States of America:
Your memorialist respectfully represents:
Within the boundaries of Navajo and Apache Counties, in northeastern Arizona, lies an area containing mineralized remains of mesozoic forests, locally and commonly known as the Petrified Forest, and officially designated the Petrified Forest National Monument.

The Petrified Forest consists of six distinct areas, called First Forest, Second Forest, Third Forest, Rainbow Forest, Blue Forest, and Black Forest, which together constitute a deposit of petrified Forest, Second Forest, Third Forest, Rainbow Forest, Blue Forest, and Black Forest, which together constitute a deposit of petrified wood unequaled in extent, as well as for size of trees and beauty and variety of coloring of logs. Many of the logs measure over 200 feet in length and 7 to 10 feet in diameter.

In addition to the petrified wood, this petrified forest contains an extensive deposit of fossil bones of reptiles which lived during the Triassic period of the Mesozoic age, and deposits of fossilized cycads and ferns and other plant life preserved in such perfect condition that the seed pods and almost miscoscopic fruiting bodies are plainly visible. This field was discovered recently, and the opportunities for scientific research are almost unlimited.

Thousands of prehistoric petroglyphs are engraved on the sandstone cliffs within the monument, one huge rock alone bearing more than 1,000 such symbols by actual count. Sites representing the prehistoric periods from basket maker and pit-house type to and including Pueblo No. 3 dot the entire area of the Petrified Forest. The Pueblo No. 3 period, for example, is represented by the Agate House, a 7-room dwelling constructed of blocks of agatized wood and estimated to be about 800 years old.

In 1932 the mysterious Blue Forest, with its banded hills and wood deposits, and the most scenic and colorful section of the famous Painted Desert, including the Black Forest were added to the area first designated as a national monument in 1906. The Black Forest is not yet open to visitors, because of insufficient means of protection, but it contains a greater amount of petrified wood and larger tree trunks than any other section. The Painted Desert, discovered by Coronado, the Spanish conquistador, in 1540, is unsurpassed in scenic value.

As a national monument the Petrified Forest has attracted hunis unsurpassed in scenic value.

As a national monument the Petrified Forest has attracted hundreds of thousands of visitors and brought many benefits to the State, and would doubtless draw visitors in even greater numbers as a national park, since its paramount scenic, scientific, historic, and prehistoric values are of interest to visitors in every walk of life.

of life.

The Boards of Supervisors of Navajo and Apache Counties and the State land commission have by unanimous vote petitioned the Congress of the United States of America to set aside and designate as the Petrified Forest National Park all lands within the boundaries of the Petrified Forest National Monument, and a committee of the United States Senate during August 1938 investigated that proposal.

Inasmuch as there is no request to enlarge the present area, the proposed change from national monument to national park can be effected with little or no cost, and it would be of inestimable benefit to the State of Arizona and its residents and to the people of the United States.

of the United States.

Wherefore your memorialist, the House of Representatives of the State of Arizona (the senate concurring), prays: That the Congress of the United States of America enact legislation to set aside and designate as the Petrified Forest National Park all lands within the boundaries of the Petrified Forest National Monument.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a joint memorial of the Legislature of New Mexico, favoring appropriations to continue service to the State of New Mexico by the National Labor Relations Board, twenty-second region, Denver, Colo., which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petitions will be received and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. MALONEY also presented the petition of Herrmann J. Hattersley and 75 other citizens of Stratford, Conn., praying for the enactment of legislation proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States for a referendum on war, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

AMENDMENTS TO NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS ACT

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, on the desk before me are petitions signed by approximately 50,000 American citizens. These petitioners, in the exercise of a right guaranteed to them by their Constitution, now call upon Congress to redress what they consider a very serious grievance.

Before presenting the petitions for reference to the appropriate committee, I should like to say just a word about the

In November 1937 there was organized the National Small Business Men's Association. The moving spirit was DeWitt M. Emery, president of the Monroe Letterhead Corporation, of Akron, Ohio. The movement, however, was so spontaneous that it has required very little directing. The association was formed to give the small-business man a more effective voice in national affairs. It spread so rapidly that when it met in convention for the first time at Pittsburgh on September 13, 1938, it counted members in 40 States of the Union, and delegates were present on that occasion from 32 of them.

It is the aim of the association to be a constructive force in helping to solve national problems. It favors our economic system of free enterprise, and is opposed to every policy or practice of business or of government which interferes with the functioning of that system. It is prepared to work for a reasonable reduction in governmental expense, the removal of tax exemption from all employees of government, improvement of the social-security program, elimination of politics from relief, and other matters affecting the national welfare.

The association has decided to make its major objective the enactment of necessary amendments to the Wagner Labor Relations Act. President Emery submits with the petitions the following statement, which I quote in part:

Accordingly the petition to the Congress of the United States, which I present herewith, was drawn and placed in circulation. The idea behind the petition was not to get the largest possible number of signers but rather to show the widespread sentiment among small-business men in favor of revising the Wagner Act in the manner stated on the petition.

Mr. Emery goes on to say:

These petitions contain approximately 50,000 signatures from small-business men scattered throughout 43 States. Many of the small-business men who signed this petition have been before the National Labor Relations Board, and anxiously await an opportunity to testify at the Senate committee hearings on amending the National Labor Relations Act.

Mr. President, let me say that I thoroughly approved the action of the chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor in postponing, for the reasons stated by him, the hearings that were originally scheduled to commence on the 10th of the present month; but I join the 50,000 signers of this petition in urging the committee to reset the hearings for a date not later than April 1. The action of the committee next Tuesday on that question will be noted throughout the country with intense interest. I have confidence that an appropriate early date will be selected for full hearings.

Mr. President, I now present these petitions on behalf of the National Small Business Men's Association and ask that the caption, but not the signatures, be printed in the Con-GRESSIONAL RECORD and that the petitions be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The caption of one of the petitions presented by Mr. Burke is as follows:

To the Congress of the United States, greetings:

The undersigned small-business men, their employees and customers, cooperating with the National Small Business Men's Association, respectfully request that the National Labor Relations Act, commonly called the Wagner Act, be revised so as to provide:

1. Equal rights, with a fair and impartial hearing and decision for all parties in interest. Employers as well as employees being enabled to initiate proceedings before the Labor Board, with recognized rules of evidence to apply at all hearings.

2. That employers, employees, and their families be fully protected in all labor situations against coercion or intimidation from any source.

any source.

3. For full review of all evidence by appeal to Federal courts, transcript to be furnished by the Board.

4. That the National Labor Relations Board be limited to judicial functions, so that it will not in the future at one and the same time, or at any time, act as prosecutor, judge, and jury; the Department of Labor to take over the functions thus removed from the RESOLUTIONS OF LAND O'LAKE CREAMERIES. INC.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, there have been forwarded to me several resolutions adopted by the Land O'Lake Creameries, Inc., relating to the creamery and dairy industry, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and appropriately re-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolutions presented by the Senator from Wisconsin will be received, printed in the RECORD, and appropriately referred.

To the Committee on Finance:

We reiterate the position we have taken at former conventions in which we opposed the imports of dairy and livestock products from foreign countries unless they meet the same standards of sanitation and disease control which we require of our American farmers.

As a measure of protection to the farmers of the United States as a measure of protection to the farmers of the United States against serious competition of foreign fats and oils produced under conditions which should not be tolerated in the United States, we urge the enactment of additional Federal taxes on all imported oils and fats which will provide a coordinate tax or tariff of at least 5 cents per pound on all such fats and oils, and an equal rate of duty or tax on the seeds or nuts from which such fats and oils are extracted. extracted.

Where such fats and oils are now covered by trade agreements, we urge that a tax be enacted immediately with the proviso that the effective date of tax so fixed shall commence at the expiration date of any such trade agreement.

To the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Since large areas of farm lands have been withdrawn from the Since large areas of farm lands have been withdrawn from the production of soil-depleting crops, the acreage thus removed has been used for the commercial production of dary and livestock products. The continued increase in the production of these products is demonstrating the need of providing dairy and livestock farmers with some degree of protection against the disastrous situation they are encountering. This protection was granted by both the House and the Senate when the farm bill was enacted at the last session of Congress.

Unfortunately, however, the protection specifically granted by both branches of Congress was nullified by the conference committee. As a consequence we now have no adequate protection against the use of diverted acres for the production of dairy and livestock products.

against the use of drivers.

livestock products.

We, therefore, request the present Congress to provide, either through an amendment to the present Farm Act or as a condition to the enactment of any new farm legislation, that lands taken out of production of other crops and paid for out of the Federal Treasury should not be used for the production of dairy and livestock products.

The program of the Dairy Products Marketing Association combined with the purchases of this Surplus Commodities Corporation has without question stabilized the price of butter since early in the spring of 1938 at a price level that has been of untold assistance to dairy farmers throughout the United States. Without this program there is little question that the price of butter would have reached a disastrously low level.

It can be safely assumed that this program has resulted in many millions of dollars being paid to farmers for their milk and dairy products. While a stabilization program of this nature should be inclusive of major farm crops and the stabilization operation on butter which was carried on under a law that is not strictly designed for the most perfect operation, this program does, however, signed for the most perfect operation, this program does, however, constitute a substantial step in the right direction for a sound program for agriculture.

Inasmuch as the dairy industry, which constitutes better than 20 percent of the entire farm income and which has been placed at a disadvantage due to the fact that many hundreds of millions of dollars have been spent in an attempt to assist agriculture, which has resulted in crop switching to the disadvantage of the dairy industry, and inasmuch as the dairy industry has asked so little in the way of assistance as compared with funds appropriated little in the way of assistance as compared with funds appropriated to support other branches of agriculture which have largely been to the disadvantage of dairying, it is regrettable that it should now find itself in a position whereby the limited appropriations which would be necessary to continue this work have been suddenly withdrawn and the butter market that has been so effectively stabilized should again be thrown open to the manipulations of those who have no interest in agriculture and are solely interested by whetever or however advantages can be gained at the interested in whatever or however advantages can be gained at the expense of agriculture.

Therefore, we urge that the Department of Agriculture reconsider the continuance of this stabilization operation and that the United States Congress be apprised of the disastrous situation facing dairy farmers, with the request that they take the necessary action to correct this situation.

We recommend and urge Congress to extend the present emergency interest rate on Federal farm loans and extend to agriculture a most favorable credit service until agriculture attains an income on parity with industry and labor.

WAGE AND HOUR LAW EXEMPTIONS

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, I ask consent to have printed in the Record and appropriately referred a communication from the General Aniline Employees' Organization, Inc., of Grasselli, N. J., opposing exemption of "white collar" workers from the provisions of the wage-hour law and the petition signed by 600 members of this organization which communication and petition have been forwarded

There being no objection, the communication and petition were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

GENERAL ANILINE EMPLOYEE'S ORGANIZATION, INC., Grasselli, N. J., March 13, 1939. Senators the Honorable W. Warren Barbour and

WILLIAM H. SMATHERS (New Jersey),

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.
GENTLEMEN: The Federal wage and hour law was designed to protect all workers, including so-called "white collar" or salaried men, against excessive working hours without adequate compen-men, against excessive working hours without adequate compensation and to spread employment.

It is the announced intention of Administrator Elmer Andrews to ask the Congress to amend the law to exempt "white collar" workers from its provisions, and a bill has already been introduced by Representative Thomas of Texas to exempt all "white collar" workers earning $1,200 or more annually and which is aimed specifically at the exemption of all office workers. This bill would destroy the design and intent of the law.

Therefore, we, the undersigned "white collar" workers (salaried), your constituents, voters, residents of New Jersey, members and nonnembers of the salaried group of this organization advise you of our firm conviction that any bill to amend the wage-hour law to exempt "white collar" men should specifically apply only to those earning $2,500 or more annually and that no amendments should be adopted to defeat the ultimate object of the law to standardize the workweek at 40 hours.

Our present working agreement with our company designates standardize the workweek at 40 hours.

Our present working agreement with our company designates a 40-hour week for all employees, with overtime pay at one-fortieth of weekly salary per hour up to 44 hours, for salaried workers, and at three-eightieths of weekly salary in excess of 44 hours. We do not anticipate that our company will take advantage of any change in the wage-hour law to extend the regular workweek for salaried workers without compensation, but we do realize that they may be compelled to do so in the event that other manufacturers or competitors should lengthen the workweek under amendments to the law.

Having informed you of our opinions and feelings in the matter

Having informed you of our opinions and feelings in the matter, we now petition you, as our elected Senators, to firmly oppose any changes in the wage-hour law designed to reduce or eliminate the privileges and benefits which this law has conferred on us.

PETITION

We, the undersigned, being the duly elected representatives and trustees of this organization (General Aniline Employees' Organization, Inc.), do affix our signatures to this petition in behalf of 600 hourly workers resident in Union, Essex, and adjacent counties in the State of New Jersey, and whom we represent, in support of our salaried coworkers and members in opposing any amendments to the wage-hour law except as specified and for the reasons outlined in the preamble to this petition.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR RELIEF

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I introduce a joint resolution, and ask leave to make a very brief statement in respect to it.

The President is renewing his request for $150,000,000 in addition to the $725,000,000 already voted by Congress for W. P. A. to next June 30. He asserts that legitimate economies and curtailments, as contemplated by Congress, are impossible under the existing W. P. A. system.

It is perfectly obvious that Congress itself cannot administer these economies under the existing system. It is equally obvious that Congress cannot provide a new and better system prior to April 1, when W. P. A. is threatening drastic cuts in relief rolls unless the extra $150,000.000 is provided. We must have more time. Therefore, I propose to amend the original grant of $725,000,000 by allocating its use to the period ending May 31 instead of June 30. In other words, the existing appropriation, already made, would terminate 1 month sooner than originally ordered.

This gives the President and W. P. A. the full fund they have requested up to June 1, and entirely eliminates the immediate crisis. It also eliminates the present need to appropriate the additional $150,000,000. Meanwhile, it gives Congress 21/2 months in which to create a better relief system, or, failing that objective, subsequently to make the necessary June appropriations. Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof

I ask that the joint resolution be referred to the Appropriations Committee.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 94) decreasing by 1 month the period over which funds heretofore appropriated to the Works Progress Administration for expenditure for work relief and relief are required to be apportioned and distributed, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 3233) to repeal certain acts of Congress (pocket vetoed) was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

On motion by Mrs. Caraway the Committee on Pensions was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 1439) granting a pension to Bill McCarty, and it was referred to the Committee on Finance.

INVESTIGATION OF RAILROAD FINANCING

Also strike out figures "$35,942,416" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$36,060,796."

ADMISSION OF REFUGEE CHILDREN

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD a very moving and effective editorial which appeared in the New York Daily News of today, which favors the admission into this country of a limited number of German refugee children.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The editorial is as follows:

[From the New York Daily News of March 16, 1939] LET'S PRACTICE LIBERALISM

Hitler has taken over Czechoslovakia to all intents and purposes, and the first official act of his protectorate, or whatever form his control may finally take, is an edict that Nuremberg anti-Jewish laws must be extended throughout his new domains.

HITLER STILL HOUNDS JEWS

Having impoverished the Jews in Germany and hounded a lot of them to death or out of the country, Hitler plainly intends to chase them out of all other territories he may acquire. It is a brutal spectacle. Most Americans deplore it, and a lot of us are raising loud and eloquent protests against it.

TURN TALK INTO ACTION

But when it comes to turning our indignation into action, we seem to be like most of the other countries. To the question where these tragic people are to go for refuge, the conventional reply is that somehow, sometime, we'll find them a nice, cozy landing place somewhere in central Africa or up the Amazon.

What we should do, and do soon, is to relax our immigration leaves to let into the United States as leaves a proportion of these landing place somewhere in central Africa or up the Amazon.

What we should do, and do soon, is to relax our immigration laws to let into the United States as large a proportion of these people as we can fairly be called on to receive—if not a larger. We should at the very least adopt Senator Wacner's proposal to admit 10,000 German child refugees a year for the next 2 years. About half of these would be Jewish children, the other half the children of German Gentiles in bad odor with Hitler's choosy government. We should do this for several reasons. For one, plain human decency and hospitality. For another, it was our ancient policy of welcoming the oppressed of all lands that made us a great Nation. For a third, we should do it for the sake of our own souls.

We boast a lot about our liberalism. Let's be liberal on this tragically urgent and challenging point.

EXECUTIVE NOMINATION REFERRED

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the nomination of Samuel F. Kirby to be postmaster at Portsmouth, Va., which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

ORDER TO DISPENSE WITH CALL OF CALENDAR

The VICE PRESIDENT. The routine morning business is concluded. The consideration of bills on the calendar under rule VIII is in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the calling of the calendar be dispensed with.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

REORGANIZATION OF EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS

Mr. BYRNES. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 4425, the reorganization bill. The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Carolina.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 4425) to provide for reorganizing agencies of the Government, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Select Committee on Government Organization with amendments.

Mr. BYRNES. I ask unanimous consent that the committee amendments be first considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, what is the request which has just been agreed to?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The request was for unanimous consent to consider the committee amendments first.

Mr. BYRNES. I did not ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, but I was about to do so. Is the Senator going to object to that

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Yes. Mr. BYRNES. Then I will not make it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the bill.

The clerk has asked the Chair whether or not the committee amendments should be read when the bill is read. The parliamentarian advises the Chair that they should be: that the clerk should read the amendments as he comes to them

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That this act may be cited as the "Reorganization Act of 1939."

TITLE I-REORGANIZATION

PART 1

SECTION 1. (a) The President shall investigate the organization of all executive agencies of the Government and shall determine what changes therein are necessary to accomplish the following purposes:

(1) To reduce expenditures to the fullest extent consistent with

(1) To reduce expenditures to the fullest extent consistent with the efficient operation of the Government;
(2) To increase the efficiency of the operations of the Government to the fullest extent practicable within the revenues;
(3) To group, coordinate, and consolidate executive agencies of the Government, as nearly as may be, according to major pur-

(4) To reduce the number of such agencies by consolidating those having similar functions under a single head, and to abolish such agencies or such functions thereof as may not be necessary for the efficient conduct of the Government; and

(5) To eliminate overlapping and duplication of effort.

(b) The Congress declares that the public interest demands the carrying out of the purposes specified in subsection (a) and that such purposes may be accomplished in great measure by proceeding immediately under the provisions of this title, and can be accomplished more speedily thereby than by the enactment of specific legislation. specific legislation.

SEC. 2. When used in this title, the term "executive agency means any executive department, commission, independent establishment, corporation owned or controlled by the United States, board, bureau, division, service, office, authority, or administration, in the executive branch of the Government.

SEC. 3. No reorganization plan under section 4 shall provide—

(a) For the abolition or transfer of an executive department or all the functions thereof or for the establishment of any new executive department;

(b) In the case of the following executive agencies, for the transfer, consolidation, or abolition of the whole or any part of such agency or of its head, or of all or any of the functions of such agency or of its head: Civil Service Commission, Coast Guard, Engineer Corps of the United States Army—

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 3, line 13, after the word "Army", it is proposed to insert the words "Mississippi River Commission."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection-

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon. Mr. McNARY. I did not know that we were considering committee amendments.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. The bill is merely being read. Mr. McNARY. The Presiding Officer said, "Without objection," and was about to state, I presume, that the amendment was agreed to. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The present occupant of the chair was not presiding when the ruling as to the reading of the bill was made. The present occupant of the chair was on the floor at the time, and understood that the request was to have the bill read.

Mr. KING. That is correct.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A parliamentary inquiry was addressed to the Chair, as to whether in reading the bill the clerk should read the amendments proposed by the committee. The present occupant of the chair holds that action on amendments is not at present in order, and will not be in order until the bill shall have been completely read.

Mr. McNARY. That was my understanding.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will continue the reading of the bill.

The Chief Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill, as follows:

Federal Communications Commission, Federal Power Commission, Federal Trade Commission, General Accounting Office, Interstate Commerce Commission, National Labor Relations Board, Securities and Exchange Commission, United States Board, Securities and Exchange Commission, United States Board of Tax Appeals, United States Employees' Compensation Commission, United States Maritime Commission, United States Tariff Commission, Veterans' Administration, National Mediation Board, National Railroad Adjustment Board, or Railroad Retirement

 (c) the abolition of the whole or any part of any executive agency or the functions thereof, is necessary to accomplish one or more of the purposes of section 1 (a), he shall—

 (d) prepare a reorganization plan for the making of the transfers, consolidations, and abolitions, as to which he has made findings and which he includes in the plan. Such plan shall
- (1) designate, in such cases as he deems necessary, the name of any executive agency affected by a reorganization and the title of its head:

of its head;

(2) make provision for the transfer or other disposition of the records, property (including office equipment), and personnel affected by such transfer, consolidation, or abolition;

(3) make provision for the transfer of such unexpended balances of appropriations available for use in connection with the function or agency transferred or consolidated, as he deems necessary by reason of the transfer or consolidated, as he deems necessary by reason of the transferred or consolidated functions, or for the use of the agency to which the transfer is made, but such unexpended balances so transferred shall be used only for the purposes for which such appropriation is originally made;

(4) make provision for winding up the affairs of the executive agency abolished or the affairs of the executive agency with respect to the functions abolished, as the case may be; and agency abolished or the affairs of the executive agency with respect to the functions abolished, as the case may be; and

(e) transmit such plan (bearing an identifying number) to the Congress, together with a declaration that, with respect to each transfer, consolidation, or abolition referred to in paragraph (a), (b), or (c) of this section and specified in the plan, he has found that such transfer, consolidation, or abolition is necessary to accomplish one or more of the purposes of section 1 (a). The delivery to both Houses shall be on the same day and shall be made to each House while it is in session.

(b) If the Congress adjourns sine die before the expiration of the 60-day period, a new 60-day period shall begin on the opening day of the next succeeding regular or special session. A similar rule shall be applicable in the case of subsequent adjournments sine die before the expiration of 60 days.

SEC. 6. No reorganization under this title shall have the effect—

(b) No suit, action, or other proceeding lawfully commenced by or against the head of any executive agency or other officer of the United States, in his official capacity or in relation to the discharge of his official duties, shall abate by reason of any transfer of authority, power, and duties from one officer or executive agency of the Government to another under the provisions of this title, but the court, on motion or supplemental petition filed at any time within 12 months after such transfer takes effect, showing a processity for a survival of such supplemental petition for the survival and the supplemental petition for the survival of such supplemental petition for a survival of such supplemental petition for a survival of such survival or surviva necessity for a survival of such suit, action, or other proceeding to obtain a settlement of the questions involved, may allow the same to be maintained by or against the head of the executive agency or other officer of the United States to whom the authority, powers, and duties are transferred.

(c) All laws relating to any executive agency or functions transferred to, or consolidated with, any other executive agency or function under the provisions of this title, shall, insofar as such laws are not inapplicable, remain in full force and effect.

SEC. 10. Whenever the employment of any person is terminated by a reduction of personnel as a result of a reorganization effected under this title, such person shall thereafter be given preference, when qualified, whenever an appointment is made in the executive branch of the Government, but such preference shall not be effec-tive for a period longer than 12 months from the date the employment of such person is so terminated.

SEC. 11. If the reorganizations specified in a reorganization plan take effect, the reorganization plan shall be printed in the Statutes at Large in the same volume as the public laws, and shall be printed

PART 2

SEC. 21. The following sections of this part are enacted by the Congress:

(a) As an exercise of the rule-making power of the Senate and the House of Representatives, respectively, and as such they shall be considered as part of the rules of each House, respectively, but applicable only with respect to the procedure to be followed in such House in the case of resolutions (as defined in sec. 22); and such rules shall supersede other rules only to the extent that they are inconsistent therewith; and

SEC. 22. As used in this part, the term "resolution" means only a concurrent resolution of the two Houses of Congress, the matter after the resolving clause of which is as follows: "That the Congress does not favor the reorganization plan No.———, transmitted to Congress by the President on————, 19—," the blank spaces therein being appropriately filled; and does not include a concurrent resolution which specifies more than one reorganization plan.

Sec. 24. (a) If the committee to which has been referred a resolution with respect to a reorganization plan has not reported it before the expiration of 10 calendar days after its introduction (or, in the case of a resolution received from the other House, 10 calendar days after its receipt), it shall then (but not before) be in order to move either to discharge the committee from further consideration of such resolution, or to discharge the committee from further consideration of any other resolution with respect to such reorganization plan which has been referred to the committee.

(b) Such motion may be made only by a person favoring the resolution, shall be highly privileged (except that it may not be made after the committee has reported a resolution with respect to the same reorganization plan), and debate thereon shall be limited to 20 minutes, to be equally divided between those favoring and those opposing the resolution. (a) When the committee has reported, or has been discharged from further consideration of, a resolution with respect to a reorganization plan, it shall at any time thereafter be in order (even though a previous motion to the same effect has been disagreed to) to move to proceed to the consideration of such resolution. Such motion shall be highly privileged and shall not be debatable. No amendment to such motion shall be in order and it shall not be in order to move to reconsider the vote by which such motion is agreed to or disagreed to.

(b) If a resolution of the first House with respect to such plan has been referred to committee—

(1) the procedure with respect to that or other resolutions of such House with respect to such plan which have been referred to committee shall be the same as if no resolution from the other

House with respect to such plan had been received; but

(2) on any vote on final passage of a resolution of the first House with respect to such plan the resolution from the other House with respect to such plan shall be automatically substituted for the resolution of the first House.

TITLE II-BUDGETARY CONTROL

SEC. 201. Section 2 of the Budget and Accounting Act, 1921 (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 31, sec. 2), is amended by inserting after the word "including" the words "any independent regulatory commission or board and."

TITLE III—ADMINISTRATIVE ASSISTANTS

SEC. 301. The President is authorized to appoint not to exceed six administrative assistants and to fix the compensation of each at the rate of not more than $10,000 per annum. Each such administrative assistant shall perform such duties as the President may prescribe.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the first committee amendment.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, as chairman of the committee. I think it would be in order for me to make an explanation of the bill and to point out the difference between the pending bill and the bill which was considered in the last Congress. The Senate is familiar with the bill considered in the last Congress. That bill included a provision creating a Welfare Department, reorganizing the General Accounting Office, reorganizing the structure of the Civil Service Commission, and making permanent the National Resources Committee.

In addition to those provisions the bill provided for the reorganization of the executive branch of the Government, and made provision for six assistants to the President. All the features of the bill passed by the Senate at the last session of the Congress have been eliminated from the pending bill, with the exception of the last two mentioned by me, namely, the provision for reorganization of the executive departments and the provision authorizing the President to appoint

The Senate spent 30 days of the last session considering the reorganization bill. When the matter was considered prior to the convening of the present session. I took the position that, in view of the fact that a reorganization bill had passed the Senate and had been defeated in the House, the House should agree upon a measure, if it were possible, and when that measure came to the Senate, the Senate would give it consideration. I took the position also that, in view of the attitude of many Members of the Senate, any reorganization bill should not provide for more than one of the subjects contained in the last bill, so that the Senate would have the right to vote for or against any one provision. I discussed the matter with members of the House Reorganization Committee, and an agreement was reached that that policy would be followed.

The House committee reported the bill which is now pending before the Senate. It follows in great measure the form of the reorganization provisions of the last bill, with one very important exception. The bill passed by the Senate at the last session provided that whenever a plan of reorganization was submitted to the Congress it should become effective at the expiration of 60 days, unless the Congress should within that time by joint resolution express its disapproval Members of the Senate, and of the House also, believed that unwise, and with great force argued that the requirement for the passage of a joint resolution to disapprove a reorganization plan, meant that the adoption of a joint resolution must receive the approval of the Executive, and that for all practical purposes it meant that the plan of organization would become effective unless the Congress by a two-thirds vote should disapprove it. Under this bill an effort has been made to meet the views of Members of the Senate and House who believe that a majority of the Senate and House should have power to disapprove a plan of reorganization. At the last session of the Congress that proposal was urged. An amendment was proposed by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Johnson], and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Brown]. I was opposed to it. I believed in the provisions of the bill then pending.

The argument was then made that if a provision were placed in the bill that a plan of reorganization should take effect at a certain time, it would not be very effective to provide for disapproval even by a concurrent resolution unless at the same time some safeguard were provided against a filibuster which would prevent action upon the resolution of disapproval. That question was argued at some length at that time. The President pro tempore expressed his view that such a rule could be adopted and should be adopted.

To meet that view, the House has provided in part II of the bill a rule which, in the opinion of the parliamentarian of the Senate and the Parliamentarian of the House, assures to any Member of the Senate or House who disapproves of an order of reorganization an opportunity to secure a vote upon a resolution of disapproval. I think that point is the only controversial feature of the bill now pending. Let me explain briefly what it is.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. The Senator will recall that last year, in a colloquy between the Senator from South Carolina and the Senator from Oregon, I was advocating what was known as the Wheeler amendment, requiring affirmative action by the Congress. Will the Senator discuss the proposal of last year, the Wheeler amendment, as well as the Byrd bill, so as to cover the whole subject matter?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes.

The Wheeler amendment provided that whenever any order of reorganization was submitted to the Congress, it should not become effective unless the Congress should affirmatively approve it. The Wheeler amendment required affirmative action.

In the Byrd bill there is a provision similar to the Wheeler amendment.

As I say, the provision of the pending bill is similar to the amendment which was offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Johnson]. and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Brown]. I prefer first to continue my statement as to exactly what this provision does, and then I shall discuss the other matter.

Under the bill, if an order of reorganization—the House calls it a "plan" of reorganization—is submitted to the House and Senate, any Senator or Representative who is opposed to the plan may introduce a concurrent resolution disapproving the plan. That resolution is referred to a committee. If the committee does not report the resolution within 10 days, under the rule it is in order for any Member of the Senate to move that the committee be discharged from further consideration of the plan of reorganization. In order to prevent a filibuster on the part of those who favor reorganization, it is further provided that if a Member of the Senate who is opposed to the plan of reorganization shall rise and move to discharge the committee it shall not be in order to offer an amendment so as to defeat the object of the rule by debating amendments. This provision assures to those who are opposed to any plan of reorganization an opportunity to have a resolution of disapproval adopted by a majority vote of the two Houses.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. Suppose, under the plan suggested, the House of Representatives should vote against the reorganization plan, and the Senate should vote in favor of the plan.

Then the plan would become law, would it not?

Mr. BYRNES. It would. If the House of Representatives should vote a resolution of disapproval of the plan, that resolution would come to the Senate. Even without its going to the Senate, any Member of the Senate could move to discharge the committee, and offer a resolution disapproving the order of reorganization.

Mr. GEORGE and Mr. BONE addressed the Chair.

Mr. BYRNES. If the Senators will wait until I have finished my reply to the Senator from Montana, I shall be glad to yield.

If the Senate refuses to vote for the disapproval, then the plan of reorganization is not disapproved by the Congress. It is disapproved only by one House of the Congress, and the Congress does not speak its disapproval. That is a correct statement of the situation.

I now yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President. I should like to ask the Senator a question for information. Is the plan of reorganization amendable in either House, or must it be taken as a whole or rejected as a whole?

Mr. BYRNES. I intended later to call attention to the House provision. The House bill provides for a resolution of disapproval, stating in substance that the Congress does not favor the reorganization plan. It further provides, however, that the rule as to the limitation of debate applies only when the resolution is worded in this specific language:

When that resolution is introduced, all the provisions as to prevention of a filibuster and the limitation upon debate apply.

However, there was no effort to limit either the Senate or the House to specific words of disapproval. The Senate, if it chose, could pass a resolution in other language; but if it did, the limitation on debate would not apply.

Mr. GEORGE. Then the Senator's interpretation is that the plan of reorganization is not amendable?

Mr. BYRNES. It is not amendable.

Mr. GEORGE. Or, if amendable, then none of the rules with respect to filibusters or cutting off debate will apply? Mr. BYRNES. That is correct.

Mr. President, there is a reason for that provision. The reason prompting those who have given consideration to the matter is that when a resolution is submitted, if a Senator believes that a particular bureau should not be merged with another, he may vote against the whole measure.

After giving to the President the power, as the agent of the Congress, to make recommendations as to the executive departments over which he presides, Congress could, if the plan were open to amendment, provide for an entirely different plan. There would be no way of securing the cooperation which Senators last year argued should prevail between the Executive and the Congress in any reorganization.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. BYRNES. The Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] has asked me to yield to him.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I gather from the answer of the Senator from South Carolina that if one House of the Congress approves the plan it becomes law, and has all the force and effect of law. I should like to ask the Senator if this proposal, so far as he knows, is the only departure from the traditional parliamentary procedure, which requires the assent of both Houses of Congress before any principle becomes embalmed in law. This is the first time I have ever heard of a bill becoming law without the assent of both Houses of Congress. I am wondering if this is the first departure.

Mr. BYRNES. I shall be glad to answer the Senator. Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I should like to answer the question of the Senator from Washington. Is the Senator's question along the same line?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. It is along the same line. Mr. BYRNES. Then I shall answer the two questions together.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Under the provisions of this bill if neither House acts the plan becomes effective?

Mr. BYRNES. That is correct; if neither House acts, the plan becomes effective in 60 days.

Mr. President, there is much misunderstanding about the history of this particular procedure.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I do not wish to interrupt the Senator from South Carolina but, following my other question, it seems very clear to me that whatever may be written in the law, when a plan for reorganization is submitted to this body, it becomes a matter for the Chair, for the Vice President or whoever may be in the chair, in the first instance, to determine whether it is amendable and in the second instance, it lies with the Senate, through the medium of an appeal from the decision of the Chair. So it does not make any difference what is put in the measure.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, may we have better order in the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon makes the point that there is disorder. The point of order is sustained. Senators will kindly refrain from conversation.

Mr. GEORGE. The question I wish to present to the Senator is this: In the first instance, I asked whether a plan for reorganization was amendable? The Senator from South Carolina said it was. He is probably correct, so far as the text of the pending measure is concerned. Now, I submit the broader question that, irrespective of what is provided in the pending bill, when a plan of reorganization is presented to this body it is a question for this body to determine whether it is amendable, and, in the first instance, the Chair decides that question, and in the second instance, the majority of the Senate decides it. It does not matter how we may argue about it. There will be offers to amend any plan of reorganization, and the Senate may do as it pleases upon that question. It may even do as it pleases in the face of this proposed reorganization act. So if there is an amendment offered to a reorganization plan, none of the restrictions and none of the efforts made to expedite the hearings and to prevent or cut off debate can possibly apply.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, the Senator states that they cannot apply. That is a matter that is somewhat debatable. The fact is that the provisions of this bill recognize the power of the Senate and House to make their own rules. The bill contains a statement to that effect, to show that it is recognized, and provides that, in the exercise of the rule making the power of the Senate and the House of Representatives, respectively, the rules provided by the bill shall be considered a part of the rules of each House, respectively, but applicable only with respect to the procedure to be followed in each House in the case of resolutions as defined in section 22, and such rules shall supersede other rules only to the extent that they are inconsistent therewith.

The thought in the mind of the committee was that if the Congress of the United States, the House of Representatives and the Senate, enacted the provision I have read, it would be the rule of procedure until the Senate and the House in the exercise of their rule-making power changed it. We recognize that the Senate at any time can change its rules.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President-

Mr. BYRNES. I wish to say to the Senator from Montana that I have yet to answer a question asked by the Senator from Washington [Mr. Bone], and I think I should get back to that.

Mr. WHEELER. I should like to ask the Senator a question on the point just mentioned.

Mr. BYRNES. I am carrying one question in my mind, and I do not want to have pending "an amendment to an amendment to an amendment."

The position of the Senator from Georgia may be correct, but I do not agree with him on it. I think that until the Senate shall by a rule change it, the procedure prescribed if enacted into law, would be the rule of the Senate and of the House. At any time the Senate wants to act it could change it.

I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that this provision is made as a protection to those who would oppose a reorganization plan, because the provision is that it will become effective in 60 days unless a resolution of disapproval shall be adopted. Otherwise members of the House or Senate might say if a resolution of that character should be introduced, that those who were in favor of reorganization would filibuster; and it was to gratify their desire to have an opportunity to vote, to assure them of that right, that the effort has been made, after consultation with the parliamentarians of the House and Senate, to guarantee it to them beyond any question. I do not assert my knowledge of the rules as against theirs.

Now to answer the Senator from Washington, who asked me a question.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator I was simply asking for information; I do not want to enter into any controversy; but, so far as I am concerned, I have not the slightest doubt on earth that the Senate is a sovereign body when it comes to ordering its own procedure within its body, and it may violate even good faith if it wants to do so.

Mr. BYRNES. There is no question about that. The present presiding officer of this body [Mr. PITTMAN in the chair] argued last year—and, I must say, argued very forcefully—along the line of the provision contained in this bill. Because this body is sovereign, insofar as its rule-making power is concerned, if this body says that hereafter the rule shall be this, that will prevail until this body changes that rule. That was the argument presented by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] substantially. He could present it more ably and more clearly than I could attempt to do.

Mr. GEORGE. I have no question about that; but if the Senate is a sovereign body it may change the rule at any time.

Mr. BYRNES. I prefaced my statement by saying that at any time, even the day after the passage of this bill, if the Senate in its wisdom saw fit to do so, it could take such action. I said further that in recognition of that fact, in order that there might be no thought in the mind of any man that this bill was asserting that such action could not be taken, this language was put into the bill:

With full recognition of the constitutional right of either House to change such rules (so far as relating to the procedure in such House) at any time, in the same manner and to the same extent as in the case of any other rule of such House.

We wanted no misunderstanding about that.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, if the Senator will go back and read the arguments made with reference to my amendment when the reorganization bill was under consideration at the last session he will find that one of the arguments he made against the amendment which I offered was that the Senate, of course, might change its rule that it was not binding; and I said at that time, while the Senate undoubtedly could change its mind and could change its rule, that it would be morally bound to abide by the rule it had adopted.

Mr. BYRNES. And the Senator agrees to this now?

Mr. WHEELER. I agree that the Senate can change its

Mr. BYRNES. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. WHEELER. But the Senator took the position in arguing against my amendment a year ago that it did not amount to anything because of the fact that the Senate could change its rules.

Mr. BYRNES. I not only so argued, but I argued in favor of the reorganization of the General Accounting Office, and I believe in it today. That, however, is another question. I argued in favor of the reorganization of the civil service, and I presented arguments on several other provisions of the bill which was then pending. I have long since found, however, that there are 95 other Members of this body who have opinions of their own. When they do not agree with me, I know they are wrong, but sometimes there is a majority of Members of the Senate who hold such a view, and whenever they do, I yield to their good judgment. I find sometimes that even when the Senate passes a bill, as it did the reorganization bill, and it goes to the other House, that House has a different opinion; and, when the House acts and says it will have none of those features, in an effort to meet the views of the Members of that body, I agree with them. Now that I agree with the Senator from Montana, I hope that he will congratulate me upon my agreement and not criticize my agreement with him.

Mr. WHEELER. I am not criticizing the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. BYRNES. It is hard to agree with the Senator from Montana because he will not "stay put" all the time.

Mr. WHEELER. I am "staying put," but the trouble is— Mr. BYRNES. I am not "staying put"; I am trying to agree with the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WHEELER. I congratulate the Senator from South Carolina for agreeing with me, but I wanted to make it plain that he argued quite to the contrary with reference to my amendment when it was before the Senate last year.

Mr. BYRNES. I certainly did as to that.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, now that the Senator from Montana and the Senator from South Carolina have agreed, I should like to ask just what is it that they have agreed upon? [Laughter.]

Mr. BYRNES. I am afraid that I could not go back over that.

Mr. BORAH. It must be agreed, I presume, that the Congress of the United States can change anything in this bill any time that it chooses to do so.

Mr. BYRNES. The question, I will say to the Senator from Idaho, if he was not following it, referred to the right of the Senate to change a rule at any time that it desired to do so.

Mr. BORAH. And it can change any part of a bill or law at any time.

Mr. BYRNES. The Congress can enact any law it pleases at any time.

Mr. BORAH. Certainly.

Mr. BYRNES. The Senator from Washington [Mr. Bone] asked me a question about 20 minutes ago that I desire to answer. He wanted to know if this was the first time it had been sought to make a law by means of a concurrent resolution or other act less than a law. I wish to call the attention of the Senate to this, because there is much misunderstanding about it.

This is not the first time—and that is what the Senator from Washington asked—this is not the first time that it has been proposed, and not only proposed, but it is not the first time that Congress has absolutely given to the Executive the power to transfer bureaus or employees or functions the executive departments of the Government. That has been done for years. The Senator asked if I would tell him when, and I am glad to do so.

Even so late as 1930 we established the Veterans' Administration; and what did the Congress provide?

Congress provided:

Under the direction of the President, the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs shall have the power, by order or regulation, to consolidate, eliminate, or redistribute the functions of the bureaus, agencies, offices, or activities in the Veterans' Administration and to create new ones therein, and, by rules and regulations not inconsistent with law, shall fix the functions thereof and the duties and powers of their respective executive heads.

Not the President, but the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs may transfer and consolidate the functions of the bureaus, agencies, offices, or activities in the Veterans' Administration, and may eliminate functions.

Under the act passed in 1903 creating the Department of Commerce and Labor the President was authorized to—Transfer at any time-

Not within 2 years-the whole or any part of any office, bureau, division, or other branch of the public service engaged in statistical or scientific

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President— Mr. BYRNES. Will the Senator from North Carolina pardon me for one minute? Then I will yield to him, but I do want to finish this matter.

From where may the President transfer these agencies?

From the Department of State, the Department of the Treasury, the Department of War, the Department of Justice, the Post Office Department, the Department of the Navy, or the Department of the Interior, to the Department of Commerce and Labor; and in every such case the duties and authority performed by and conferred by law upon such office * * * shall be thereby transferred with such office * * *. And all power and authority conferred * * * shall immediately * * * be fully conferred upon * * the Department of Commerce and Labor.

Under that act, thereafter-even several years thereafter-President Coolidge exercised the power vested in him by the act. He transferred the Patent Office from the Interior Department and transferred the Bureau of Mines from the Interior Department and put them in the Commerce Department. Under that law, which is today in effect—was any standard prescribed? None at all. Was any order to be sent to Congress? Members of Congress would never know about any transfer unless they read about it in the newspapers. The act was passed in 1903, but as late as the administration of President Coolidge he exercised the power conferred by it. He made transfers, and there never was a question about his action. Congress has done this sort of thing time and again.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, did the Senator say that what he just read is the law today?

Mr. BYRNES. It is the law today. It is the law now so far as I can find. If the Senator has investigated and can show me its repeal, I should like to know it.

Mr. WHEELER. No; I have not.

Mr. BYRNES. I believed it was the law, and yesterday I asked the legislative counsel to check up on my statement, because I wanted to be sure that it is today the law; and I am informed that it is.

Mr. WHEELER. Does that law give the President power to abolish the functions of an office?

Mr. BYRNES. No.

Mr. WHEELER. It gives him power to transfer.

Mr. BYRNES. I read clearly that under it he could transfer. I read first the right of the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs—not the President, but the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs-to eliminate functions. That is the word—"eliminate."

Here is another one:

March 3, 1917. That was in a Democratic administration:

The Bureau of Efficiency shall investigate duplication of service in the various executive departments and establishments of the Government, including bureaus and divisions, and make a report to the President thereon, and the President is hereby authorized, after such reports shall have been made to him, whenever he finds such duplications to exist—

To do what?_

to abolish the same.

The act creating the Bureau of Efficiency was repealed, and is not in effect today.

Then we have today the law as to the Coast Guard. That is one reason why it is in this bill. The law today is that the President at any time may transfer the Coast Guard to the Navy. The language is:

The Coast Guard * * * shall operate as a part of the Navy, subject to the orders of the Secretary of the Navy, in time of war, or when the President shall so direct.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, does not the Senator distinguish between transfer from one department to another an abolishment of functions of government?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes; I have just said there is no question about that. I was giving the Senator an instance of each one-one in the Commerce Department, to transfer; and one in the Veterans' Administration, to abolish.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I am answering the Senator from Washington [Mr. Bone]. I will come back to the matter of

I have endeavored to be as reasonable as possible in the discussion of this matter. It has been a hobby of mine. For the 25 years I have been in public life I have been interested in the question of reorganization. I have known what has happened in that time. In other days it never was a partisan question. Theodore Roosevelt had a commission established to study it, and the commission reported to Congress, and Congress did nothing. Following him, President Taft appointed a commission, and they presented a very splendid report during the Taft administration. The Congress gave to him power to consolidate ports of entry and to abolish ports of entry-not only to consolidate them, but to abolish them—to reduce the salary of any man in the service, to make ports into subports, or to abolish

It was my first term in the House and I remember what occurred, because I had a port in my district at the time, I began to hear from the order. The order had provided that instead of having a collector of the port drawing a salary of about $5,000 when only $500 was collected at the port, and insteading of having an office in the customhouse, and a large number of clerks, the office was just abolished and made a part of another office, and money was saved thereby.

But when I heard from the people of the town in which the port was located, what they said about President Taft was not good to print, nor was it good to read; and I concluded that the world was coming to an end, that the community was gone, and I joined in the ranks of opponents of the order.

President Taft had to use the East Room, the biggest room in the White House, to receive the Representatives and Senators who went to attend the meeting to protest. I was one of them. I was there protesting. He had reduced the salaries so that instead of an expense of about $10,000 at one port it was about $600, and at the other one it was about $600 as against $5,000. I attended the meeting and protested in behalf of my district, and every other Representative wherever there was a port protested. The President was very gracious and very kind, but the Congress had given him the power to make and enforce the order without sending the matter back to Congress, and President Taft put through his order. He did not change it and the money was saved; but had it come to Congress it would not have had a chance on earth. I would have been, I know, right along with the majority. The number of Representatives and Senators who were at the White House protesting against the order would have guaranteed its defeat.

Following President Taft, President Wilson was given no further authority of the kind, except as included in his war powers. President Harding had a joint committee. The Senator from Mississippi served on it. The former Senator from New York, Mr. Wadsworth, was on it. They spent about a year on a joint committee. They made recommendations to the Congress. What happened to the recommendations is just what happened to every other recommendation about reorganization: nothing was done.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——
Mr. BYRNES. I will yield to the Senator in just a minute. I was interested to see, when the bill passed the House last week, that among the members of the minority who voted for its passage was the former Senator from New York, Mr. WADSWORTH; and I could well understand in his case, as in the case of Representative Mapes, of Michigan, who had served on a reorganization committee, and knew how impossible it was ever to get the Congress to do anything about reorganizing, that they were not going to join the majority of the Republican Members of the House and vote against

Of the eight Republicans who favored the bill, two of them had devoted a good deal of thought and time in their lives to the study of this subject.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President-

Mr. BYRNES. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina. Mr. BAILEY. I take it that the Senator told us the story of his experience in the administration of the great President Taft by way of showing that he had not profited by that painful experience.

Mr. BYRNES. I would not have the Senator get that impression. I stated to him that the result of the order was that it saved money; and whenever I saw the people from those communities thereafter I told them that so far as I was concerned, after hearing the President state his reasons, I was satisfied that he was right, and it was a splendid reorganization of the Customs Service. Anybody who looked at it afterward knew it was right; but it could not have been done by Congress, any more than Congress could have abolished the comptrollers at the ports dealt with in the recent appropriation bill. Senators will recall that a provision went through the Senate this week restoring the comptrollers at about half a dozen ports. We can single shoot them now and then; but if we ever put six in one bill, and try to abolish six at one time, we cannot do it.

Mr. BAILEY. So I understand now that the Senator from South Carolina was converted by the President at that time and has remained converted ever since.

Mr. BYRNES. It was a matter of community pride.

Mr. BAILEY. However, that was not my purpose in rising.

I want to get back to this subject:

Quite clearly, the pending legislation proposes a very novel and extremely complicated parliamentary procedure for special purposes. I find some difficulty in understanding it. I wish to ask a question about it.

In the first instance, I understand that in subsection (b), on page 10, all the rights of either House are reserved, notwithstanding the rules proposed to be enacted. Is that correct?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes.

Mr. BAILEY. Then would not the argument which the Senator made last year against the Wheeler amendmentthat it was a futile and worthless amendment, on the ground that the Senate could change it at will, or disregard itapply with equal force to this novel procedure? We can change that at will; and if the Senator was right last year respecting the Wheeler amendment, then this procedure is equally worthless. Is not that true?

Mr. BYRNES. The Senator evidently was not in the Chamber when this matter was being discussed. The Senator from Montana and I have discussed that.

Mr. BAILEY. I was present and heard the discussion.

Mr. BYRNES. I have already made the statement. Mr. BAILEY. That is what I heard from the discussion; the Senator agreed that he opposed the Wheeler amend-

Mr. BYRNES. On that ground? Certainly not.

Mr. BAILEY. I thought the Senator from Montana asked the Senator from South Carolina that. But I will leave that. That was my impression.

Mr. BYRNES. It was merely a misunderstanding.

Mr. BAILEY. I believe I will call a witness. If the Senator from Montana will remind us of the question he

Mr. BYRNES. If the Senator asks a question, I will answer him. There was a misunderstanding. If the Senator asks me whether that was the reason for my opposition to the Wheeler amendment, I say "no."

Mr. BAILEY. That was not it. The very point is, did not the Senator argue that? I ask the Senator, did he not, just a year ago, argue that the Wheeler amendment would be worthless on the ground that the Senate would disregard it?

Mr. BYRNES. No, Mr. President. The answer is "no." The Senator having asked the question, I shall surely tell him. Mr. WHEELER. I think that if the Senator will read the RECORD he will find-

Mr. BYRNES. No. Neither the Senator from Montana nor the Senator from North Carolina can take the floor from me. That cannot be done now. A little later I shall be glad to yield. The Senator from South Carolina opposed the Wheeler amendment, as he would oppose it today, for the reason that the Wheeler amendment provided for nothing but a message on the part of the President to the Congress; that the Wheeler amendment sought to impose a restriction upon a power which the President now has: that the President today can send a message to the Congress recommending a reorganization of anything, even of independent agencies of the Government, and the Congress cannot restrict his constitutional right to do that and say, "You can send a message along certain restricted lines," set forth in a bill.

As soon as it is provided that there must be a joint resolution or a bill passing both Houses and approved by the President, we speak of legislation, and legislation could be enacted, regardless of whether the President ever sent a message to the Congress. That was my objection to the Wheeler amendment.

In the discussion of the Wheeler amendment, the question arose also as to whether or not a filibuster could be conducted and prevent a vote, and I took the position on that question which I have stated to the Senator from Montana and to the Senator from North Carolina. That was not my objection to the Wheeler amendment, nothing about the rule, because there were two separate proposals, and I know that the Senator from Montana and the Senator from North Carolina recall that. All that I am stating to the Senator from North Carolina is a result of the way in which he phrased his question. My objection to the Wheeler amendment was based upon the amendment, regardless of the rule, but I did hold the position as to the rule which the Senator from North Carolina has stated.

Mr. BAILEY. Now, if I may ask the Senator to yield the floor to me a moment for a remark and a question-

Mr. BYRNES. I yield for a question.

Mr. BAILEY. I fully recognize that neither the Senator from Montana nor myself, nor any other power that I know of, could possibly take the floor from the distinguished Senator from South Carolina; and that was very far from my purpose. I got the floor by his permission and by his courtesy. Now I wish to ask him another question.

Did not the Senator from Montana this morning ask the Senator from South Carolina whether it was not a fact that last year, when the reorganization bill was before us, the Senator from South Carolina argued against the Wheeler amendment then pending, on the ground that the Senate could set it aside at any time, and whether the Senator from South Carolina did not answer in the affirmative? It was my impression that he did.

Mr. BYRNES. I have said so, Mr. President, said so to the Senator from Montana, and just got through saying so again to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. BAILEY. That the Senator from South Carolina did argue it?

Mr. BYRNES. That I did argue it.
Mr. BAILEY. Very well. Would not that argument apply with equal force to this novel, and, I fear, rather complicated. procedure?

Mr. BYRNES. There is no doubt that the Senate can change its rule at any time. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. BAILEY. So I take it that what is proposed here is something in the nature of a "gentlemen's agreement."

Mr. BYRNES. No; it is a rule until the Senate shall change the rule; but the Senate has a constitutional right to change its rule at any time.

Mr. BAILEY. Any Senator would have a right to make a motion to the contrary, or to proceed?

Mr. BYRNES. Oh, yes; but it is necessary to have a majority in order to change a rule.

Mr. BAILEY. That is true; once we get to it, we have to submit to a majority; but we always do. The Senate acts either by unanimous consent or a majority or two-thirds. In this instance it would be a majority.

Mr. BYRNES. Yes.

Mr. BAILEY. Moving away from that, I come to subsection (b) on page 11, which reads "such motion may be made only by a person favoring the resolution." The words "the resolution" refer back to the resolution either to discharge the committee from further consideration or to discharge the committee from further consideration of any other resolution. Is that correct?

Mr. BYRNES. It refers to the resolution. Mr. BAILEY. Either of two resolutions, "such motion may be made only by a person favoring the resolution." There are two resolutions mentioned in section 24, subsection (a), and which one is meant by the use of the singular in subsection (b), "the resolution"?

Mr. BYRNES. I must say that I do not get the exact point. The language of section 24 (a) is:

If the committee to which has been referred a resolution with respect to a reorganization plan-

A resolution of disapproval-has not reported it before the expiration of 10 calendar days after its introduction (or, in the case of a resolution received from the other House, 10 calendar days after its receipt), it shall then (but not before) be in order to move either to discharge the committee from further consideration of such resolution, or to discharge the committee from further consideration of any other resolution with respect to such reorganization plan which has been referred to the committee.

(b) Such motion may be made only by a person favoring the

Mr. BAILEY. Is that the resolution referred to in the second line of subdivision (a) of section 24, the resolution with respect to the reorganization plan?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes.

Mr. GLASS. It is to either one of them.

Mr. BYRNES. To the resolution with respect to which the motion is made.

Mr. BAILEY. Let us see. Does it refer to a motion to discharge the committee from further consideration of such resolution? It says, "Such motion may be made only by a person favoring the resolution."

Mr. BYRNES. Yes.

Mr. BAILEY. That is, the resolution to approve it, or to disapprove it?

Mr. BYRNES. The resolution to disapprove.

Mr. BAILEY. A resolution to disapprove the plan?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes; because that is the resolution pro-

Mr. BAILEY. The motion there would be confined to a resolution of one opposing the plan. That would cut off

Mr. BYRNES. Yes. I will say to the Senator from North Carolina that when it comes to the rules I do not profess to be an expert, but, so far as it was possible for the experts of the Senate and the House, they endeavored to provide a plan whereby the opponents of a reorganization plan would have the right to force a vote upon a resolution of disapproval. I think it refers very clearly to that, but if the Senator has any idea that it should be made clearer-

Mr. BAILEY. I was trying to get it clear, because the word "resolution" was confused with the word "motion." I am trying to see my way through the matter.

We would be limited to 2 hours' debate.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, before the Senator leaves that subject, I should like to ask the Senator from South Carolina a question. If I understand it correctly, when the resolution referred to comes in, a motion may be made to discharge the committee, and the only person who can make such a motion is one who is against the resolution?

Mr. BYRNES. No; by a person favoring the resolution.

Mr. WHEELER. It can be made by any Senator?

Mr. BYRNES. Any Senator favoring the resolution of disapproval.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I am accepting the interpretation, but I do not think the language supports that interpretation. Section 23 speaks generally of a resolution with respect to a reorganization plan, and speaks further of all resolutions with respect to that. Then we come down to a definition, to a resolution with respect to a reorganization plan; but the Senator from South Carolina, who is responsible for the bill, says that that has in contemplation solely a resolution adverse to the plan.

Mr. BYRNES. Yes; because it is not necessary to approve. Mr. BAILEY. There could not be a resolution amending

Mr. BYRNES. If the resolution is in substance disapproving it, it is a resolution of disapproval.

Mr. BAILEY. I would feel a little better if it said "a resolution of disapproval."

Mr. BYRNES. Yes.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator would not object to that, I am sure.

Mr. BYRNES. To what?

Mr. BAILEY. Instead of saying "a resolution with respect to a reorganization plan" say "a resolution disapproving a reorganization plan."

Mr. BYRNES. I shall be glad to consider that suggestion. That is the purpose of it.

Mr. BAILEY. That would make it specific.
Mr. BYRNES. There would be no sense in anyone in favor of it offering a resolution.

Mr. BAILEY. That may be true, but we do a great many things here to which there is no sense, and I should like to provide against that.

Mr. BYRNES. That is pretty hard to guard against.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, if a resolution had been approved by the other House, any action here would be perfectly futile, I take it, under the present set-up of the bill.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will not the Senator speak louder? I am interested in his observation.

Mr. BONE. I really had no right to break into this discusion without asking consent of the Senator having the floor; but I want to get the matter clear in my own mind. If, before the Senate acted, the House had acted in the affirmative, and had by its deliberate action approved the plan, it would be futile to bring it up in the Senate, because we would be faced with an accomplished fact. That is my understanding of the mechanics of the proposed legislation, and I wonder if the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], or the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], agree with me?

Mr. BYRNES. The Senator asked, "If the House had acted?"

Mr. BONE. If the House had previously acted upon it, that would end the matter, would it not?

Mr. BAILEY. If the House had acted adversely it would be unnecesary to bring the matter over to the Senate. Mr. BONE. That would end it.

Mr. BAILEY. If there shall be failure in either House to pass the resolution, and a motion to discharge is made, a cloture on debate is provided for.

Mr. BYRNES. Two hours on the motion to discharge and 20 hours on the resolution itself.

Mr. BAILEY. Then we come to the resolution proper, and the bill limits the Senate to 20 hours' debate. It provides for cloture contrary to all the rules the Senate has heretofore had respecting the imposing of cloture. It is cloture by majority vote. I do not know that we ever did such a thing before. Is that not a great offense against the precedents of the Senate, I ask the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. BYRNES. Does the Senator mean as to time? Twenty hours are provided.

Mr. BAILEY. Whether it be 20 hours or 20 minutes, the principle would be the same.

Mr. BYRNES. I will say to the Senator that the only purpose of the Representative from North Carolina, Mr. WARREN, and the Representative from Missouri, Mr. Coch-RAN, in fixing the time of 10 hours in the bill in the House was to assure against a filibuster, as I said, against the opponents of the plan of reorganization, and when it reached my committee I determined that the time should be extended, and after discussing the subject with members of the committee we came to the conclusion that it should be 20 hours.

Mr. BAILEY. I would not like to say anything which would tend to call into question the action of the other House. But when argument is advanced that there is a possibility of filibuster, and that argument is made the basis for placing in the measure a provision whereby a majority of the Senate could impose a limitation of 20 hours on debate in the consideration of the resolution, and a limitation of 2 hours in discussing the motion to discharge, in doing that are we not on rather dangerous ground, I will ask the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. BYRNES. A measure which provides, as the bill under discussion does, that an order shall become effective within 60 days unless action is taken to prevent it, is different from other legislation. With respect to legislation of a general character, which has no date when it becomes effective, I can see the strength of the argument.

Whenever we enact legislation that becomes effective on a certain date, then the minority should have protection, assuming that they were opposed to any reorganization, which they can secure only by limitation. I submit to the Senator from North Carolina, in good faith, that I think that that is a difference. Where any bill becomes effective as of a date certain by its provisions, it is necessary to make provision to guard against a majority denying the minority a right to yote, or the minority preventing a vote.

Mr. BAILEY. I will say to the Senator, and then I will sit down, that the legislation would have to be incomparably more important than this to justify, in my mind, the imposition here by a majority vote of a system of procedure that establishes the utmost rigidity by way of cloture. Finally, here is your other question.

If the motion to discharge is agreed to, or disagreed to, such motion may not be renewed, nor may any other motion to discharge the committee be made with respect to any other resolution with respect to the same reorganization plan.

There is not only cloture as to the time of debate, but there is a cloture as to the ways and means and methods of procedure.

It strikes me that here on the threshold of this matter every one of us should consider, and I am sure the distinguished Senator from South Carolina will consider, with a view to being considerate of those of us who may be in opposition to the bill, whether under pressure of enthusiasm and earnestness he has committed himself, and has undertaken to commit the Senate to a system of cloture that would destroy this body, and I use the words with the utmost caution.

When this body ceases to have the utmost freedom of motion, of resolution, of discussion, and of debate, it has ceased to be a Senate, has become merely a legislative mill, under the control of any majority that may be in possession of it. And that is the destruction of the greatest and the last of the free parliamentary bodies on the face of the globe.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

the time?

Mr. WHITE. I wanted to ask about the control of this 20 hours of time.

Mr. BYRNES. The bill says it shall be equally divided.
Mr. WHITE. As the Senator knows from his experience in the other body, some Member would have control of 10 hours of time in favor of, and someone else would have control of 10 hours of time in opposition to the resolution, and that Member of the House would take the entire 10 hours, if he saw fit, or he would parcel it out to 10 Members to make speeches of 1 hour each, or to 20 Members to make speeches of a half hour each. When it comes to the Senate, who is to control the time on each side? Is it to be the Presiding Officer, and may a single Senator take the whole 10 hours, or what would be the provision with respect to the control of

Mr. BYRNES. The resolution provides for no detail of that kind, except that the time shall be equally divided between those in favor and those opposing the resolution. The Senator's interpretation would be as good as mine. I think that the Presiding Officer would divide the time equally, and it would be determined individually in this body as to who should speak. It is only by agreement that it is done on the other side of the Capitol.

Mr. WHITE. If the Presiding Officer assumed that obligation and recognized a particular Senator, he would have no way of controlling the length of time that Senator talked, so the entire 10 hours might be consumed by two Senators or three Senators to the exclusion of all others.

Mr. BYRNES. That is correct. The Presiding Officer might recognize the Senator from Maine.

Mr. WHITE. The Senator from Maine would not talk that long.
